Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know how many thousands of dollars of the money of this Government Mr. Densmore, the director of this Employment Service, wasted in an effort to get Mooney, a convicted felon, released from California law and justice? Does the gentleman know how much of this $272,000 that you propose to give him, more than the $1,543,400 he already has, that he may yet waste in trying to get Mooney released from California justice? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. GOOD. The amount is reduced now to such a low sum I do not believe he can waste very much, if anything. The amount before, as the gentleman can see, was estimated as $1,800,000—almost $2,000,000—and he will now only have available, with cash on hand, $347,000. I was only appealing to the good judgment of the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his point of order so that the department can exist until time is given to see whether we could get legislation, or, if not, the department be wound up in an orderly way.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to send him and his 513 payroll drawers down to Texas and up into Iowa in order to let them help harvest the wheat crop and the oat crop, and thereby do some real service for their country.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas, who said he would possibly favor legislation if brought in by a proper committee, that by granting the appropriation asked by the gentleman from Iowa this would be wound up and the committees of this House would have an opportunity to legislate.

Mr. BLANTON. We have plenty of time. When a committee wants to act it can act mighty quick.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to occupy the floor for just a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in view of the very great personal feeling that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has exhibited against those who are in charge of this bureau, I am very fearful that nothing I can say will induce him to withdraw his point of order. With his personal feeling and with the personal controversy which I have noticed in the newspapers has been going on between the gentleman from Texas and certain officials in the labor organizations, of course I have nothing to do, and I do not propose to say anything on that subject here. I had hoped that the gentleman would permit this appropriation to go through without making the point of order. So far as I am concerned, I am not altogether satisfied in my own mind that it is subject to a point of order. But I realize that after the very thorough discussion held at the last session of Congress and the decision which was rendered by my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who, I think we will all admit, is one of the very best parliamentarians in the House, the Chair is likely to follow the precedent set by him.

But I want to call this fact to the attention of the gentleman from Texas: He has just admitted upon the floor of this House that he would support legislation upon this subject because the President of the United States has requested and recommended it. Now, there is, as was stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], a bill pending before the proper legislative committee of this House seeking to enact legislation upon this subject. If that bill is reported, as in all probability it will be reported, very soon, the gentleman from Texas has indicated that he will give it his support.

Now, if we deny to this organization or this activity the amount of money recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, their organization will be dissipated and disbanded; they will have no organization in any of the States of this Union. The result will be that after the legislation is adopted it will be necessary, at great expense to the Government, to build up a new and complete organization.

Now, the gentleman from Texas has complained because an order went forth, as he says, to deprive certain constituents of his of positions after he had taken his position here upon the floor of the House with reference to this appropriation. I want to say to the gentleman that there were several offices in the State of Tennessee, from which I come, which were discontinued after the appropriation went out of the deficiency bill at the last session, for the simple reason that the director did not have the money with which to continue those offices; and I dare say that, in spite of the unjust personal attack which the gentleman from Texas made upon the director and his work, he was actuated in what was done in Texas only by the fact that he did not have money enough to continue those offices.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the State of Texas to-day can take care of every idle laborer in the United States and furnish labor in the wheat and oats fields of Texas.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then the gentleman's State is very fortunate, because it is not true with respect to many of the other States of the Union. I want to say to the gentleman that the need of service of this kind was considered so important in my State that, when Congress failed to make the appropriation last March necessary to carry on this work until July 1, the Legislature of the State of Tennessee appropriated $7,500 to supplement the fund in the State of Tennessee and enable this activity to continue in behalf of the honorably discharged soldiers who have been in France fighting the battles of our country and in the camps waiting to be sent over, and who are coming back here in need of the opportunity to obtain lucrative positions. [Applause.] The gentleman is denying to them the opportunity of knowing where to find lucrative positions by making a point of order on this appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know why his legislature did that? I will tell him. It did that for the same reason that my legislature met and demanded that we support the $10,000,000 appropriation—because Mr. Gompers asked them to do it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that we do not have legislatures of that kind in the State of Tennessee. The Legislature of the State of Tennessee is not controlled by the demands of any individual, whether it be Mr. Gompers or any other individual. They made the appropriation simply because in their judgment it was rendering an important service in the State of Tennessee, and they did not desire to see all the offices closed down and these discharged soldiers and sailors deprived of the opportunity of knowing where they can secure lucrative employment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe the gentleman is in error when he states that there is a surplus of labor in the country. I do not think that with a fine-toothed comb, if you will search the country over, you will find a man out of employment who wants employment. [Applause.] I know that I have appeals from all over the country stating that industries are running shorthanded because they can not find laborers; and that is not only so in one industry but it is in every industry in the land, especially among the farmers of this country.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that I have no personal knowledge, but every day or two we see statements in the newspapers that there are many men unemployed in certain sections of the country. Now, granting that what the gentleman says is correct, that there is not a surplus of labor, there is undoubtedly a surplus of labor in certain sections of this country, I dare say in many of the larger cities of this country or in certain particular portions of the country, and if that be true, then we ought to have some agency to distribute that labor where it is needed, so that the country can get the benefit of it.

Mr. FORDNEY. I can also show the gentleman clippings which I have from the State of Mississippi, which I visited just a few days ago, and statements were made there from the pulpit by the ministers, and those statements were influenced by the very men whom the gentleman from Texas speaks about, statements that there are men looking for employment; yet at the same time half the mills in that country are closed down or running short-handed because of the scarcity of labor. It is a propaganda paid for by the money exacted from the taxpayers of this country, preached from the pulpit, printed in the newspapers, and the newspapers paid to print it, by money taken from the taxpayers, unjustly spent, instigated by the very element that the gentleman from Texas is talking about. It is not true that there is a lack of employment. There is a scarcity of labor all over this country, and it can not be otherwise. More than a quarter of a million of our men have been killed or wounded. There has been no immigration to this country, there has been a great emigration from this country, in the past four years, there has been a greater demand for labor, there has been greater production in the country, and then gentlemen talk about a surplus of labor. It is folly; it is false; it is not true. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman that we are not now proceeding under the five-minute rule. The point of order has been made, and the Chair would like to have some information on the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. The point of order is pending, and I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. At the request of the gentleman from Alabama, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made, and the Chair is entitled to hear a discussion upon the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I should like to open that discussion with a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has spoken several times, and discussion on a point of order is within limitations to be fixed by the Chair. The Chair will endeavor to hold gentlemen discussing the point of order to the five-minute rule.

Mr. DYER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the committee, has in effect conceded the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa did state that, but then the point of order was reserved, and the whole question thrown open again for discussion. While the discussion was going on the gentleman from Texas was making up his mind, under the reservation of the point of order, whether he would make it or not. He has now made it, and the Chair is willing to hear him upon the point of order, and asks the gentleman to confine himself to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I take it the parliamentary status is as follows: The chairman of the committee, Mr. GOOD, who is recognized as a parliamentarian in this House, has conceded that the point of order is good.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas this question: Does the gentleman contend that there is no law for the insertion of this paragraph in the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. There is no law whatever, Mr. Chairman, authorizing this appropriation, and the chairman of the Appropriation Committee will not contend otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Iowa to speak upon that point. The Chair assumes that the gentleman from Iowa does not contend that the insertion of a provision in an appropriation bill, after the purposes of the bill have been effected, for the period of a year, gives authority for the insertion of a new paragraph in another appropriation bill?

Mr. GOOD. No; I do not. If the item carried in the bill was subject to a point of order and there was no authorization for it, the mere fact that it was carried for one year would not make it permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. Provision is made in the paragraph for the maintenance of the present organization under provisions made in the civil-service act approved July 1, 1918. What warrant of law is there for the establishment of that organization therein referred to?

Mr. GOOD. None at all, except in the appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no warrant of law for it?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think so. There are those, however, who contend that there is. Others contend that there is not. There is no authority in the law creating the Department of Labor, or in any amendment to that law, that creates this service or makes provision for carrying it on, except as a war measure in the appropriation bill out of an emergency fund.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that there is no law for the establishment of the organization provided for in the paragraph the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Will not the gentleman postpone that until after we complete the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I want to make it in connection with what has just been said.

Mr. GOOD. And the gentleman will limit his remarks to five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think five minutes will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to participate in the discussion of this appropriation bill. But I can not give my own consent, feeling as I do on the great and vital question of the real interests of labor and capital in the United States of America, to allow to go absolutely unchallenged what I regard as a very passionate and unjustified attack by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] on organized labor in this country in his speech a few minutes ago.

The President of the United States, in his address delivered to Congress by a written message a few days ago, emphasized as the matter of paramount importance for the consideration of the Congress, in this reconstruction Congress, as it has been called, this very problem, and uses this language:

> The question which stands at the front of all others in every country amidst the present great awakening is the question of labor; and perhaps I can speak of it with as great advantage while engrossed in the consideration of interests which affect all countries alike as I could at home and amidst the interests which naturally most affect my thought, because they are the interests of our own people.
> By the question of labor I do not mean the question of efficient industrial production, the question of how labor is to be obtained and made effective in the great process of sustaining populations and winning success amidst commercial and industrial rivalries. I mean that much greater and more vital question, how are the men and women who do the daily labor of the world to obtain progressive improvement in the conditions of their labor, to be made happier, and to be served better by the communities and the industries which their labor sustains and advances?

I will not attempt to elaborate that suggestion. The President goes on and says:

> We must see to it that our returning soldiers are assisted in every practicable way to find the places for which they are fitted in the daily work of the country. This can be done by developing and maintaining upon an adequate scale the admirable organization created by the Department of Labor for placing men seeking work; and it can also be done, in at least one very great field, by creating new opportunities for individual enterprise.

The gentlemen from Texas professes to be a friend and admirer of the President of the United States, but here the President in his appeal to the Congress of the United States places this question of labor and the interests of organized labor as paramount for the consideration of Congress and suggests that instead of enlarging and increasing the antagonism between capital and labor that we use of our talents here to harmonize these interests into a status of partnership and cooperation. The President urges the retention of the Employment Bureau as one of the great means to accomplish that end, and yet the gentleman from Texas seeks to destroy it by making captious and technical points of order against the appropriation.

If the gentleman feels as he professes himself toward the President of the United States, I appeal to him even at this late moment to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I have only five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the words of the gentleman be taken down, when he says that I was captious. I made the point of order in absolutely good faith, and I ask that his words be taken down when he says that I made it captiously and without reason.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon that point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I have no chance to answer that, and if the gentleman proceeds in abuse, I do ask it. If he will leave the abuse out of his speech and confine himself to good argument, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Chair that I was proceeding in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply restates the proposition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, further, that I am unwilling to let go unchallenged the statements made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] when he stated that "anarchy prevails in and dominates the labor organizations of this country." I challenge and repudiate that accusation as wholly without foundation and as a cruel injustice to the hundreds of thousands of laboring men in this country who are affiliated with organized labor. Their loyalty and patriotism needs no defense at my hands. They proved it in the trying days of our late national peril. Organized labor does not stand for anarchy; on the contrary, it is the deadly enemy of the I. W. W. and Bolshevism, and intends to assert its just rights within the law and under the law. Every sensible man, every thoughtful man in this House, every man who is anxious about the future in this country from an industrial and social standpoint, must recognize the truth and wisdom of the remarks of the President of the United States, that this is one of the real, paramount, and vital questions for the Congress of the United States in its deliberations.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refund of head tax paid on account of 81 aliens in transit through the United States, whose departure therefrom after the period prescribed by the immigration regulations was caused by interrupted passenger sailings to Europe incident to war conditions, $648.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want my distinguished friend from Alabama——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask that the gentleman confine his remarks to the item under consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. To the argument here?

Mr. GOOD. To the item under discussion.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the chairman expect me to sit here idly by and let my good friend from Alabama put things in the RECORD without any reply whatever?

Mr. GOOD. I must insist that the gentleman confine himself to the paragraph under discussion.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman will save time to let me speak for five minutes—not to hold me to the usual rule.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred members present, a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question of tellers upon the announcement of the Chair that a quorum is present. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of Labor is authorized to make settlement for $11.85 from the appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration for the fiscal year 1919, in payment for advertising erroneously ordered without previous compliance with the terms of section 3828 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When my distinguished friend from Alabama——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to have a quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that that point is dilatory.

Mr. BLANTON. Other business has transpired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $40,000,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee as to the unexpended balance of this Housing Bureau appropriation. You are converting back, I see, $40,000,000. Does the gentleman know whether the Housing Bureau has ceased to function?

Mr. GOOD. No; it has not ceased to function. It has about $60,000,000 worth of property, including $11,000,000 of cash on hand, and after this item was put into the bill at $40,000,000, they claimed they were making some additional loans to street railway companies that had extended their lines to the houses, and that the statement they put in the record, which will be found on page 376 of the hearings, is not a recent statement.

It is barely possible we may have taken back a little too much, but we thought we would leave it just as it was, because it was based on the financial statement they made which showed they only had $60,000,000 of property, including $11,000,000 of cash, and that the $40,000,000 had not been touched, and that would be covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. ALMON. Would the gentleman kindly explain briefly the nature and the character of the Housing Bureau's activities at this time?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, the Housing Bureau has a great many activities aside from the dormitories that it is conducting here in Washington. They are conducting restaurants, rooming houses and everything of that kind.

Mr. ALMON. I mean in the way of house construction. Has it ceased to function in the way of the construction of houses?

Mr. GOOD. Houses under construction have been completed to the extent of 98 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Charles A. Sulzer, $2,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 11, after the sum "$2,000," insert "which sum shall be paid to his estate."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASON. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question in reference to line 3.

Mr. GOOD. To pay to the widow of Charles August Sulzer?

Mr. WASON. Yes; I understand there was a contest and Mr. Sulzer died before the certificate of election was issued to him. I do not object to the payment at the proper time, if Mr. Sulzer would have been entitled to a seat. It seems to me at this time that we ought to wait and ascertain what the fact is. I am informed by the Clerk that there is a notice of a contest in his office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New Hampshire the amendment has been agreed to and unless——

Mr. WASON. I am not referring to that; that relates to a contest in the last session.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. WASON. I am merely making an inquiry of the chairman with regard to line 3.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman from New Hampshire that had Mr. Sulzer lived until this time he would have been entitled to a seat in this House with all the privileges which a Delegate has in the House, and if he had died then he would have died while a Delegate in the House. He died as a Delegate-elect to the House, and until that contest had been decided he would have been a Delegate in the House, and in case of his death his widow would have been entitled, under the broad spirit which has always prevailed in this House, to this appropriation. It is a mere gratuity, and the committee thought that we would not consider that condition.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I have been informed that the certificate of election was really issued prior to Mr. Sulzer's death, but it was probably on account of Mr. Sulzer's absence and sickness that he had not heard of the issuance of the certificate.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

For payment of the judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in an Indian depredation case, certified to the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, in Senate Document No. 427, $300; said judgment to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian Service: Provided, That said judgment shall not be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exist no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa about the proviso on page 49, line 15:

Provided, That said judgment shall not be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury—

And so forth. That is a rather novel situation, is it not?

Mr. GOOD. I think the proviso is superfluous. I think lines 19 and 20 practically cover the same thing.

Mr. GARRETT. That "the right of appeal shall have expired." I was just wondering about the necessity for that.

Mr. GOOD. I think it is superfluous because under lines 19 and 20 it could not be paid until the right of appeal had expired.

Mr. GARRETT. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order and move to strike out the proviso beginning in line 15 and ending with line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 49, strike out the proviso beginning in line 15 and ending in line 18.

Mr. GOOD. And put a period at the end of line 14 instead of a colon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Smithsonian Institution, preservation of collections, tional Museum, $2.60.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a typographical error in line 4, page 54. The word "National" is not complete.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct the error.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the error referred to will be corrected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any officer or employee of the United States who, after notice and hearing by the superior officer vested with the power of removing him, is held to have violated or attempted to violate this section, shall be removed by such superior officer from office or employment. Any officer or employee of the United States who violates or attempts to violate this section shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In line 5, page 63, it says "with the power of removing him, is held to have violated or attempted to violate this section." Would it not be better if that word "held" were stricken out and the word "found" substituted?

Mr. GOOD. I think that would be an improvement.

Mr. WALSH. I offer an amendment to strike out the word "held," in line 5, page 63, and substitute the word "found," because this is ample notice in the hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 63, line 5, strike out the word "held" and insert in lieu thereof the word "found."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer this because I think it is customary, after a hearing has been held upon alleged violation of law, to hold, when the determination is made, that it is a finding. You would not say a "holding." So if it is made to read "is found to have violated or attempted to violate this section" it would be better.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Page 62, line 24, after the words "United States," insert "in the discharge of their official duties."

Mr. GOOD. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that in line 2, on page 63, the same thing is carried—"which they deem necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business." I thought it meant the same thing.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I think the amendment I offer is necessary in order to explain the provision. Otherwise the employees might be held to be violating the penal section if they should communicate with their Members of Congress, except through official channels.

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph has been read.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I know it has been read, but I am offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been passed.

Mr. GARRETT. The paragraph has already been passed.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I was under the impression that the bill was being read by sections, not paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not raising the question, except to mention that the paragraph has been passed.

Mr. GARRETT. And it is subject to a point of order for that reason. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman will want to insist upon that amendment. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Either that amendment should be adopted or the words "and employees" should be stricken out. Employees have no official function to perform in communicating with Congress.

Mr. GARRETT. They would have to send it through their superiors, or whoever it might be.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Do you want to apply military rules to civil employees of the Government, and provide that they shall have to communicate with Congressmen through their superior officers instead of direct?

Mr. GARRETT. They do now. That is, in an official way.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Employees have no official function to perform in communicating with Congress. I think to prohibit communications from employees except through official channels is un-American. They have a constitutional right to communicate with their Representatives in Congress, without their letters passing through the hands of their superior officers, any suggestions they may have to offer. With a view of clarifying the language, I offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT. If you say "in the discharge of their official duties," you limit them in the matter of the discharge of their official duties, and then the question immediately arises as to whether or not, in recommending legislation through their officials, employees are discharging their official duty. You are subjecting your official to all sorts of dangerous criticism, and perhaps worse, if you put in the words "in the discharge of his official duties," because it might be held that when he recommended legislation he was not discharging any part of his official duty at all.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. A former President of the United States some years ago issued an Executive order that no employee of the Government should communicate with a Member of Congress concerning public business except through official channels, and it invited a great deal of criticism. It was very unfair and humiliating to the employees of the Government, and after several years a law was passed permitting them to communicate with Members of Congress on official matters and abrogating the Executive order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I heard that a Federal judge had issued an injunction against an official of the Government of the United States communicating any information to Congress. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I understood that occurred.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I think this language is unfortunate, in that it will have the effect that I mentioned unless my amendment is adopted.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I will say to the gentleman from Idaho that I think all communications from public employees, where they are using official funds, should be through official channels. This is a limitation on the use of public funds.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I agree with the gentleman, but the use of these words, "official channels," should not apply to employees.

Mr. DENISON. No. I do not understand it that way. I take it that it simply prohibits employees or officials of the Government from using public funds in communicating to Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am in favor of that prohibition, but I think we should either strike out the words "and employees," who have no official function to perform in communicating with Congress, or else put in the explanatory words suggested.

Mr. DENISON. It is sometimes hard to tell what is an employee and what is an official.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks an extension of five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to direct the attention of the gentleman from Idaho to what seems to me to be an inconsistency in his amendment. His amendment would prevent Government officers or employees from communicating through proper official channels requests for legislation or appropriations which they deem necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business. It would prevent that, unless it was in the discharge of their official duties. Now, it might well be that an officer or employee might want to recommend some action for the more efficient conduct of the Government's business, and he could not do that unless it was in the discharge of his official duties.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is all right for an officer to do that, but an employee has no such function to perform officially of that character, and it will simply have a tendency, as I remarked, to dissuade the clerks from expressing their opinions about the conduct of public business through their individual Members of Congress. They frequently offer suggestions of great value, and they should not be prohibited from doing so. All Members of Congress may not be well informed.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, I assume that the gentleman would not want the clerks or employees of the Government to use public funds in explaining what they want done?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No. I am in favor of the provision, as I said, except I suggest the insertion of these explanatory words, which can not do any harm, and which it seems to me will clarify the language and protect employees of the Government in their right to express their opinions concerning legislation and the conduct of the public business without securing the consent of some bureau officer to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 6. That this act hereafter may be referred to as the "third deficiency appropriation act, fiscal year 1919."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that a reservation was made to a proviso on page 8.

Mr. GOOD. It is at the bottom of page 6, extending through to line 18 on page 8. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] had reserved a point of order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I have talked with the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Minnesota, who understand that situation, and from the information I have received I think it should remain in the bill. I wish to withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws the reservation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: On page 7, line 8, after the word "year," insert "which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated."

Mr. GOOD. The comptroller has advised the committee that under the language as carried in this bill and in the former bill payment could not be made unless an appropriation was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the item on page 3 in regard to the Civil Service Commission, in order that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] may offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to page 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the amendment which I previously offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, That the act entitled 'An act to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses,' approved March 3, 1919, so far as it relates to preference in employment of honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, be amended to read as follows:

"'That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive branch of the Government in the District of Columbia or elsewhere preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such, if they are qualified to hold such positions.'"

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the law as it now exists, with the exception of the words "or elsewhere." In other words, it gives the benefit of the provisions of this law to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines to enter the Government service wherever there may be an opportunity outside of the District of Columbia, which it applies to now. I discussed it in detail a few moments ago.

I prepared this in consultation with the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations. I think it is a very necessary amendment, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. GARRETT. If I understand correctly, while this refers to the census law, it really is general in character.

Mr. DYER. It is general legislation.

Mr. GARRETT. In other words, that legislation which was passed in the census bill was general legislation. It was not confined to the census employees alone?

Mr. DYER. No.

Mr. GARRETT. But applied to all departments of the Government?

Mr. DYER. To all departments of the Government, and it has been construed by the Attorney General as applying only to the departments in the city of Washington. My amendment is to make it available to all parts of the country, that is all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It applies that amendment to all departments of the Government throughout the Nation?

Mr. DYER. Yes; wherever there is Government service, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] desire to be heard on this amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I desire to perfect the gentleman's amendment with another amendment.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is entitled to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLANTON. After the words "of such" insert "and to the wives of injured soldiers who themselves are not qualified."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. That was in the other law, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment offered by Mr. DYER: After the word "such" insert the following: "and to the wives of injured soldiers who themselves are not qualified."

Mr. BLANTON. So that it will read——

The Clerk read as follows:

So that the amendment as amended will read:

"That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive branch of the Government in the District of Columbia or elsewhere preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines and widows of such and to the wives of injured soldiers who themselves are not qualified, if they are qualified to hold such positions."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 32 ayes and 20 noes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3478) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there demand for a separate vote on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SHERWOOD, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for two weeks, on account of sickness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 30, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 30, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of light and life, liberty and hope, justice and mercy, love and the sweet affections of the human heart, we thank Thee for the spirit of patriotism which moved the men of this body to set apart this holy day in memory of the brave soldiers who, in answer to the call of the colors, left home, native land, and all that they held dear to go to the rescue of our sister nations, who were fighting an insidious foe for liberty, right, and justice.

All hail to the American soldier, who turned back the tide of war and brought peace to a suffering world.

We come with praise for the living and tears for the dead, sympathy for the wounded and maimed, for the fathers, mothers, wives, and children who sacrificed their dear ones on the altar of liberty. Comfort them, we beseech Thee, in Thine own way.

Out of the twilight of the past
We move to a diviner light,
For nothing that is wrong can last;
Nothing's immortal but the right.

May the memory of the great sacrifices the lovers of liberty and truth have made live on as an example to those who shall come after us. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. FULLER of Illinois was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Herbert A. York (H. R. 14802, 65th Cong.), without leaving copies, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Also, papers in the case of Thomas F. Duffy (H. R. 13534, 65th Cong.), without leaving copies, no adverse report having been made thereon.

TENDERING THANKS OF CONGRESS TO THOSE WHO SERVED IN THE GREAT WAR.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, House joint resolution 67, tendering the thanks of Congress to those who served, or gave others to the service of, the country in the Great War, is now in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the resolution, House joint resolution 67, which by previous order of the House was made the order of the day.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 67.

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against the Imperial German Government and who, through their patriotic sacrifice, steadfast fidelity, brilliant strategy, and courageous service, secured a victorious peace, gave to the world a new insight into the high ideals and lofty purposes of America, and left to future generations a splendid heritage of heroic achievement and noble devotion to duty.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served in the various auxiliary forces, whose humane and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the comfort and support of our valiant warriors.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to the mothers, wives, and relatives who, patriotic and uncomplaining, gave their nearest and their dearest in the hour of the Nation's need, and its deep and heartfelt sympathy is extended to those whose kindred fell, or were permanently disabled in the great struggle.

That Congress reverently expresses its profound appreciation of the sublime act of those who made the supreme sacrifice by giving their lives for their country and their country's cause.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the consideration of the resolution be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the time for debate upon the resolution shall be divided equally, to be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and one-half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if the gentleman has in mind any limitation upon the time that should be allotted to each Member who desires to speak. I apprehend there will probably be a number of requests.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not it in mind at this time. I have had requests for time varying from 5 to 15 minutes in each case, covering a period of about two hours and a quarter. Whether all of the gentlemen will be here, I do not know. Whether they will all desire to speak as long as they expected, I do not know. I assume that about two hours and a half would be consumed upon this side as the matter now appears.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that the time to be allotted should be left largely to the control of the gentlemen who have charge of the time on the respective sides.

Mr. MONDELL. I expect to alternate with the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yielding from 5 to 6 to 10 minutes to each person?

Mr. MONDELL. Several gentlemen have asked for as much as 15 minutes. That is the longest time that has been suggested by any one speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming that the time be equally divided, to be controlled one-half by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who are unable to be here to-day, and those who are here but who are not able to participate in the debate—for we know that many are necessarily absent making patriotic addresses elsewhere—be granted the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD, for the period of five legislative days, upon the subject of the resolution and subjects appropriate to Memorial Day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that all Members have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD upon this resolution for not exceeding five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would there be any objection to making that 10 days?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is not good practice to extend that privilege over any considerable period of time. Personally I would have no personal objection to 10 days, but I do not think it is good practice. I think my friend will agree with me that it is not. It occurs to me that whether gentlemen are here or not, they can prepare within five days what they desire to say on the subject.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I know some Members who are absent at this time and who probably will not be back within five days, who would like to avail themselves of that privilege.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think the gentleman ought to consent in this matter for 10 days, because it is a very important matter and many Members are very busy on committees.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if any Member can not get in within five days he can secure an extension at some other time and insert the remarks he desires. This matter of allowing over 10 days or two weeks is bad practice. If any gentleman can not get in within five days, the House will undoubtedly give him the right to insert his remarks in the RECORD after that time.

Mr. MONDELL. And my request, of course, includes the right to those who speak to-day to extend and revise their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR THE DAY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], a soldier in the recent war, to act as Speaker pro tempore for the day. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, before I begin my remarks on the resolution I wish to say that it has occurred to me that there is possibly an unintentional omission in this resolution. We had hoped and expected and believed that it embraced all of those who had conspicuously served and sacrificed, but in writing the second paragraph of the resolution the last time a slight change was made which leaves the paragraph in a form which I fear does not with sufficient clearness include thanks to the members of the selective-service boards, men many of them veterans of former wars, who could not give their services in the field but who did render conspicuous service at home. At the proper time I shall ask that, on page 1, line 13, after the word "served," there be added the words "on the service boards"; or, if gentlemen prefer, "on the selective-service boards." Then, at the beginning of line 14, in order more clearly to embrace the character of this particular service, to insert, before the word "humane," the word "patriotic," so that the paragraph will read:

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served on the selective-service boards and in the various auxiliary forces whose patriotic, humane, and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the comfort and support of our valiant warriors.

The world is slowly emerging from under the shadow of the greatest and most devastating war and the most widespread and awful attendant terrorism, murder, pestilence, and famine in all the history of mankind.

At the beginning we hoped that our beloved country and its people would not be brought within the devouring and desolating flame of the world conflict, but the realization of that hope was impossible. The conflict that shook the very foundations of the world had its beginning in the clash of views on questions of such primary importance to all mankind that it was inevitable that we should become involved. Our country has grown so great and powerful, its interests are so widespread, its influence so all-pervading that we can not escape issues that involve the liberties of all mankind.

History will never adequately record and the human mind can never fully grasp the sum total of the misery and agony that the war and its attendant troop of horrors has brought to mankind, but we may at least take consolation in the fact that through the black and somber pattern which the demons of war have woven are shot the countless golden threads of idealism, loyalty, fidelity, faith, and devotion unto death which with the passing of the years will give the dominant tone to the picture as mankind, holding these virtues in grateful remembrance, shall seek to forget the horrors of the war.

No tongue or pen has yet given adequate expression to the matchless heroism of dauntless Belgium, the invincible gallantry of France, the unconquerable spirit of Briton, the fervid valor of Italy. They constitute a story that will make the history of the days of the Great War an exhaustless mine of matchless inspiration to mankind through all the centuries to come.

America's contribution to the war was invaluable from the beginning, for our limitless stores of food and war material were at all times the main reliance of the gallant Allies. Our entrance into the war as a fighting and effective force heralded the turning of the tide. Without detracting from the credit and the glory due the gallant nations and peoples that fought the good fight from the beginning, it may be said without boasting, and has been said by generous spokesmen of all the Allies, that it was the weight of our influence, the magnitude of our preparation, and, above all, the matchless valor of our men, that turned the scale, transformed impending defeat into glorious victory, and won the war. [Applause.]

While the names which will forever recall deathless deeds of heroism lie thick upon the pages of the history of the Great War as the leaves of Vallombrosa, none will shine brighter or hold so sacred a place in our hearts as Cantigny, Chateau-Thierry, the Argonne Forest, St. Mihiel, and all those fields where the valor of the citizen-soldiers of America humbled the pride and broke the lines of the veteran legions of military autocracy.

Our boys are returning from overseas and from the camps and training fields, where they have been faithfully performing the duty assigned them. The forces are being demobilized, the citizen-soldier is returning home, our people are laying aside the tasks and duties of war and taking up the occupations of peace, and it is fitting that we shall express the Nation's thanks and the Nation's appreciation of all those who served and sacrificed, and I have suggested that we do so in the following words:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 67) tendering the thanks of Congress to those who served, or gave others to the service of, the country in the Great War.

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against the Imperial German Government and who, through their patriotic sacrifice, steadfast fidelity, brilliant strategy, and courageous service secured a victorious peace, gave to the world a new insight into the high ideals and lofty purposes of America, and left to future generations a splendid heritage of heroic achievement and noble devotion to duty.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served on the selective-service boards and in the various auxiliary forces, whose patriotic, humane, and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the comfort and support of our valiant warriors.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to the mothers, wives, and relatives who, patriotic and uncomplaining, gave their nearest and their dearest in the hour of the Nation's need, and its deep and heartfelt sympathy is extended to those whose kindred fell or were permanently disabled in the great struggle.

That Congress reverently expresses its profound appreciation of the sublime act of those who made the supreme sacrifice by giving their lives for their country and their country's cause.

Mr. Speaker, no resolution we can draw, no words we can command, fitly or fully express our heartfelt thanks and our sincere appreciation of the loyalty and devotion of our fighting men, those who served and ministered unto them, or the good folks at home who with tearful eyes bade the boys Godspeed and then turned to every good work which supported the men in the field and armed the Nation to its task.

With reverence we express the Nation's appreciation of those who gave their lives that the world might be a better place for others to live in, and in our heart of hearts we hold as the objects of our special care the gallant men who have returned to us with the honorable scars of war and those bereaved ones who mourn the unreturning brave. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker [applause], I take it this resolution will pass unanimously. I think it surely should.

It is eminently fitting and proper that the Congress in this public manner return the heartfelt thanks of our country to the men who served her so valiantly and so victoriously in the most stupendous war in the entire history of the human race, but American men, women, and children have already demonstrated their gratitude and pride in every way which human ingenuity could devise. We are only doing in solemn and official manner what the great, proud, pulsing, loving heart of America has expressed in enthusiastic and impromptu fashion. What we say will matter little, but what our soldiers did will never fade from human memory so long as the world endures. They demonstrated American prowess in arms to all the nations of the earth and raised our country's fame to a pinnacle of exceeding glory.

In my Arlington speech on Decoration Day, 1913, I said: "America is the most peaceable Nation on the globe, but at the same time is the most martial. The truth of this seeming paradox was proved in 1861, when at the first tap of the drum a whole people sprang to arms. In April, 1861, there were not 20,000 soldiers within the broad confines of the Republic, while in April, 1865, the continent trembled beneath the iron tread of 2,000,000 of as fine soldiers as the sun ever shone upon, some in blue and some in gray." It has been marvelously demonstrated in the World War just closed, wherein in a few months we accomplished the miracle of sending two millions and a half of armed men across the sea who turned the tide of battle on the red fields of France. So long as the world admires courage their valor will be chanted in song and celebrated in story. [Applause.]

While our soldiers in Europe were winning imperishable renown, we had 2,000,000 more in training camps in our own country fretting their hearts away because they were not permitted to join their brothers in arms "over there." Such a colossal achievement has no parallel in the annals of war. [Applause.] In addition to the four and one-half millions actually in the Army and Navy service of our country, we had enrolled 13,000,000 more of military age in reserve. No such demonstration of warlike prowess was ever witnessed in any nation since God said "Let there be light." Let us fervently hope and pray that there will never be occasion or opportunity or necessity for a repetition of this astounding chapter in our history. May universal and eternal peace be the compensation for all the blood and treasure spent in the awful cataclysm which befell half the world.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." That is one of the most beautiful and philosophical sentences written by John the Disciple whom Jesus loved. This paraphrase of that sentence is equally true and philosophical: "Greater love and higher honor hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his country, or offers so to do." Therefore all honor, all glory, all love be to the brave, patriotic, and self-sacrificing men of America who buckled on their armor and went forth to fight at the call of their beloved country.

There are tears for "the unreturning brave"; there are aid and tenderest compassion for the maimed and those whose health was broken in the service abroad or in home camps; there is a high resolve to succor the war widows and orphans in their sore distress; there is heartfelt gratitude to the living and the dead; there is sympathy unspeakable for the fathers and mothers whose sons lost their lives in the awful tragedy; there are profoundest thanks to Almighty God that He brought us through the bloody conflict safe and strong and hopeful for the future of our own country and of the whole world. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. [Applause.]

THE AMERICAN SOLDIER.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, America is proud of her soldiers, but not because they constitute a part of a military machine. The pride of Rome in her legions, the pride of France in the disciplined troops that followed Napoleon, the pride of Germany in her vast military machine has never been hers. The pride of America in her soldiers has ever been that they were citizen soldiers, called from their peaceful pursuits to service and sacrifice for the preservation of their liberty, the safety of their country, and the security of their homes. They served not for military distinction, not for fame or glory, not for place or power, but in fulfillment of their obligations as citizens, because they believed that any sacrifice was better than the surrender of all they held dear. It is this that has ever lent distinction to their service. It is this that has ever made their supreme sacrifice so solemn and so sacred.

Away back in the colonial days, when the Pilgrims landed on the rock-bound shores of New England, this service began and such sacrifice was made. To face the midnight attacks of their savage foes the Colonials became sentinel soldiers, guarding their first rude homes. To protect the westward migrations that through trackless forests, across uncharted plains, over snow-capped mountains, onward, ever onward toward the setting sun, moved to the occupancy of a continent, the pioneer became a soldier.

And then came the Revolution, a war of colonists against a powerful monarchy, a war of home-loving people against armies trained under Wellington in the Peninsular campaign, against professional soldiers, veterans of a hundred battle fields. The American soldier then was such as Paul Revere, who rode out under the silent stars through Lexington to Concord carrying the signal for the independence of a nation. They were men like those who—

> By the rude bridge that spanned the flood
> Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
> 'Twas there the embattled farmers stood
> And fired the shot heard 'round the world.

They were men like those who, during the terrible winter of Valley Forge, lived on flour mixed with water baked into cakes at open fires, of whom Lafayette wrote: "They were in want of everything; they had neither coats, hats, shirts, nor shoes," who left their bloody footprints in the snow and for the betterment of whose condition Washington stole away to kneel in agonizing prayer. They were the backwoodsmen under Ferguson and Morgan and Greene, who drove Cornwallis from the South and made possible his final surrender at Yorktown. These were the soldiers that ordained freedom for a continent and builded a nation which now leads the world.

Alike in character and purpose were the soldiers of the Civil War. The soldier of the Civil War was a soldier because he was a citizen, a husband, a father. He was simply, unaffectedly, earnestly a patriot. He loved his country because it sheltered his home, protected his family, guarded his fireside. He could say with Cicero, "Our country is the common parent of us all. Dear are our ancestors, dear are our children, dear our relatives and friends; and all these loves are contained in love of country." He had learned in his home life to be faithful and brave and true, and faithful and brave and true as he was at home so was he on the field of battle. No hardship could discourage him, no danger could dishearten him. Such was the soldier of the Civil War. Perhaps as never before men were uplifted and ennobled by devotion and sacrifice. The youth of the land were inspired. Their hearts were touched by fire. It was theirs to learn at the outset that life was a profound and passionate thing, and that death in a righteous cause is the supreme service man can render to his fellow men. Thus over and above the sordid plains of selfishness they saw the snowy heights of honor and of glory.

And then came the War with Spain. It was a little war, as wars are measured, but in its effects on the Nation it was tremendous. It was an unselfish war. It had in it no purpose that was not just and high. The call to arms was a call that made response a noble deed. In the cause of liberty and humanity again America unsheathed the sword. There was a veritable revival of patriotism. Our country had a larger meaning. Our flag had a greater beauty. The best of our youth went out from shops and factories, from the cornfields of the North and the cotton fields of the South, college boys and cowboys together in the ranks following the flag. The heroic age had come again. There was not in all the borders of the land a youth but knew there was something dearer than dollars and more to be desired than place or power, and by that knowledge they were uplifted and ennobled.

Plato declared that the soldiers of Marathon and the sailors of Salamis became the schoolmasters of Greece. True, indeed, was that statement; and so the soldiers of these, our wars, have been our teachers—teaching us the value of liberty, the sacredness of human rights, the blessings that are ours under a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

The American soldier of the present war was of like character and conduct. He went into the war with a full realization of what it meant. He was not given to speculation as to what was the particular reason which justified our participation in the war. But he knew that we had used every honorable means to avoid it and that those means had failed. He knew that we had suffered indignities and injuries which no self-respecting nation could ignore. He knew that the German attack was not only against Belgium and France and England, but was against civilization itself, and that if it succeeded our own liberties and our own institutions would be in peril. He knew that the mighty power he went to fight was the most powerful, the most ruthless, the most savage and relentless that ever drew the sword. Above all he knew his country called him and that no patriotic American ever had or ever could refuse that summons.

The American soldier passed no sleepless nights in solitude watching the armor he was to wear when next day he should receive the accolade of knighthood. He had no desire for display, no thought of distinction, no motive but duty. He loved his country and he knew its history. He shared in its ideals and believed its principles. He believed that this Government of ours was the best the world possessed or had ever known. He felt himself a part of it. It was his—his not only to admire and to love, but to serve and preserve.

And so he went across the seas to unknown dangers—to hardships, to wounds, to death—with a smile on his face and a prayer in his heart for the dear ones left at home. And how big and manly they looked as they went away. Well might the Red Cross nurse say as she saw them leaving the ship in France: "They are so big. They tower over everyone, and have great broad shoulders and big voices—just real, real men." Vigorous and strong, alert and virile, with keen and kindly eyes, and wearing ever the smile that comes from a true heart and a clean mind, they were the very incarnation of youth, wearing its glamor like a shining garment. [Applause.]

It was not strange that they excited the admiration of all who saw them. And how well they bore their part! It was our own martyr poet, Alan Seeger, who wrote his mother:

> Be sure I shall play the part well, for I was never in better health nor felt my manhood more keenly.

That was ever their thought, to play well their part, and they entered upon their work with the keenest interest and the most intense desire to succeed. With a confidence that came from accustomed success, with an assurance that was born of a knowledge of their capabilities, with a purpose so vigorous that failure never entered into their calculations, they entered upon their mighty task. And yet there was nothing of bravado in their attitude. They knew they must be taught, they knew they must learn their lessons, and there never were more modest pupils than they were, learning the lessons of modern warfare from their experienced teachers.

And how the children loved them! I was shown with great pride a picture which a big stalwart farmer boy sent home to his family. He was marching along the street with one little one on his back, another on his arm, and still another holding his hand. And they were all proud and happy!

It occurs to me there is much in the striking fact that the soldier selected to send home to his family this simple picture of himself rather than one that might show him and be distinctive of his service as a soldier in the ranks.

In battle there were never better, braver soldiers than our own home boys, most of whom had never before carried a gun or fired a shot. In this war horrors had been magnified to an unimagined degree. But they were accepted as inevitable and met without a murmur or a tremor. In the trenches plastered with mud, stealing snatches of sleep on a board set into a wall of clay; watching the shells burst, wondering where the next would fall; dodging the bombs from flocks of airplanes; fixing their masks when the oncoming waves of poison gas came down the line; standing for hours at a peephole, watching for the enemies attack; fixing bayonets and crouched for the signal for "over the top"; rushing forward toward a storm of shrapnel, with smoke and flame and the thunder of the guns making a veritable hell of the battle field—these are some of the things they experienced when sometimes but a few weeks from home.

But they met all these with a smile and a jest. Even the seriously wounded sent to the hospitals kept their courage and good spirits. One of them wrote:

> Hospitals have become quite the rage among our best people. Almost all our upper classes are staying at them. For ridding yourself of useless appendages, finding out about yourself, your construction and interior decoration scheme, hospital treatment can not be beaten. Never attempt the vulgarity of getting up at mealtimes and thus betraying your base Army origin. Insist on having all your meals served as you recline on your cot.

In a hospital a visitor paused at the bedside of a youth whose head, both arms, and chest were covered with bandages. "Hello, my man," he said, "how are you feeling?" "Fine, sir, fine." was the reply. "You see I was very lucky, sir; I got a whole shell to myself."

Another, visiting a hospital after a severe battle, said:

"Not one word of regret, not a tear, not a complaint in a hospital full of torn, mangled, dismembered boys, many of whom had not been six weeks in the front ranks."

And as they lived and fought and suffered, so they died. After the battle of Chateau-Thierry a French writer visited the battle field and wrote to a Paris paper the next day:

"These wonderful Americans fight like our own French poilus did the first year of the war. Their beautiful young bodies were lying straight out and their faces were always toward the enemy."

[Applause.]

One of our own boys writing home said:

"This morning I went over the battle ground; it was raining. I found one of our boys in the thick of a wheat field. He was still warm, but he was dead. He had fixed his wounds as best he could. He had his mother's and sweetheart's pictures in one hand and his letters from home in the other. He had died looking at them."

Innumerable incidents like these could be given. In the letters home sent by those who survived the stories of heroic bravery in the face of almost certain death, of sacrifices made to save a wounded comrade, of the deliberate choice of death rather than surrender, could be multiplied almost indefinitely.

And now in this our day of victory we have met to honor those who served so well and are returned to us and to pay the tribute of our loving remembrance to those who will return to us no more, who now sleep on the hillsides of France, who have made for us the supreme sacrifice.

Many of you have seen Daniel C. Frenche's "Angel of Death and the Sculptor." It is considered one of the most beautiful pieces of statuary yet produced by an American. In the midst of his work the young sculptor chiseling at the face of his sphinx, his form tense with the eagerness of his desire, his face lit up by the fire of his ambition, is suddenly interrupted. The angel of death touches him as with uplifted hand he aims to strike another blow. Transfixed he stands and turns to meet his fate; dauntless, yet with the anguish of the hour struggling for the mastery; brave, yet with the awful thought of buried hopes, of broken plans, of blasted ambitions pictured in his saddened eye and quivering lip.

How well that typifies those who have made the supreme sacrifice in this war. Not one only but thousands of brave young hearts whose uplifted hands were busy carving out their ambitious plans, their eager desires, their earnest hopes, did the angel of death touch with his cold, inexorable hand.

And so our hour of victory is saddened by its awful cost. We strive to strike a pæon, but it wanes into a dirge. We strive to remember only the gallant array, with banners flying and armor bright, but we can not forget the gaps in the ranks. We strive to think of the hero as he leads the column "over the top" to glorious victory, but our thoughts will turn, in spite of us, to that dear one whom the dumb turf wraps in its mantle of silence "somewhere in France." But it is said, "No bar of endless night exiles the brave." And to us now they stand transfigured in the halls of memory, secure from change, beautiful forevermore, and with the light of the eternal morning in their eyes.

Mr. Speaker, we shall not be worthy of our position as American representatives unless we shall from such remembrances feel a deeper love for the country for which they gave their lives and a greater feeling of responsibility for the trust imposed on us that we may make and keep it ever worthy of their sacrifice.

> For the youth they gave and the blood they gave,
> For the strength that was our stay,
> For every marked or nameless grave
> On the steel-torn Flanders way,
> We who are whole of body and soul,
> We have a debt to pay.
> For the youth they gave and the blood they gave,
> We must render back the due;
> For every marked or nameless grave
> We must pay with a service true;
> Till the scales stand straight with even weight
> And the world is a world made new.

[Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, our soldiers were drawn from the body of a brave and mighty people. They represented the vigorous and intrepid manhood of America. An Ohio boy who came to Camp Sheridan, in my State, was the chauffeur of a wealthy young man in Cleveland, but in the great army of democracy he became the captain of his former employer, then a private in the ranks. Our soldiers were the soldiers of the people. The story of the American soldier's advent into war and his brilliant triumph in battle reads like a thrilling romance. I saw him turn from the peaceful pursuits of life, bid father and mother good-by, don the uniform of his country, and embark upon a sea thick with deadly mines and murderous submarines. And there he stood undaunted, with the light of battle in his eye, proud to be the guardian of American liberty. [Applause.] It is well and fitting for us to pay the tribute of our love to the boys who met the supreme test of their day and staked their lives to preserve American liberty.

Peter the Hermit, addressing the Crusaders to the Holy Land, said:

> Brave knights, remember the deeds of your ancestors.

Edmund Burke said:

> They who care nothing for the deeds of their ancestors need not look forward to the doings of their posterity.

Mr. Speaker, we love the records of our people. We point with pride to their doings in the drama of history. The courage displayed by the soldier in battle represents the character and courage of the people at home. We are not only satisfied with the conduct of our boys on the battle fields of France, but we are proud to claim them as our representatives and happy to have the world judge us by the record that they have made. [Applause.] I shall never forget the spring of 1918, when the Germans were blasting and burning their way toward Paris. We dreaded to see the headlines in the newspapers. The Germans were advancing and driving back the Allied Armies. The only doubts and misgivings that we ever had arose from the fear that Germany would break through the lines before our boys could reach the battle front in France, but when we learned that they were there we breathed a sigh of relief and looked forward with perfect confidence to the day when they would strike the decisive blow and it would all be over "over there." [Applause.]

Gentlemen, in the darkest hour of the world's history our boys took our flag and crossed the sea. It became the bow of promise and the bow of hope to the war-worn armies of our Allies. They turned to the American soldier as did the Israelites of old to Aaron to stretch forth the healing rod and give the land deliverance. [Applause.] Fathers and mothers, weeping over their sons dead in battle, praised and hugged the flag of our country; their daughters, living in dread and fear of the brutal Hun, kissed and caressed its sacred folds. [Applause.] Aye, the mothers of France and their daughters kissed the rifle barrels of our soldiers and with tears streaming down their faces said, "You will save us; won't you?" [Applause.] And our brave boys, thinking of home, mother, sister, wife, and sweetheart, looked into the sad and sorrowful faces of these heroic and long-suffering women of France and said, "Yes; we will drive out the murderers or die in the attempt." [Applause.]

Our brave boys unfurled Old Glory against an army whose mighty forebears had conquered imperial Rome. They carried it against an army whose seasoned warriors had driven back for three years the mighty armies of the people of Napoleon and Wellington. And from their first baptism of fire to their victorious march toward Berlin through the gates of Sedan they displayed a skill and courage in battle that sent terror into the ranks of the enemy and won for them the love and admiration of the civilized world. [Applause.]

The President of France said of them:

They flung themselves into the combat with manly contempt of danger and smiling disregard of death.

[Applause.]

Marshal Foch, of France, said:

These American soldiers ask nothing better than to go to their death.

[Applause.]

Sir Robert Borden, premier of Canada, said:

The American soldier brought victory out of defeat on the western front.

[Applause.]

This is the glorious record of the American soldier. When Gen. Haig said to his men, "Your backs are to the wall. There is nothing to do but to die," and when the brave French soldiers were worn and weary and covered over with blood and sweat, fighting on but falling back nearer and nearer to Paris, the American crusaders of liberty—the marvel and miracle of the age—were hurrying to the battle front in France. [Applause.]

The record of their service is radiant with heroic achievements. And at Chateau-Thierry the night before that mighty drive Germany had marshaled the pick and flower of her army in front of the American line. Here stood the hitherto victorious Prussian Guard. They had rested for this occasion and were now in the pink of condition, all dressed in new uniforms to be worn in the march upon Paris. Germany had driven back the army of Belgium, of France, and of Great Britain, and now she desired to add one more star of glory to her crown before she ended the war in victory and she determined to break through the American line and defeat the American Army. Ah, that awful night before the mighty drive. The President of France was making ready to move the seat of government from Paris; men and women and children were fleeing panic-stricken from the city. The mighty drive was imminent. The world was on tiptoe. Our boys, brave, undaunted, and determined, were ready and waiting for the morrow. [Applause.]

In the dead of the night our officers went up and down the line and said to our heroic soldiers, "Boys, you must hold them to-morrow." And our boys answered back, "We'll hold 'em." Realizing that Germany would make the most stupendous effort of all to break through at that point, just before day our officers came down the line again and said to our boys, "You must hold 'em, boys. They must not pass." And our brave boys answered back, "We'll hold 'em. They shall not pass." [Applause.] These were the words of the brave soldiers of the Rainbow Division and the brave American marines coming from every State in the American Union. [Applause.]

The great day dawned. The mighty drive was on. Germany was bombarding Paris across a distance of 75 miles with the biggest gun in the world. Her aeroplanes were dropping bombs on the city. German artillery was thundering on the western front. Bulletins from the scene of battle were going into Paris. The first bulletin to Paris read about like this: "Germans advancing, French fighting bravely but falling back. Americans holding." Second bulletin: "Germans advancing, French still fighting bravely. Americans counterattacking." [Applause.] Third bulletin: "Germans still advancing. French fighting heroically. Germans in full retreat, losses heavy, as Americans advance." [Applause.] Next bulletin: "There are no Germans south of the Marne save the wounded and the dead." [Applause.] America had struck the decisive blow and had saved the liberty of the world. [Applause.]

Brave soldiers, God forbid that we shall ever prove recreant in our obligations to you for your heroic service to your country and to the world. [Applause.] These men, Mr. Speaker, fought in the greatest war of all history. No soldier before them ever rendered service of such far-reaching importance. They stood not only between us and the overthrow of our Government and the loss of our liberty, but they saved the civilization of the world. [Applause.] They rendered a service to mankind that will live until the sun grows cold and the leaves of the judgment book unfold. [Applause.] And where are they, the Hapsburgs and Hohenzollerns? Gone. They all are gone. Autocracy has fallen. The sword of the Kaiser has perished. Democracy is triumphant and God's cause is marching on. [Applause.] All hail to our brave boys who fought for and saved civilization and liberty. [Applause.] All hail to the living American soldier, and all hail to their brave comrades who sleep in France where the poppies grow! [Applause.] Sleep on, brave soldiers; sleep in the mellow moonlight of our own proud memories. You have achieved the last supreme adventure, and you died in the noblest cause that ever engaged the services of a soldier. [Applause.] Sleep on until the glad reunion time with your brave comrades who survive; sleep till the light of eternity's morning shall break beyond the mystic mountains. Your names are preserved in the Valhalla of American fame and written in the Lamb's book of life. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I heartily approve the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Wyoming, proposing a vote of thanks to the men who served in our Army and Navy in the Great World War.

It is altogether appropriate that the Congress of the United States on this sacred Memorial Day should suspend its ordinary business and pass a resolution in recognition of the service these men rendered their country and humanity.

Our soldiers, seamen, and marines are clearly entitled to the profoundest thanks we can express. They richly deserve the highest praise we can bestow. They are eminently worthy the deepest gratitude we can feel.

They performed a service to their country under circumstances and conditions which commands our highest admiration. Their service was rendered in a great crisis—in a time of need, in an hour of danger, when all we had was at stake. In this critical juncture these men donned the uniform of their country, marched forth at the call of duty, guided their country safely through the perils which beset it, and carried the flag to victory.

It was a hazardous service which these men performed. It endangered their health, exposed their bodies to wounds and mutilation and placed their lives in jeopardy. In performing this service 71,000 died of disease, 230,000 were wounded, and 50,000 were killed in action. But on and on they went, never retreating, always going forward, ever advancing until the German Army surrendered.

This service required personal sacrifice on the part of our soldiers. They left their homes, bid good-by to friends, relatives, fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, and sweethearts. They closed their business establishments, relinquished positions, gave up employment, left institutions of learning, and lost opportunities of every kind and character. Congress can not by any vote of thanks, nor can the American people by any expression of appreciation, compensate these men for the sacrifices they have made. But these brave men will, nevertheless, appreciate our kind words. So let this vote of thanks be recorded, and let us all in the future years avail ourselves of every opportunity, by word and by deed, to encourage, to cheer, and to honor these men, who in an hour of public danger and at such great personal sacrifice rendered such signal service to their country.

Furthermore, in rendering this service these men displayed extraordinary courage, splendid bravery, and sublime heroism. Above all, it was an unselfish service, freely given for others. So we honor our soldiers, seamen, and marines of the Great World War. We salute them as heroes, patriots, and benefactors!

ALL WERE HEROES.

The vote of thanks which Congress expresses to-day extends to all the soldiers, seamen, and marines who served in our Army and Navy in the Great World War. We make no distinction between the men who were called overseas and those who were in training camps at home. They all manifested the same magnificent spirit, the same willingness to make, if necessary, the supreme sacrifice in the service of the country. But it was the fate, or shall I say the privilege, of some to be called abroad and to participate in those great battles which added so much to the glory of our country. These men fought with skill, initiative, dash, courage, and bravery never surpassed. They met every requirement. They failed in no particular. They demonstrated that the American soldier is the best on earth. They added honor, renown, and glory to their country. They earned the eternal gratitude of all mankind. They turned back the tide of German barbarism and saved Christian civilization.

Through their unselfish, heroic, and noble deeds the torch of liberty and freedom will burn throughout ages to come with increased light and luster.

THE FUTURE.

We know not what the future may bring forth. May peace ever reign in this beloved country. May war clouds never again rise above our national horizon. But, whatever may come, let us never cease to honor the soldiers of this Republic. Any nation that neglects the men who have served in its army and navy and who have fought its battles thereby exhibits an ingratitude unworthy a great, generous, patriotic people.

The influence of the deeds which our soldiers perform will not end to-day, to-morrow, next week, or next year. It will go on and on forever. The country which they saved will remain the home of millions of the happiest people on earth. The flag which they followed and for which they fought will continue to be the emblem of liberty and freedom and a light to the people of every nation on earth. Through the service which these men—our soldiers, seamen, and marines—performed the Union will live, our free institutions will endure, the Stars and Stripes still wave, and the good which these brave men did will abide with our people, and among all the nations of the world, until time shall be no more. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, this is the greatest Memorial Day our country has ever known. For more than half a century this day has been sacred in our annals. Annually we have paid homage to the brave men of the Rebellion. For the past 20 years we have added to their number the departed of the Spanish War, and to-day grouped with all those heroes, whose number of dead is increased as the years roll by, we add the nearly 80,000 of our citizens who have made the supreme sacrifice during the World War.

It is fitting that the resolution under which these exercises are being held does not refer solely to those who lie buried in foreign soil. Honor is due, and will be gladly paid, to the survivors of all three wars for whom this day is set aside.

The resolution rightly includes those not actually in the armed forces, together with the mothers, wives, and relatives who sacrificed so much that victory might be attained. It is therefore very apparent that since the establishment of Memorial Day this one is the greatest and most important.

We will never disassociate Memorial Day from its original object, but we can very rightly add to it the honors due heroes of later periods in our country's history. It is very proper to act on the pending resolution, and Congress is the only place where the official thanks of the American people can be recorded to the 4,000,000 Americans engaged in this most recent struggle between the nations. It was through congressional action they were called upon to perform their patriotic duty, and it must therefore be through our action that they shall receive due recognition of their services. I join most heartily with my colleagues in this body in voicing my approval of the pending resolution.

RECORD OF TWENTY-SIXTH DIVISION.

Let me make special reference to some of the organizations in which Massachusetts was particularly interested, and a few individual men of whom there should be permanent mention in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Together with all other sections of the country we take pride in the local organizations. I desire to incorporate in my remarks a brief summary of the statistics of the Twenty-sixth Division, taken from the official program of the parade held in Boston last month.

The Yankee Division was organized in Boston August 22, 1917, from units of the National Guard troops of the New England States and a quota of National Army troops at Camp Devens, Mass. It was trained at various places in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. It sailed from Hoboken, N. J., September 7, 1917, and landed at St. Nazaire, France, on September 21, 1917. For four months the division was in the training area and furnished details for various lines of work, making preparations for the large body of troops which began to arrive soon after January 1, 1918.

The division took part in eight different campaigns, receiving its baptism of fire in the Chemin des Dames sector and using the first rolling barrage of fire ever fired by American artillery; in the Toul sector, being engaged with the enemy at Bois Brule (Apremont) April 10, 12–13; Seipcheprey, April 20, 21; Humbert Plantation, May 27; Richecourt, May 30; Xivray-Marvoisin, June 16; in the Pas Fini sector, where the Twenty-sixth relieved the Second Division, the line running through the famous Bois de Belleau and the villages of Vaux and Bouresches, with the town of Chateau-Thierry a short distance to the southeast; later in the Aisne-Marne offensive, the division repeated its attacks during the week of July 18–25 and netted a total distance of advance of 17½ kilometers, freeing the towns of Torcy, Givry, Belleau, Epieds, Trugny, and Etrepilly; the Rupt sector, occupied prior to the St. Mihiel offensive; in the St. Mihiel offensive, attacking by a night march in order to occupy Vigneulles, thus effecting a junction between the American attacks on the west and south of the St. Mihiel salient; in the Troyon section, freeing the villages of Thillot, St. Maurice, Vigneulles, Vieville, and Hannonville, all of which held a civilian population that had suffered for four years under German occupation; the last action being in the Meuse-Argonne offensive, where the division was for 26 days continually exposed to severe artillery and machine-gun fire, finishing with a month on the famous Verdun front, which was a month of suffering and of glory.

Either the division as a whole or portions of it were cited or commended 19 different times in American and French orders.

It is extremely gratifying to me that the first of these citations for any former National Guard organization was given, on April 26, 1918, to the One hundred and fourth Infantry, which contained four companies from my district.

The division captured 3,148 prisoners and its total casualties were 11,955.

It may be further noted that the first American to capture a German prisoner was Sergt. John Letzing, of Company E, One hundred and fourth Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division, who received the war cross.

AWARD OF CONGRESSIONAL MEDALS OF HONOR.

It is particularly fitting to refer to the award of the congressional medal of honor to two privates of the Twenty-sixth Division, and I herewith insert the verbatim copy of General Orders, No. 20:

The medal of honor was awarded to two privates of the Twenty-sixth Division in the following terms:

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH DIVISION,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
France, March 8, 1919.

General Orders, No. 2.

The division commander is pleased to announce the award by the President, in the name of the Congress, of the medal of honor to the following-named enlisted men for acts of gallantry and intrepidity, above and beyond the call of duty, performed in action against the enemy while members of this command:

Pvt. (First Class) George Dilboy (deceased), Company H, One hundred and third Infantry. (Medal awarded Dec. 5, 1918.)

For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty in action with the enemy on July 18, 1918, near Belleau, France.

After his platoon had gained its objective along a railroad embankment, Pvt. Dilboy, accompanying his platoon leader to reconnoiter the ground beyond, was suddenly fired upon by an enemy machine gun from 100 yards. From a standing position on the railroad track, fully exposed to view, he opened fire at once, but failing to silence the gun, rushed forward with his bayonet fixed through a wheat field toward the gun emplacement, falling within 25 yards of the gun with his right leg nearly severed above the knee and with several bullet holes in his body. With undaunted courage, he continued to fire into the emplacement from a prone position, killing two of the enemy and dispersing the rest of the crew.

Pvt. (First Class) Michael J. Perkins (deceased), Company D, One hundred and first Infantry. (Medal awarded Feb. 20, 1919.)

For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty in action with the enemy at Belleau Bois, France, October 27, 1918.

Pvt. Perkins voluntarily and alone crawled to a German "pill box" machine-gun emplacement from which grenades were being thrown at his platoon. Awaiting his opportunity, when the door was again opened and another grenade thrown, he threw a bomb inside, bursting the door open, and then drawing his trench knife, rushed into the emplacement. In a hand to hand struggle he killed or wounded several of the occupants and captured about 25 prisoners, at the same time silencing seven machine guns.

(Signed) HARRY C. HALE,
Major General Commanding.

FINAL REVIEW AND PARADE.

With thousands of other citizens of New England, it was my privilege to witness the final review and parade of the Twenty-sixth Division at Camp Devens on April 22 and at Boston on April 25. With these two events the brilliant history of the Twenty-sixth Division as an organization was brought to a close, but the memory of their achievements will be their richest legacy to all future generations.

I watched those two parades with mingled feelings of gladness and of sorrow. Gladness that New England's sons had so nobly acquitted themselves; sorrow that there lay buried in foreign soil so many of their comrades.

The most impressive event at Camp Devens was witnessing an elderly man as he was escorted across the field and presented to the commanding officer. All others were in uniform, he alone being dressed in civilian garb. Why this distinction? This elderly man was the father of Michael J. Perkins, and the commanding officer pinned on his breast the congressional medal of honor which had been awarded his son on February 20, but which the father received for his son who lay buried "Over There."

The distinguishing feature of the Boston parade was the passing of the wounded soldiers in at least 500 automobiles, followed by a large white flag, with a golden star, having beneath it the significant figures 1,730, the number of men of the division who had willingly made the supreme sacrifice and whom the division had left behind on its return to this country.

The division returned to Camp Devens and was at once demobilized. Thus ended the glorious service and splendid record of this division, it having the proud distinction of being the first National Guard organization to be sent overseas as well as rivaling in brilliancy of record any other National Guard or National Army organization.

Mr. Speaker, you readily can see my purpose has not been to render flowery praises to the Twenty-sixth Division but simply to make their achievements part of our record in consideration of the pending resolution.

New England also furnished another complete division, known as the Seventy-sixth. This division was only for a short period under fire but, like the Twenty-sixth, acquitted itself valiantly.

Our men were, of course, scattered throughout many different organizations and in all places were found ready and willing to do their entire duty.

TRIBUTE TO COLLEGE MEN AND WOMEN.

New England abounds in educational institutions and I think we can do no less than make special mention of the gallantry and great achievements of the college men and women in the war. Almost at the breaking out of the war the training camp was substituted for the classroom. Every college can to-day be proud of the record of its undergraduate students.

We have frequently read of the work done by the Smith College girls, young ladies selected particularly as physically able to endure the hardships of war service and splendidly equipped and supported by their college mates at home.

WHITTLESEY AND "THE LOST BATTALION."

I desire to incorporate as a part of the permanent record the services of one of the men from my district who proved himself an especial hero of the war. Lieut. Col. Charles W. Whittlesey, much better known as "Go-to-Hell Whittlesey," before entering college resided with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Whittlesey, in Pittsfield, Mass. He graduated from Williams College and later became a practicing attorney in New York City. From there he entered the first Plattsburg training camp. He was commissioned a captain and was later assigned to the Seventy-seventh Division.

The special feat that he performed in holding out against strong German forces, which surrounded his battalion in the Argonne Forest, made him the idol of the United States when the cables bore the early reports of the wonderful experience of this section of the Three hundred and eighth Infantry. His reply to the demand to surrender was in three well-known words.

Perhaps the story is most concisely told in the following extract from an editorial which I give herewith:

> The bit of profanity in the story not even the most pious American would have deleted. To the "lost battalion"—it was trapped in a hollow in the Argonne Forest—came a message, typewritten in the best German headquarters style:
> "Americans, you are surrounded on all sides. Surrender in the name of humanity. You will be well treated!"
> Maj. Whittlesey, the American commander, had no typewriter, and his reply was verbal. The Germans understood it. There has probably never been a terser response to an enemy sure of his prey and demanding capitulation. Whittlesey's profanity pleased his men so much that their cheers rolled over to the German lines.
> * * * But the battalion, with its rations exhausted, was providentially found at last and restored to the Seventy-seventh Division by its American brothers in arms. The beleaguered men would not be starved out; they would not be shelled or sniped out; they hung on with waning strength but stout hearts, their ammunition running so short that orders were given to fire only point blank at an advancing German. Day after day passed without relief. At last it came when hope of rescue had been given up. * * * The glory of their heroic resistance can never fade.

So to-day Massachusetts joins hands with her sister States in extending its hearty thanks to her and their valiant sons. From the days of the Revolution, Massachusetts has always been prominent in the martial affairs of the Nation. This war was no exception. The valor of her sons was tested and found true in war's crucible. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW]. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the inspiration of such an hour as this is all-compelling. Vital and patriotic as are the demands of routine legislation to which we address ourselves every day, it seems, after all, that it would almost profane the holy impact of this Memorial Day if the wheels of necessary legislation were to grind steadily on without our pausing as the grateful lawmakers of a grateful Nation to lay our tribute of love, and maybe of tears, at the feet of the living and the graves of the dead who offered their all for the safety of America and the freedom of the world.

Frankly, I am yet just a bit under that feeling of repression which any brand-new Member of Congress feels when he has any measure of commendable modesty in his soul, and under this feeling of restraint I first declined when I was invited by his honor, our beloved minority leader, to have some part in the patriotic utterance of this hour. But I soon "moved to reconsider" when I thought of the fact that a declination in favor of the older Members might mark me as recreant to the first call of duty; and if I know my heart I came here, as Henry Grady used to say, "with a sense of consecration," determined, in the language of the country-school patron, to "sign for a full scholar" as a Member of the Sixty-sixth Congress. And to be right honest about it, Mr. Speaker, I plead guilty to the soft impeachment of loving to make a speech when I have something to say. I came by it naturally. My father, who was a teacher as well as a farmer, was a cross between a Frenchman, an Englishman, and an Irishman, and my mother was a full-blooded woman, and I just had to talk when I reached this mundane sphere.

Ever since that hour at high noon on the 4th of March, when I was born a Member of this historic body, I have felt that I would love for my first speech in this House to be an earnest plea for an all-embracing Americanism. No one who was present can ever forget that hour. When the swing and the sweep of the patriotic war songs were yet upon the audience, when we had sung "America" and "The Star-Spangled Banner" with a zest and a spirit it seemed I had never heard before, when that mighty audience had been electrified beyond the power of words by that wonderful voice in the gallery that rang out like a silver bell above the chorus of thousands—and then when somebody devoutedly called for a serious note, and Uncle JOE CANNON—God bless him—sent the request that was a sermon from his honored gray hairs for us to sing "God be with you 'till we meet again," and tears, crystal with the light of the skies, flashed answer in a thousand eyes, with many Congressmen not ashamed of this tender evidence of reverence and love, I was gripped and swayed and "made over" by a scene that will make me a better American forevermore. I saw Republicans and Democrats, who but an hour before had been glaring at each other, scolding at each other across party lines, now merged into one great American brotherhood of God-fearing patriotism that would have made the spirits of Washington and Lafayette; of Abraham Lincoln, the typical American; and Henry W. Grady, who died, as John Temple Graves eloquently said, "literally loving a nation into peace," I tell you, my colleagues, it was enough to make these enthroned and immortal spirits, "who rule us from their urns," foregather yonder in the citadel of the eternities and lift new voice of praise and thanksgiving to the God of Nations! [Applause.]

> Till the boys come home—

And I came away from the holy impulses of that high and ardent hour, determined that I would never make a bitter, narrow, partisan speech on the floor of this House. And while I am a Democrat, without apology, and know why I am what I am, and while I expect to stand uncringingly for the fundamentals of my political faith, I here and now declare, what every other patriot in this House must surely feel, that the cardinal plank of my congressional creed will be an unselfish stand for 100 per cent Americanism and an emancipated humanity.

I indorse with all heartiness what I heard a great and good man say the other day—that he believed that the supremest need of this reconstruction Congress was a party armistice at least for the period of reconstruction legislation, a season when that intrepid spirit of fellowship that made young Democrats and young Republicans, scions of the bravest American sires, charge side by side up Vimy Ridge and up through the Argonne Forest against a common foe, may have opportunity here to do its perfect work as we build together for the future of America and the safety of all mankind. [Applause.]

That was a high day in American fellowship, a new era, if you will, in the prophecy of upward-reaching humanity, when William Howard Taft, a former Republican President, and Woodrow Wilson, the present Democratic President, walked arm in arm on the platform in New York and blended their honest hearts and mighty voices in behalf of peace for a war-stricken, sorrowing world. What a splendid picture, if war is ever splendid, when the legions of liberty became the legions of God as they fought side by side for the overthrow of selfish autocracy in order that the nuptials of Peace and Liberty might be celebrated in the Temple of Happiness among the children of men. And how much more splendid, surely the Prince of Peace must see, when the emancipated, enlightened nations of earth shall clasp their hands in a sacred covenant that swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, while the hungry heart of a forward-looking humanity shall climb daily upward in subjective and objective development—

Upward toward the better through God's restless tide of years.

Inasmuch as many honest but mistaken Americans in both parties have forgotten the issues involved long enough, and the path by which peace was won long enough, to call for America's President to stay away from the peace table during the most eventful crisis in the history of mankind, I find myself greatly inclined to ask these gentlemen, in all good fellowship, if they have forgotten who is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of this Republic? And I would like to know if it is not the right and the duty of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to go where the Army and Navy have already gone for the glory of the American flag and the battling legions of eternal right? [Applause.]

And I believe, too, that we face the challenge of a new national vigilance for the proper guardianship of that red-blooded Americanism which we champion to-day. Because I believe with Emerson that America is God's best national effort in behalf of the human race; because I believe that these American ideals should be kept pure and inviolate for all that they may mean to this Nation and humanity. I believe that in the reconstruction guardianship of the fruits of our victory no friend of Prussian autocracy and no sympathizer with a godless and flagless Bolshevism should be allowed to set foot on American soil for a thousand years. This is not a narrow policy; this is simply a sane application of the doctrine of "safety first." And for the sake of this "safety first" I believe that the 10,000,000 aliens in this country who have been content to seek their fortunes under the protecting ægis of the American flag, but who have refused to be assimilated by American ideals, should be dug up to the very last man and made to kiss the American flag that protects them or go back to the lands from which they came. [Applause.]

Thoughtful men are everywhere agreed that despite our baptism of sorrow, in which so many stars of service have been turned into stars of gold, America and Americans emerge from their part in the greatest war of history infinitely richer in our subjective life and infinitely stronger in the affections of mankind than if we had stood aloof while freedom shrieked and democracy wept and died. We have had the birth of a new patriotism. Time was when we looked upon the Stars and Stripes as a beautifully decorated flag, fit only to be given to the breezes on the Fourth of July; but now, since this flag has been dipped in human tears, drenched in human sorrow, and consecrated afresh by American blood, we look at our flag with a new devotion—often through "a mellow mist of tears"—as the insignia of a Nation's hopes and the emblem, thank God, of freedom everywhere. We have had the birth of a new national solidarity. It can never again be "North" and "South," as it used to be. Four boys in khaki stood on the sidewalk one night as I came down from my office in Atlanta. Throughout the war I have made it a rule, as many of you have done, to shake hands with soldiers on every side, and say to them, "I could not go to the front and fight, my boy, but I can give a handshake, wrapped up in a God bless you, to the boy who went or was ready to go for me. I shake hands with you for your mother and your country and hope you will be a soldier of the cross as well as a soldier of the flag."

And may I turn aside to say just here, Mr. Speaker, that I know but one thing more beautiful in all the world than the American flag; that is the American boy in uniform, who was willing to die to keep that flag floating over your home and mine. [Applause.] And I believe that the man who was "ready and rearing to go" is just as much a hero in spirit as the man who went over the top.

But back to my boys on the sidewalk. "Where are you from?" I asked of one. "Georgia," was the reply. "And you?" I asked of the second. "Georgia," came the answer. "And you?" I asked of No. 3. And with a voice as sharp as a knife blade he answered, "New York State." And the same answer came from No. 4. And then I put my arms around them all as near as I could and said: "This is one of the beautiful compensations that the war has brought—the sons of those that followed Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson and the sons of those that followed Grant and Sherman fighting side by side for one common flag and fraternizing together in a happy quartette of beautiful faith and friendship." This, Mr. Speaker, is the new Nation that we have to-day. And the last capstone in the temple of our new national fellowship will be laid in wonder and in joy—the wonder of the onlooking world and the joy of the children of all the gallant soldiers of the sixties who fought and fell on either side—when this Government shall declare that there shall be no longer any lines of cleavage between the loyal sons of "Uncle Sam"—that the same pension benefits shall be shared alike by the Blue and the Gray—for the fast-thinning lines of the soldiers of the South, "grizzled, grand, and gray," have marched in unmurmuring loyalty for half a hundred years to the Treasury of the Nation and helped to pay the pensions of their victorious brothers—yea, and have proven the limit of their unfailing Americanism by giving their sons and their grandsons through two victorious wars on the altar, thank God, of our common flag. [Applause.]

And we have brought out of the war another great blessing in the birth of a new world vision and fellowship, for we have learned that America can no more "draw her immaculate robes aside" and live apart from the rest of the world than China could build a wall around herself and live without national stagnation and international death.

But if I were called on to pack within one sentence humanity's greatest victory as the result of this war I would declare that it is a new discovery of the value of humanity itself. Through the weary centuries human life has been a chattel. A star-chamber session of kings and kinglets—a flip of a coin or a turn of the thumb—and nations, without warrant, without inclination, and without consultation, have been thrown at each other's throats before the rising of another sun. That day, thank God, is forever passed. And it is America's proud boast and her priceless heritage that she has helped to decree that never again shall small and helpless nations be changed overnight on the checkerboard of kings. But I believe, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that the greatest compensation that has come to America's inner life has been the birth of a new unselfishness and a new spiritual power. "Others," "others," "others"—this is the new word in the American vocabulary. It has been written anew on the lintels of the American heart and on the burnished ceiling of the American sky. [Applause.]

The sweetest story that has come to me among all the wonderful stories of faith and heroism that the war has furnished was brought by a wounded soldier fresh from France. He told my friend, Dr. W. F. Powell, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Asheville, of how a brave American boy had told him and his companions on the deck of the ship and around the camp fire in France of his last day with his mother in America—how they went together to church and sat together at the Lord's table. Together they heard the minister say, again and again, "This is my body broken for you." And then that brave American mother said as her first-born went away: "It is breaking my heart for you to go, my son, but it would break it worse, far worse, for you not to want to go. If you must die in freedom's cause, remember that your sacrifice is well pleasing to your Master, whose sacrificial death you commemorated to-day." Over the top the brave boy went, and was shot to pieces in no man's land, and was carried bleeding and dying to the emergency hospital, where Red Cross nurses and doctors supplied by your unselfish love bent over him with tender ministries to the very gates of death. And when one of the doctors came into the death chamber he smiled through his tears and said: "You can't tell me—I know that that Christian soldier saw his Savior face to face before he died. And casting his eyes on His broken and bleeding form he smiled like the dawn of the heaven into which he was going, and said, 'Lord Jesus, this is my body broken for you.'"

Ah, men and women of America, rejoicing to-day in our blood-bought freedom, let us determine as individual units in our great new-born national fellowship, in our measureless mission to the sons and daughters of men, that if our soldiers were ready to break their bodies for us and for humanity let us be ready to break our purses and all our selfish ideals in order that America may be kept clean for them—for those who stagger back to us maimed or blind, reaching out their hands for encouragement from the Nation for which they offered their all. We have learned that if it required a sober soldier to fight well it will require a sober citizen to live well, and this is America's new mission to the peoples who have been set free. It was a high note, Mr. Speaker, in the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] when he declared that the cost of this war—this colossal task thrust upon an unprepared and pacific Nation—is all forgotten in the glory of the victory that has been won; and to the sacred guardianship of the fruits of that victory we pledge again on this National Memorial Day "our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

This, Mr. Speaker, will be our most fitting, our most grateful, memorial of our heroic sons whose deathless valor we commemorate to-day! [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I have been deeply stirred by most eloquent remarks made by my colleagues on this Memorial Day. I know you will pardon me if to my mind there comes this thought—that the best way to honor the dead soldier is to protect the living, to take care of those who have been left to us, and those who are dependent upon the soldiers who died. The pay envelope of the soldier will be much more useful to his family if it has in it some of the coin of the realm and it is not filled entirely with glory. It is a beautiful thing and a due and proper thing to place flowers upon the graves of our dead, but it is up to the Congress of the United States in the next few weeks to provide flour and bacon and bread for the living. I trust it will not be improper to suggest on this sacred day the high duty that lies at the door of this Chamber to equalize and make just laws for those soldiers who have come back, to bring those back home who ought to be home, to hurry the confirmation of the treaty of peace, that American soldiers may be brought back to American shores. In my city there are 600 women who have sons or husbands in Siberia. You can do no greater honor to the men who died for this country than to bring back those boys from the country to which they were not sent by order of the Congress of the United States.

One of my friends, Lieut. Alfred M. Barlow, who has just left the gallery, decorated by medals of honor for bravery, who lost a leg; under our present laws, although he was a farmer and can never work at it again—under the law of compensation fixed by Congress he will enjoy the magnificent income of $7.50 per month. He was a volunteer soldier. If a man in the Regular Army, of the same rank, met with the same misfortune he would draw fifteen times that amount for life. Let us correct some of these things; let us pledge ourselves on this Decoration Day to satisfy the mothers of the boys who are buried over there. I know I realize the heroic desire to those who wish to educate the mothers that it is heroic to leave their sons' remains over there; but, Mr. Speaker, human nature is the same the world over. The mother's love wants her son's remains brought back. It lies at the door of this Chamber to see to it that it is done, and that the son of the poorest mother shall have the same chance, and the same opportunity, and the same honor, of being brought back by his Government as the son of those more prosperous in life.

There are 10,000 questions pressing upon us now; and may I not ask in this one minute that is given to me that we pledge ourselves within the splendid thought of my colleague who has just taken his seat and forget partisanship, forget everything but the actual debt that we owe to the loved and to the dead, and that the highest honor we can pay to the soldiers who made the sacrifice is to deal justly and fairly with the old Grand Army of the Republic, the Spanish War veterans, and the soldiers of this war who are left living with us? [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I am an American, proud of my country, its past, its present, and its future, for I believe it is now and is destined to continue to be the greatest force for good among all the Governments of the world. To-day we call from the mists of memory into the strong light of appreciation our reverence for the American soldier, living and dead, who has given of his service in order that liberty and justice might be preserved to his fellow men.

This is Memorial Day, in which the beautiful custom of decorating with flowers the graves of our soldier heroes is observed.

From the Southland, after the Civil War, over grave of friend and erstwhile foe, first came this expression of floral tribute and rapidly did spread until now there is not a village, hamlet, or countryside which does not participate in the celebration of this national holiday. This year Memorial Day has a much greater significance than ever before, for not only are the great transports on sea hurrying to bring home to their loved ones the young men who marched in battle array in lands across the sea in order that our great governmental institutions might be preserved for us through all time and the sacred rights of American citizens be so firmly established that no monarch could question them even with the backing of powerful military forces, and in order that the very spirit of military oppression be crushed, lest in the end it crush us, a great free people, but also because overseas are sleeping in soil which should be ceded American territory the bodies of thousands of American boys who can never return to us in life, but whose services will be cherished throughout all America so long as its history shall endure.

By these our national life has been made rich and its richness in loyalty, unselfishness, and sacrifice acknowledged by the nations of the world. Wherever our flag flies to-day there are rejoicings and tears, but always appreciation for the gallant American man at arms who has never fought a fight in which he did not believe he was in the right. This for man and nation is the final accomplishment. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is quite superfluous for me to say that I cordially indorse the sentiments expressed in these resolutions. I think we are all agreed that the thanks of Congress and of the country are justly due to those who carried our flag to victory across the sea, and to all those at home, here or elsewhere, who aided in achieving the great victory over autocratic power and the rule of force. It is to be hoped that never again can the peace of the world be overthrown or ruthlessly assailed by an outlaw nation.

It is quite appropriate that to-day, in these exercises, the distinguished gentleman who now occupies the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, should preside over this meeting, for he affords a striking example of the patriotic young men of America who gladly offered all for the honor and glory of the American flag. He gave up his seat in Congress to go out and take his chance as a private soldier and won deserved promotion from the ranks by reason of his splendid service, and we are all glad to-day that his constituents at home in his absence recognized his service and returned him to his seat in Congress. All honor to such as he; all honor to the young heroes of to-day whom we are endeavoring to decorate with flowers—of oratory. [Applause.]

I feel that there is little that I can say that will add anything to what is embodied in these resolutions and what has already been said more eloquently than I could hope to say it in favor of the unanimous adoption of the resolutions; but I am reminded that to-day is Memorial Day, a day sacred to all soldiers, living and dead, of every war, and wherever they may be, or wherever they may sleep in sacred ground. I just noticed sitting in front of me a little while ago the kindly face of our much-loved Chaplain of the House, who served as a private soldier in the great Civil War from 1861 to 1865. I thought I saw, from his expression, that his mind reverted, as mine did, back to those days of the Civil War, when, in answer to the call of Father Abraham, the young men of the North rallied to the support of the flag and gladly volunteered to risk their all for the preservation of the Union under the Constitution. I know our Chaplain was thinking that this was Memorial Day, given over orginally, after the close of the Civil War, to decorating the graves of the Union soldiers who fell in defense of the flag. He was thinking of his comrades of the days gone by who had crossed over to the other shore and who had pitched their tents on the shores of that land from which none ever return.

Memorial Day was first established by proclamation of the then commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in 1868, the gallant soldier and statesman, John A. Logan, who called upon his comrades to assemble that year and each succeeding year for the purpose of decorating with the choicest flowers of springtime the graves of those who had given up their lives that the Republic might live.

It is now more than 50 years since the close of that great war that established for all time the doctrine that the United States is a Nation, one and indivisible, and able to maintain itself as a great independent Nation among the nations of the earth under the Constitution established by the forefathers. While I fully agree to the well-deserved thanks of the Congress and the people to the young heroes of the recent war, and while I agree that nothing we can say or do is too good for them, yet I would not forget, and we must not forget, what we owe to the old heroes of the Civil War, who are facing to-day the sunset of life, but who in the years agone, before most of the Members of this House were born, carried the flag of this country to victory on many a hard-fought battle ground and saved and perpetuated this American Union. What does Decoration Day mean to us?

WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO YOU?

What does it mean, this marching past
Of a few old men who are bent and grave?
You have heard of the host that was proud and vast
And you see the banners that brightly wave;
You have heard men glibly extol the brave
Who endeared the Gray and honored the Blue;
You have heard of the cause that was lost and won,
But what is the lesson you teach your son,
And what is the meaning of this to you?

What does it mean, this trudging by
Of a few old men who will cease ere long
To march to the graves where their comrades lie
Or to hear the cheers of the careless throng?
But what is the lesson your son has learned,
And what is the meaning of this to you?

They offered all that the brave may give,
Where the selfish prey and the timid pause;
Dearer to them than the right to live
Was the right to die in their country's cause!
The crowd is granting them its applause,
Thinking that thus they receive their due;
They have given much and have not complained,
But what is the lesson your son has gained,
And what is the meaning to you?

What is the meaning to us of this Memorial Day that is being celebrated to-day in every city, town, and hamlet over the length and breadth of the land, and wherever the soldiers of the Republic may lie, sleeping their last long sleep, either in the soil of the land for which they died, or across the sea where they fought and died in the cause of humanity; for more than 50,000 of our brave young men, the flower of the land, are sleeping to-day beneath the sod of a foreign land, where they made the supreme sacrifice? The meaning to me is just this, that, in the language of Abraham Lincoln, "government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." [Applause.] And, Mr. Speaker, I would add to that, for the purpose of making it more explicit so far as we in this country are concerned, so that it would read: Government of the people of the United States, government for the people of the United States, and government by the people of the United States, shall not perish from the earth. [Applause.]

This is our country, established upon the doctrine that the people themselves are sovereign and have the absolute and undisputed right to dictate the form of their own government and to maintain the same without foreign interference, holding friendly relations with the peoples of all the earth, but entering into no entangling alliances with foreign powers, whose governments and interests are not the same as ours. I have no Utopian dreams of a great international government that shall control and dictate the affairs of this American Republic. I would not, if I could have my way, give my consent under any circumstances whatever to delegating to a coterie of self-elected men sitting around a table in some gilded palace across the Atlantic any single sovereign right that belongs exclusively to the people of the United States. The independence of this country was achieved by our forefathers through years of sacrifice and war. It was maintained at the cost of the blood and treasure of our people in the Civil War. I would not yield that independence, no matter what it might cost to maintain it in the future. I am an American first and all the time, and I believe in the American people and in their right to self-government without the aid or consent of any other nation on earth; and I believe that the will and the wishes of the American people should in the future, as in the past, control the destinies of this Nation.

Fifty-four years ago this month, after the close of the great Civil War, this city witnessed the greatest parade that has ever passed down historic Pennsylvania Avenue, when our victorious soldiers of the Armies of the Tennessee and of Georgia, 200,000 strong, marched down the Avenue in the great review before President Johnson and Gen. Grant and other famous men of the Nation. The victory had been won; the Union had been maintained; rebellion had been crushed; but in the flush of victory there was grief profound that so many of the comrades of the marchers had made the supreme sacrifice and yielded up their lives on the battle fields of the South and that the great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, had passed over to the other shore only a little while before that historic and victorious parade. On that occasion a great banner was hung across the front of this Capitol Building, and on it was this inscription:

The only national debt we can never pay is the debt we owe the victorious Union soldiers.

To-day I repeat that the only national debt we can never pay is the debt we owe to the gallant soldiers, sailors, and marines of past wars, as well as to those of the recent World War, the young heroes who have added new luster to the American flag, and who on foreign soil have carried that flag to victory and gloriously upheld American ideals. I most sincerely hope that there may never be another World War or another occasion when the young men of this land may be called upon to offer up their lives in the cause of humanity or in defense of our liberties and our institutions. We must not forget that we have certain duties to perform here at home, and one of these duties that devolves upon us, the representatives of the American people, is to see now and for all time to come that no man who risked his life and his all for the cause of his country shall ever suffer want. [Applause.] In the words of Abraham Lincoln, we should keep constantly in mind our duty "to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan." We can not pay this debt to the heroes of this war or of any war all at once; it will extend, of necessity, through years of time, and so long as the last one of the country's defenders remains alive. But it is a duty that we should ever have in mind, and we should give particular thought and care now, not alone to our returning heroes of the late war, but also to the veterans of the Spanish War and their widows and orphans, and to the old heroes of the Civil War in their declining years, and to the widows of those who have passed away. This is a sacred duty devolving upon Congress, and I believe that it will be faithfully met.

We are glad to honor the young men who are now returning from across the sea to reenter the ordinary civil pursuits which they left when they answered their country's call. Out in my own State of Illinois this has been a memorable week, for the Prairie Division has just returned, covered with honor and glory from its service in France, and the people are extending to them a heartfelt and cordial welcome. They have served their country with honor and distinction, and the people of that State welcome them home with open arms, tinged, however, with sadness for some who bear the scars and wounds of battle and for others who went away in the flush and strength of manhood but who will return no more.

Another event of note occurred in my own home town this week, when the surviving members of the old Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry held their annual reunion. These reunions have been held every year on the date when that regiment was mustered into the service, May 24. A few years ago there were usually several hundred survivors of that regiment at their annual reunion. This week there were only 21 of all that number alive and able to be present. And so everywhere the ranks of that grand army of the Union are being depleted year by year, and it will be but a few years before the last one will have fought his last battle and gone to join his comrades on the golden shores of the New Jerusalem. Their places will be filled by the survivors of the late war, who, following the example of their sires, will no doubt by their future course win in civil life as they have in their country's service the plaudits and approval of all, and I trust that they will see to it that the liberty and independence of this great country shall be perpetuated and continue forever and forever.

I wish here to express more specifically than do the pending resolutions my own appreciation—and I know every Member of this House will feel the same way—of the splendid cooperation of the women of America in their voluntary service in promoting the comfort and well-being of our soldiers, sailors, and marines during the late war; to the Red Cross nurses and workers, to all those who gave their time and their services, freely and patriotically, they are deserving of all praise. The good they accomplished was beyond price, and they, one and all, who so served, justly deserve the special thanks of the Nation.

And now in closing I wish to say one word more for the old veterans of the Civil War and for the widows of those who have fought the last battle and passed over to the great beyond. They are all, or very nearly all, past the allotted age of man. Many of them are dependent upon the pensions granted by a grateful Government for the services rendered in the country's time of need. In many cases the pensions now granted are not sufficient to furnish them with the ordinary necessities of life. This country is great and rich and powerful. It should do full justice to these old men and women. Their numbers are growing less every day that passes. I favor, and I hope Congress will favor, a minimum pension of $50 per month to every surviving veteran of that war, and of $30 per month to every widow of a Civil War veteran. That would about close the chapter as to Civil War pensions, and I hope this Congress will take such action.

But my time has expired, and I think perhaps I have suggested quite enough for the time being, and will only say in closing that to-day we have for our heroic soldiers, sailors, and marines of all wars but one sentiment:

Cheers for the living,
Tears for the dead!

[Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN].

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a nation without its heroes or a nation without traditions will be a nation without history and without ideals. It is as a dream when we think back but a few months ago, after the declaration of war, when the Congress was called upon to pass the selective-draft law, when, after the great drawing had taken place here in Washington, we saw America's young manhood answering the call of their country. They went with the determination to accomplish the purpose for which they had been selected. They went without fear of the results. I stood and watched them as they gathered at the stations. There were heart-rending scenes. I saw the wife cling to the parting husband. I saw little children kissing the father good-by. I saw them as they loaded onto the train and I saw it as it sped away from the station. I saw the waving of hands, and in many instances it was a fond farewell; it was the last wave of the hand. We heard them in this Capital as they came trooping through, with the enthusiasm of youth. We heard them yelling their hurrahs as they went through this city by the thousands, trainload after trainload. Members of this House heard them through the midnight hours, in the morning's dawn, as they were rushing to the seaboard to take passage across the sea. We saw them at the ports of embarkation as they marched down and went aboard the transports, and to thousands of them it was a strange experience. Coming from the far interior of this great Republic, it was the first time many of them had ever looked upon the briny waters of the Atlantic Ocean. It was a new experience to them as they went aboard ship for the first time, and I imagine there were heart throbs experienced as they looked out upon the ocean, as they passed out of the harbor, and looked perhaps for the last time upon the Statue of Liberty in the harbor of New York. The hearts of the American fathers and mothers went with them through their perilous journey, and watched as the days went by to see if they had arrived safely across, and the anxious fathers and mothers of the country waited for the card which came back to say that they had landed safely in France.

To-day the mothers and fathers of the boys who sleep in France have a peculiar lonely feeling. Theirs is that feeling that can be only felt by the father and mother who have given up their offspring forever. This morning's sun shed its beams upon 60,000 lonely homes in America and thousands upon thousands of our Allies. There never was in the minds of the American people any doubt as to the outcome of the conflict. There was never any doubt as to what was to be the final outcome of this war. It did not make Americans tremble to see the reports of the onward advance of the Huns. America had fought before under great disadvantages and had fought under great trials and difficulties, but never since this Republic has been founded has it been the lot of these God-fearing people to go down into defeat. It has been given to us to hear above the battle roar the scream of the American eagle proclaiming victory.

No poor word of mine uttered here can do any good to the soldiers who have "gone west." No poor words of mine in eulogy can do the living soldier any good. The only way for American Congressmen to show their real true appreciation of the American soldier who has won this war is to walk up like men and vote for legislation that will do them substantial good. We have had enough of words already. [Applause.] The fathers and mothers of these soldiers made great sacrifices, and as was said by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], we must look to the kind of men their fathers were to know the kind of men and soldiers they are. One of the things that has touched me deeply since this war has closed has been the fact that two sons of two distinguished Americans met in St. Louis to organize a great legion—the son of that illustrious man, Theodore Roosevelt, one of America's greatest citizens, and the son of our beloved minority leader, ex-Speaker CHAMP CLARK. These two men have joined together to uplift the American soldier and to bring his cause to the attention of the American people. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some little rivalry or envy now since the war is over as to who played the most important part. Time will efface all of that. At present in the Army there is rivalry as to who should have this position or that position, and there are bitter feelings here and yonder in individual cases, but time will efface it all, for the time will come in this country when the proudest boast of its citizenship will be uttered in the words "My father was a member of the A. E. F."

It will be the proud boast of the young men of America in the the future. Gentlemen, let me say that no monument that can be carved by the sculptor of Parian marble, no image that can be wrought by the cunning hand of genius, will be sufficient to record and perpetuate the memory of these men. They do not need it. They have already erected in the hearts of the American people—not alone America, but in the hearts of all well and right thinking people in the world—a monument to their bravery, to their dauntless courage, to their self-sacrifice, that will live on and on and will live when time shall be no more and their long sleep is ended when the trump shall call us to the judgment bar. [Applause.]

In the great drama of the war the illustrious sons of Oklahoma played their parts with such marked courage and bravery as to not only reflect great credit upon the new Commonwealth but won the admiration of the brave men of the world.

The greater portion of the Oklahoma troops were in the Thirty-sixth and Ninetieth Divisions. Both divisions saw heavy fighting, and both suffered many casualties.

These divisions are returning to America, and the anxious fathers and mothers of Oklahoma and Texas are counting the hours until their returning sons will cross their thresholds and be at home again. The parents and loved ones of those who were left sleeping in the soil of France are bravely choking their sobs of anguish and checking their tears of sorrow.

To these latter our hearts go out in this hour of their bereavement, but in it all and through it all we can see a brighter side. I can hear the persuasive voice of Henry Clay saying:

> They were fighting a great moral battle for the benefit not only of their country but of all mankind. The eyes of the whole world were fixed upon them.

And the overpowering eloquence of Daniel Webster declaring:

> They consecrated their work to the spirit of national independence, and that they wished that the light of peace might rest upon it forever. They went, as Americans, to mark a spot which must forever be dear to them and their posterity.

In my dreams I can see them dressed in glorious garments, wearing garlands on their brows. I can see them listening to the songs of the birds amid beautiful trees. I can see them lying down on beds of roses listening to the music of falling waters, and in the harmony of human voices I hear these words, "Blessed are they who die for their country."

Mr. Speaker, among the 70 men who were awarded the congressional honors out of the 2,000,000 American soldiers in France, 3 of these were awarded to Oklahoma men.

They were Samuel M. Sampler, of Mangum, Okla.; Lieut. George P. Hays, of Okarche, Okla.; and Corpl. Harold L. Turner, of Seminole, Okla. It is with great pride that I mention the name of Corpl. Turner, because he is one of Seminole County's boys who fought along with her other sons in Company F, of the One hundred and forty-second Infantry. Many of his companions lie buried near St. Ettienne, alongside the heroic sons of Lincoln County. It is there that the gallant Harrison and brave Matheny fell leading their men to victory in the face of tremendous odds.

Their mute and silent resting places are marked by little wooden crosses, typifying that Christian civilization for the preservation of which they died.

In the words of Annette Kohn, let me conclude:

"In Flanders fields, where poppies blow,"
In France, where beauteous roses grow,
There let them rest—forever sleep—
While we eternal vigil keep
With our hearts' love, with our souls' prayer,
For all our fallen "over there."
The morning sun will guild with light,
The stars keep holy watch at night,
The winter spread soft pall of snow,
The summer flowers about them grow,
The birds sing their sweet springtime call—
God's love and mercy guard them all.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, throughout the length and breadth of this land to-day everywhere—

We will scatter flowers of kind remembrance
Over the graves of our heroic dead,
And burnish bright on memory's tablet
The cause for which their blood was shed.

This beautiful memorial observance was initiated at the close of the late Civil War for the purpose of decorating the graves and revering the memory of those who fell in that conflict and has grown in popularity with the passing years and has been extended in scope until all those who have fallen or died in all the wars in which our country has participated are likewise honored and revered upon this sacred day. Throughout this eastern country, in hamlet and in city cemeteries as well, wherever rests the remains of a Revolutionary soldier or a soldier of the War of 1812, notwithstanding the fact that all of their comrades and relatives, too, have passed beyond, some one places a laurel wreath in token of a loving memory. Likewise in far-away Mexico, where our blood was shed for the benefit of a greater America and the extension of our civilization upon this continent, there, too, is reverence paid by some gentle and loving hand. Likewise to those who fell in the Civil War, whether they sleep amid the northern pines or rest beneath the greensward of the southern valley, some loving hand pays a tribute there this day. And so with those who fell in the War with Spain and in our various Indian wars. Now a new and greater significance is added to this sacred day, but what a mockery it will be in the years to come unless some affirmative action is taken by this Congress to see to it that those who rest in the far-away land of France are brought back for their final rest here at home. One of the sacred promises which was made by this Government, that was made upon this floor and upon the floor of the other body, was that when this war was over and when this world strife should cease that the remains of those boys who fell in action should be brought back to their several homes. I know it has been stated by many that this should not be done; that it will be a gruesome and unpleasant task; but even if this be true, it should not prevent our fulfillment of promise and duty.

Many will agree with Theodore Roosevelt and his good wife when they said, "Let the tree remain where it falls"; but there are thousands and thousands of mothers in this country who can not subscribe to such a sentiment as that, and our promise so sacredly made then should be as sacredly carried out now. [Applause.] By reason of a law enacted by France years and years ago it is absolutely impossible to take and exhume a body of any of our soldiers who were buried in France and bring them out of that country, and unless that law is changed those boys who are buried on French soil will have to remain over there. Diligent endeavor has been made by those in authority in our Government to see if some modification or repeal of this unreasonable law may be had, but up to this time the French authorities have remained like adamant and refused absolutely to change it by either repeal or modification. I can not believe that that country, for which this country gave so much, will much longer persist in the observance of this law. I appeal to the mothers of France, I appeal to the fathers of France, I appeal to all those in authority there to remember that upon this side of the sea there are hearts that are aching like those that are aching upon that side. To-day throughout that country those who are living can go to the little green spots that sepulcher their loved ones and in a measure appease their anguish. The fathers and mothers in America who so freely gave their sons are entitled to have that same holy privilege, and I think there is nothing that we can do that would add more to our respect for the living and the dead than to pledge ourselves to-day to the fathers and mothers of this country that we will see to it that their boys are brought back, and, if necessary, that some affirmative action is taken by the Congress of the United States to direct the attention of France to the duty that she owes, not only to herself but to this country and the world, to remove the obstacle that now stands in the way. I was coming up the Avenue the other day and I met a funeral cortege. I supposed from the appearance of the troop of Cavalry that was with it and from the coffin draped with the Stars and Stripes that they were carrying with military honors some soldier boy of ours to his last resting place. I soon discovered, however, that it was a soldier son of Italy killed in an accident in Ohio. His remains rested at Arlington until the war was over and opportunity could be afforded to have his remains taken back to the land that gave him birth. They should be just as respectful of our desires and our rights over there and see to it that the remains of the boys who did so much for them and the world are brought back to this country of ours, so that when these observances occur in the years to come that those who gave them may go to their several resting places and pay the homage that their glorious deeds and sacrifice has entitled each and all of them to receive. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in previous years this day was not very generally observed in the South. In the Southern States another day is set apart for memorial exercises, when the loyal women of the South decorate the graves of the heroes of the Confederacy and decorate also the graves of those Union soldiers whose bodies were not removed from the South to national cemeteries. On the day I left my home in Aiken, S. C., I noticed in the Baptist churchyard the graves of Union soldiers covered with flowers, placed there on the day previous by the Daughters of the Confederacy. And, my friends, I am told by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, Judge TOWNER, that it was such action on the part of the women of the South a few years after the war that gave to Gen. Logan the inspiration to initiate the movement to have this day, May 30, set apart as the Memorial Day for the Nation. But while there has heretofore been no general observance of this day in the South, I know that this year it has a new significance for the people of that section, for during the past year the sons of the South in common with the sons of the North have paid the supreme sacrifice in the service of the United States Government. To-day the thoughts of the American people are across the sea at the cemeteries of Romagne, Thiacourt, and Le Cartelet, where sleep the sons of America who died that we might live, and the hearts of the American people are with those on this side of the sea who grieve for loved ones who will never return.

Out of this cruel war this good will come, that this Nation will be united as never before, united not only by constitutional provisions, but united by the tie that binds—by the blood of our boys shed in a common cause. Evidence of this reunited spirit I have seen in the county where I reside, whose people have followed the fortunes of the Pennsylvania troops trained in the adjacent city of Augusta, Ga., at Camp Hancock, with an interest second only to the interest evinced in the troops of our own State, and at Spartanburg, S. C., where the people have ever shown an affectionate interest in the welfare of the New York division, which was trained at Camp Wadsworth, near Spartanburg.

To-day the people of the South join the people of all other sections in paying tribute to the American soldier, wherever he hails from, the living and the dead. But, my friends, while paying tribute to the American soldier it is only natural that reference has been made by Members to the achievements of the soldiers from their respective States.

On this day our thoughts naturally revert to home, to those people whose lives form so intimate a part of our own lives and who to-day either rejoice at the safe return of some loved one or grieve that he will never return. To-day the Eighty-first Division, composed of South Carolinians, is on the sea. I share the joy of those who anticipate an early reunion with loved ones serving in that division, and my heart goes out in sympathy to those who know that though their sons left home with that division they will not return, that their bodies rest in the cemetery at Romagne, in the Argonne Forest, where this division in the closing days of the war won imperishable glory for itself and for American arms.

The sons of South Carolina went with another division, the Thirtieth, composed of National Guard troops of Tennessee, North Carolina, and South Carolina, and as long as bravery and gallantry excite the admiration of men and women, so long will song and story tell of the achievements of that division. In the fortunes of war to this division was assigned the duty of attacking the Hindenburg line in the early fall of 1918. Brigaded with the veteran troops of Australia they went into that most sanguinary conflict with an enthusiasm and courage that won the admiration and the plaudits of the English Army. With machine gun and cannon in front of them, with death-dealing aircraft above them, and exploding mines beneath them, into battle they went. And the spirit of Lee hovered over them and the life of Jackson inspired them as they threw themselves into the conflict and smashed for the first time the presumably impregnable Hindenburg line.

Mr. Speaker, I recently wrote to the War Department and asked for a list of the soldiers to whom there had been awarded the congressional medal of honor. This is the highest honor that can be bestowed upon an American soldier. I hold that list in my hand and it shows that while we had in France at the time of the signing of the armistice 2,000,000 men, only 70 were awarded the congressional medal of honor. This list gives not only the name but the organization and home address of our heroes, and I know that my colleagues will pardon my expression of joy when I state that it shows that out of the 70 medals awarded the American Army 6 were awarded to sons of South Carolina, who served in the One hundred and eighteenth Infantry, Thirtieth Division, a greater number than was awarded to any other regiment in the service of the Government. [Applause.]

The names of those six men I shall read to the House:

James C. Dozier, first lieutenant, Company G, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry; home address, 524 Asnafrel Street, Rock Hill, S. C.

Richmond H. Hilton, sergeant, Company M, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry; home address, Westville, S. C.

Gary Evans Foster, sergeant, Company F, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry; home address, Inman, S. C.

John C. Villapigue, corporal, Company M, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry; home address, 1517 Lyttleton Street, Camden, S. C.

James D. Heriot (deceased), corporal, Company I, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry; home address, R. F. D. 1, Providence, S. C.

Thomas Lee Hall, sergeant, Company G, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry; home address, R. F. D. 4, Fort Mill, S. C.

My friends, I do not recite these facts to disparage the achievements of other divisions or organizations of the Army. There is glory enough for all, and the success of any unit of the Army is the success of the American people. But I recite these facts that they may be recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and that the House and the country may know that these sons of South Carolina, carrying into battle that flag against which their fathers fought half a century ago, by their sacrifice demonstrated their devotion to this reunited country, and by their gallantry and bravery won the undying admiration of the people of South Carolina and, I hope, of the people of America. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET].

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, without disparagement to the soldiers of other countries, I do not believe that I am going too far when I say that the war just closed has demonstrated that the American soldier is without a peer in the annals of warfare.

When the Lusitania was sunk and American lives were lost the question naturally arose, Will the people of this country resent with force this unwarranted attack upon innocent babes, defenseless women, and noncombatant men of neutral nations? When American rights were being violated and disregarded by a ruthless submarine warfare; when the institutions of our time and the civilization of our age were confronted by an armed monster whose armies were endeavoring to overrun all Europe and subjugate its people; when terrorism seemed to grip the souls of the strongest men; when the American Congress on April 6, 1917, declared war against the Imperial German Government the question trembled on the lips of every lover of democracy and liberty, Will the great Republic defend itself? Will it stand true to its traditions and protect the rights of its citizens on land and sea? Can the people of a republic habituated to the avocations of peace and the teachings of Christianity be aroused from a lethargy of profound indifference to take part in a war 3,000 miles away and build a fighting machine that would be the equal of or superior to the greatest fighting machine the world has ever seen? In short, can a government of the people, by the people, and for the people meet this the supremest test of the ages? What is the answer?

Uncle Sam, like a mighty giant, awoke as from a troubled dream, rubbed his drowsy eyes for a moment, straightened to full height, and girded his loins for the contest, while the fires of righteous indignation raged within his bosom and shook convulsively his majestic frame. Sublime manifestations of an unconquered and unconquerable spirit! Indifference vanished, debating ceased, unity of thought and purpose became the watchword of the hour. The time for action was at hand.

The people of the United States—the children of liberty, the disciples of Washington and Lincoln—marshaled their hosts and resources. When the Nation demanded soldiers we behold them coming from every Middlesex village and farm; from the workshop, the counter, and the bar; from the hovel on the hillside and the mansion on the square; from the cotton fields of the South, the great prairies of the West, and from New England's historic hills. We behold them as they cross 3,000 miles of sea infested with submarines. We behold them upon the gory fields of that great war. We are with them at Chateau-Thierry, Vaux, Belleau Wood, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne Forest. "We are with them in the trenches running red with blood, in the whirlwind of the charge, where men become iron with nerves of steel." We will never know what they suffered and endured; we will never fully realize the privations that they underwent and the perils that they encountered until victory came.

We committed the flag of the Republic to their care and keeping, on foreign soil, and all that it represents—the flag that had never known defeat. They brought it back to us in honor, without a stain upon its folds, and in a blaze of glory. [Applause.] They demonstrated that a free people can and will defend themselves when the principles of their institutions are jeopardized and the rights of the citizens are unjustly assailed. They settled the greatest question of all time in favor of the stability and perpetuity of free institutions. It is now an established fact that a nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal can and will maintain itself against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

When the war began the American soldier was an unknown quantity in Europe. When the war was over an admiring world paid homage to his daring, his perseverance, his initiative, and his courage. Before the war they said he would not fight. After the war they said there was nothing he could not fight. They said we could not transport an army across 3,000 miles of sea. We did. They said we could not feed 1,000,000 men in Europe. We fed 2,000,000 men in Europe, and a part of the time the armies of those associated with us. They said our soldiers could not stand up against the trained soldiers of Germany. We answered that challenge by annihilating the Prussian Guards, the flower of the German Army. [Applause.]

When we entered the war the monarchies of Germany and Austria-Hungary were in the ascendancy. When the war closed the thrones of Europe were tottering to their fall and their rulers were fugitives from justice, fleeing in disguise and disgrace from the wrath and scorn of their own subjects and the hate and execration of an infuriated and outraged world.

Instead of monarchies we behold the formation of republics. Instead of the downtrodden and oppressed we behold faces beaming with the hope of better days to come.

Instead of militarism we behold men returning to the avocations of peace. We behold the spirit of freedom, with its gentle and impartial hand, marking out the nations of the world.

We behold the principles of government for which Washington and Lincoln contended triumphant among the sons of men. [Applause.]

The American soldier! He has honored us; may we honor him. We must never forget those who fought in this Great War.

> The tumult and the shouting dies—
> The captains and the kings depart—
> Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
> An humble and a contrite heart.
> Lord God of Hosts be with us yet,
> Lest we forget—lest we forget.

[Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I intended to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], but it seems he is not here. I suppose he is coming later. I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, as I listen to the splendid addresses here to-day, exceptionally eloquent and patriotic, there recurs in my mind the immortal address of our martyred President, Abraham Lincoln, on the battle field of Gettysburg:

> The world will little know, nor long remember, what we say here.

But as long as the human race endures upon this planet humanity will gratefully remember what our American boys did during this war. [Applause.]

This is the greatest Memorial Day in all the history of our country, and it is exceptionally fitting for the Congress of the United States to hold this memorial service on this Memorial Day. Personally, I have felt for many months that we were a little derelict in not holding these exercises sooner. I introduced a resolution last September (H. Con. Res. 52) providing for a memorial session of this kind by both the Senate and House; but there seemed to be no suitable opportunity to consider it during that session or during the short session last winter.

You may all know that the English Government for hundreds of years has at the close of every war held a memorial session of the British Parliament. During this war they decided that owing to the sublime courage of her sons, the frightful casualties, and the barbarous nature of the enemies' atrocities it was appropriate to hold memorial services earlier and not wait for the close of the war. So, on the 29th of October, 1917, the British Parliament held a memorial session to express the Empire's gratitude and commemorate the distinguished services and heroism of the British Army and Navy.

The little party of 10 Congressmen, of which I was one, who were the first to visit the western front, in October and November, 1917, were honored by being given reserved seats on the floor of Parliament to listen to those memorial exercises, and we heard that marvelously eloquent memorial address of Premier David Lloyd-George, which will go down in history as one of the greatest addresses ever delivered in the world. It was in that speech that he paid that magnificent tribute to the aviators as "the cavalry of the clouds." I have here a copy of the Parliamentary Debates of the House of Commons of that date, which is similar to our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and, strange to say, that address might fittingly be slightly paraphrased and delivered in our exercises here to-day. He referred to and compared this war with the various other wars of the world. He referred to our own Civil War. He complimented the campaigns of Stonewall Jackson and other officers and campaigns of our Civil War, and then showed how really insignificant, relatively speaking, all the wars in history had been, both in numbers engaged, character of warfare, and results, as compared with this war and the fiendish barbarity that our boys and those of our Allies have had to endure; and, as he said then, it seems that when we consider the kind of hardships and the terrific conditions which our men had to face it is almost unbelievable that so few of the survivors became insane. To see, or even read about, what our boys have gone through, days and nights in mud and water, engulfing quagmires and morasses, under a constant hailstorm of terrific machine-gun fire and ceaseless thunderbolts from powerful artillery, it is a marvel that the delicate and sensitive mechanism of the human nerve and mind could endure them without derangement.

But, my colleagues, it is not by words only that we should display our appreciation of our sons at this time and in this Congress; it is the deeds that will hereafter count. We will in the future be judged by what we do, not by what we say. I sincerely hope this Congress and the membership of this House will have patriotism enough and will be nonpartisan enough, be big enough Americans, to rise to the occasion and demonstrate to the world that we are worthy to represent such splendid young men as the millions we put into this war; that we are worthy to represent the greatest Nation on the face of the earth; that in this legislative restoration, readjustment, and reconstruction period we will measure up to the traditions of our splendid country; and that the boys may always have the feeling that we at home were worthy of the sacrifices which they made. That is what will count in the future. It is what we in Congress do during the next year or two in showing our appreciation, our ability, our patriotism, our courage, and our determination to measure up to what we ought to be and do that will count. The glorious dead of our country's wars sleep with their duty done; ours lie yet before us.

I earnestly hope that this Congress will not attempt to traffic in the blood of these boys by trying to make partisan capital out of them. That is the only danger I see on the horizon. I do hope that we will legislate as a great American patriotic legislative body should.

There is one disquieting thought that comes to my mind—I do not know whether it occurs to others or not—but when I think of the period which President Lincoln went through during our Civil War and reflect upon the way he was misrepresented and mistreated and the contemptuous disrespect that was accorded to him during that time and realize the honor that has been paid to him by the entire civilized world ever since, with all due respect, I can not help feeling mindful of a not very dissimilar condition existing in some places at the present time. And when I see in the leading morning daily paper of this city—the Washington Post—this morning the President's splendid message cabled by him yesterday from Paris to the American people published in small type in the central part of an inside page, with an insignificant heading and mixed among unimportant articles, I can not help feeling that possibly history may repeat itself and that hereafter the President of the United States may be accorded a great deal more consideration, distinction, and honor by the world than he is now being accorded by some people and some partisan papers in the superb and heroic work that he is doing for our Republic, for the human race, and for human liberty on this earth.

I have always had a supreme contempt for narrow, vindictive, and disloyal partisanship, and I am going to here venture the prophecy that no man will make a creditable historic name for himself by traducing the splendid efforts or the name of the first citizen of the civilized world to-day.

As no one else has referred to it, I am going to read to the House and into the RECORD the President's brief cable message to the American people, as follows:

My fellow countrymen, Memorial Day this year wears an added significance, and I wish, if only by a message, to take part with you in its observation and in expressing the sentiments which it inevitably suggests. In observing the day we commemorate not only the reunion of our own country but also the liberation of the world from one of the most serious dangers to which free government and the free life of men were ever exposed.

We have buried the gallant and now immortal men who died in this great war of liberation with a new sense of consecration. Our thoughts and purposes now are consecrated to the maintenance of the liberty of the world and of the union of its people in a single comradeship of liberty and of right. It was for this that our men conscientiously offered their lives. They came to the field of battle with the high spirit and pure heart of crusaders. We must never forget the duty that their sacrifice has laid upon us of fulfilling their hopes and their purposes to the utmost. This, it seems to me, is the impressive lesson and inspiring mandate of the day.

WOODROW WILSON.

[Applause.]

And I trust the speech which the President is delivering to-day at the graves of our fallen heroes in France will also be inserted in the RECORD to-morrow. No human eloquence can ever do justice to their fame or describe the debt which humanity owes to the more than 50,000 of our bravest and best that are to-day sleeping under the soil of France.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that I may again refer to President Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and say that it is for us, inspired by the illustrious example of our heroic boys, to carry on the noble work that they began and show ourselves worthy of the confidence that they and our Nation have imposed in us. [Applause.]

We Members of the United States Congress have reposed in us a sacred trust, a trust for our heroes that are living and for those who have made the supreme sacrifice; a trust for our country and for human liberty; a trust for all humanity and for all time. Upon us has descended an unparalleled and unmatched opportunity. We are temporarily to a certain extent the legatees of the world and the executors of Providence. It is my earnest prayer that the Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress will honor themselves and our country by loyally working together for the freedom and happiness of the human race and the permanent peace of the world—the ideals for which our sons and comrades fell. [Applause.]

Inasmuch as reference has been made here to the services of a number of individual States, permit me say that the State of Colorado, which I have for many years had the honor to represent in part, contains less than 1 per cent of the population of the United States, yet out of the first 40 congressional medals that were awarded for heroic services during this war our young State received 5—12½ per cent. [Applause.] So that on behalf of our Colorado boys I am supremely proud to say that the Centennial State will in all future history be accorded a proud place for the loyal service her sons have rendered to our country during this World War. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, we honor ourselves to-day by honoring the memory of our fallen soldiers, sailors, and marines. It is very fitting, indeed, that we pause in the midst of our regular work to engage in exercises of this character. I congratulate the majority leader upon the resolution presented, and I assure him that it will be to me a very great pleasure to vote for its adoption.

As a few of us mingle here to-day in these exercises no doubt our minds go back to our homes, as we think of our neighbors and friends engaged in similar exercises paying their tributes of respect to the men and the women—the women, mark you, as well as the men—for the glorious victory that has been won for the civilization of the world. I recognize our fallen heroes as my personal benefactors. I recognize them as the benefactors of my country and of modern civilization. In this great war we have come in contact with boys and girls, men and women throughout the Nation, whose hearts have been turned with earnestness and devotion to the accomplishment of a great task. Note, if you please, the marvelous transformation of the thoughts and feelings of the American people in regard to the war. For nearly three years that war was a foreign question. Many of our people were proally and some were pro-German. They debated it among themselves as a purely foreign question; but when the time came for our country to take its place in the great contest the American people with rare exceptions turned away from the thought that life's greatest achievement was to keep out of the war, and directed their attention to the winning of the war for the American flag and the civilization of the world. [Applause.]

Let your thoughts, if you please, drop into the lives of the boys and the girls as well as the men and the women of the Nation. When the call came for American soldiers and sailors and marines to enter the contest, our young men faced a serious duty. Almost intuitively they seemed to catch the measure of their responsibility. That vision gave them a broader view of life. They saw the world in a new light. They realized that the interests of their own Nation and possibly the nations of the world rested upon them, and that their deeds would determine for all time the question of intellectual, civil, and religious freedom. As the boys went to the war and to the front, and as the call of the Government went out to the people of the country for war workers in the departments in Washington, thousands and thousands of American girls came hither promptly and eagerly to help in that work.

It was not the amount of their annual compensation that prompted in most instances. Those girls felt that their country had made a call to them, as it had made to their brothers, their relatives, and their sweethearts, and they said, "We will volunteer for the war to help carry on the work at home." As I have met them in large numbers here in Washington and elsewhere in the States, I have found the expression in their words and in their countenances and deeds that they realize that by helping in this war work they were coming just that much nearer to the boys. That sentiment on the part of self-sacrificing boys and girls alike helped the American Government to round out this great contest with unparalleled victory for liberty throughout the world.

But what principle was involved here? What measure of power did they have at command? Whence did they receive it? The underlying principle in it all for our Government and the governments of the world goes back to the teachings of George Washington and Alexander Hamilton, national sovereignty for the American Union. When this doctrine was challenged by hostile guns in the sixties Abraham Lincoln and the boys in blue carried it to victory, and to-day by virtue of that triumph we have 48 States, more than 100,000,000 of people, and almost countless billions of wealth behind the Government of the United States that enabled us to win this victory, destroy monarchy, and preserve representative government throughout the world. Whenever President Wilson wields the power of the American Government in guiding the Army and Navy and that great civic force in the lines of diplomacy he is wielding a power transmitted to him by Abraham Lincoln and the boys in blue; and, thank God, we have one country, one Union, one Constitution, and one flag waving over all. [Applause.]

In all this broad field of activity and thought I hope we can see the uniforms of the men of the Revolutionary period, of the period of the Civil War, and the uniforms of the men of this great war drawing the hearts of the American people together, so that the Southland and the Northland, the Eastland and the Westland make an American land, "one and inseparable" forever; and to that high achievement we dedicate our thoughts, our deeds, and our lives, to do justice to the men whose uniform graces our gathering to-day, and to whom this and subsequent Congresses shall carry in faithful devotion those recognitions that their brilliant service merits and our duty demands. [Applause.]

Our country must be thoroughly Americanized. But what transforming and unifying power can possibly bring all of these divergent opinions, characters, customs, religions, and politics into a unity of purpose and action to build one nation out of the nations of the world? Mrs. Andrews and I observed an incident in Boston in 1908 that answered this question in part. One Sunday afternoon we attended an open-air concert on the Boston Common. Some twelve or fifteen thousand people were present. About three-fourths of them seemed to have been born under foreign flags. Whole families were there together, happy, cheerful, and well dressed. They enjoyed the program and cheered heartily at times. Just as they were dispersing the band began unexpectedly to play the Star-Spangled Banner. Instantly hats were removed and the whole audience stood like an army at attention until the music ceased. Then they cheered and cheered to the echo. The newcomers seemed to be the most enthusiastic. Why? Why? Why? Because they had a keen realization of the splendid opportunities they have here as compared with the meager earnings in their native countries. They know what this flag means for them and their children. That spirit made the colonists one and enabled them to build one nation out of the nations of the world.

This is not only the unifying power, but it is also the saving power of the American Republic. It goes a long distance in the solution of the vexed question of immigration and also in the thorough Americanization of the citizenship of our country. Thus it is not necessary to teach the doctrine of hate on the part of any man toward the land of his birth or the flag under which he was born. Do you recall the old homestead on which you played with your brothers and sisters in the days of your childhood? Do you remember about wading the brook yonder, and does your body now feel the thrill from the water? Did you gather flowers and bring them to mother and receive the priceless benediction of her smiles? Did you go out into the woods and sit under the trees and listen to the songs of the birds? Forget the old homestead? No, no, no! Never, never, never!

> How dear to this heart are the scenes of my childhood,
> When fond recollection presents them to view—
> The orchard, the meadow, the deep-tangled wildwood,
> And every lov'd spot which my infancy knew.

But regardless of the land of our birth, we must insist most emphatically upon the doctrine of unwavering loyalty on the part of every American citizen to the Government and flag of the United States of America.

My country, our country, the country of all the world, and as the struggling millions of the earth see our flag how can they refrain from saying with us:

> My country, 'tis of thee,
> Sweet land of liberty,
> Of thee I sing:
> Land where my fathers died,
> Land of the pilgrims' pride,
> From every mountain side
> Let freedom ring—

Now, henceforth, and forever. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I heartily favor this resolution and commend the Congress for considering it on Memorial Day. I am sure that every Member will be glad to give it his support.

After the adjournment of Congress last March, in company with other Members of Congress, I went to Europe. I had voted for the resolution declaring that a state of war existed with Germany and all the laws and appropriations necessary to carry it on, and to that extent I felt my responsibility.

Everybody now recognizes the fact that war with Germany was unavoidable. After the sinking of the Lusitania, on May 7, 1915, upon which there were 115 American citizens who went to a watery grave, we tried to adjust our differences through diplomatic channels. Germany reluctantly agreed to observe the rules of international law. She discontinued the killing of our citizens in her submarine warfare until January 31, 1917, when we were notified that the next day it would be renewed. Ship after ship to the number of 1,276 merchant vessels were sunk, of which 425 were under neutral flags. Fifteen of them were flying the flag of the United States, and a total of 226 American lives were sacrificed. Not only were our international rights violated on the sea, but intrigues were sought to be entered into with Mexico and Japan, to embroil us in wars with our sister Republic to the south and our ally in the Orient. Germany promised as a reward a part of the States of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. In addition innumerable acts of sabotage were committed, in which bridges, machinery, and manufacturing plants were destroyed throughout the United States. Many millions of dollars were expended in this country in propaganda work, through the press, public speakers, and secret agents, in an effort to create sentiment favorable to Germany and to prevent our Nation entering the war. There was no other course for a self-respecting nation to pursue, except to pass the resolution approved April 6, 1917.

The Germans had been preparing for war for 25 years and thought they were destined to rule the world. Hence the opening of the war had been prearranged. The German Emperor was conveniently away from his country sailing around Norway. The Russian ambassador was temporarily absent from Vienna, and President Poincaire was away from France. They were unaware of the treachery being practiced. The time was opportune for Germany to strike. Germany did not believe that England would enter the war, or that if she did that she would enter it in time to save France. Germany expected to overrun France and conquer that nation within 30 days. With her navy increased by adding the French battleships and Russian fighting ships, she expected to successfully match England in a second war. With that concluded, her third war was to be with the United States, and if successful she planned to dominate the entire civilized world.

We were anxious to see what had been accomplished in France and to visualize as far as possible the expenditures of the vast sums of money appropriated by our Government. We wished to gain first-hand knowledge for ourselves, as best we could, regarding how the money was used. We wanted to assist our soldiers in every way possible in getting them speedily returned home. They felt that the object for which they had been sent across the sea had been attained, and they desired to return to their homes and civil pursuits. We impressed this as earnestly as we could upon every general we met in France and upon every American official who had anything to do with bringing the American troops back to the United States. We took the matter up with the Secretary of the Navy, who accompanied us across the Atlantic; Gen. Helmick, whom we met at Brest; Gen. Reed, at Le Mans; Gen. Harbord, at Tours; Gen. Pershing, at Chaumont; and President Wilson, in Paris. Two hundred and ninety-seven thousand soldiers were returned to the United States in April and 320,000 in May, leaving about 630,000 to be brought back, of whom it is expected 330,000 will be returned in June and the remainder in July and August.

We also wished to study the lessons of the war and the things that would be of assistance to us in the enactment of reconstruction legislation. We were particularly desirous of making inquiry as to what legislation, if any, would be necessary to dispose of the vast amount of property which we had in France; what legislation is needed to aid our soldiers to return to civil pursuits; what beneficial legislation should be enacted for the direct benefit of the soldiers; what legislation the other countries had enacted; and such other information as would be helpful in the enactment of laws for the return or control of public utilities.

Then, of course, we went to view the battle fields of Europe, hallowed by the blood of our brave boys, who died for the cause of humanity and the ideals of our country.

With these general purposes in view, we left New York and the lights of western civilization on March 15, 1919, on board the S. S. Leviathan, which was formerly the S. S. Vaterland, built by the Germans. It is the largest ship afloat, being 954 feet long, which is longer than the Capitol Building of our Nation. It had only made one round trip across the ocean and was on this side of the Atlantic when war broke out in 1914, where she was interned.

We landed at Brest on March 23, where we were met by Gen. Helmick and by Gen. Butler, in charge of Camp Pontanezen. Brest is located upon the extreme western point of France and lies south of the western coast of England. It has a harbor where the largest ships may enter, and has been utilized by us as an embarkation point. The condition of the camp had been severely criticized, but when we reached there we found it in as good shape as the weather would permit. It rained 335 days last year at that point. At the present time all the tents are floored and ditched about. They have stoves in them and are connected one with another by board walks. It was raining when we reached there and it was raining the next day when we left. It was raining when we returned there several weeks later. It is our belief that under the splendid management of Gen. Butler this camp is in as good condition as the rainy climate will permit.

Through the courtesy of Army officials we went by automobiles over the western part of France, visiting Rennes and the replacement camp at Le Mans, where we met Gen. Reed. We went to Tours then. It is the headquarters of the service of supply and is in charge of Gen. Harbord, whom we met and with whom we discussed at length the movement of supplies and the handling of soldiers to and from the embarkation port. From there we went to Gievres, the base of supplies. It is under the control of Col. C. J. Symonds, a very efficient officer. He courteously showed us over the entire camp, an immense space built up with warehouses. We stopped for the night at Orleans, which is a beautiful city. Joan of Arc delivered it with her army on May 8, 1429, from the English. She was later tried and convicted, through treachery and jealousy, and executed by the English.

After seeing Paris for a few days we left by automobile for the American battle front, which carried us through Belleau Wood and Chateau-Thierry. We passed through Rheims, where the great cathedral was destroyed, and remained overnight at Chalons, where Attila, at the head of the Huns, was defeated in 450 A. D., resulting in the saving of Paris. Our trip then took us over the battle front known as the Argonne Forest, the most difficult battle in which our troops were engaged. We crossed Hill 304 and Dead Man's Hill, places familiar to American soldiers. We ate lunch at Verdun, on the Meuse River. This place is strongly fortified with forts on the hills, by outer walls, and by moats. It has a citadel in which ten or fifteen thousand soldiers may be housed. It is also protected by the Meuse River. Verdun was besieged by the Germans for four years, but did not fall.

We spent an afternoon upon the St. Mihiel salient, remaining overnight at the Moraign farmhouse, not far from Metz. We went through the border manufacturing city of Longwy, which the Germans entered in the early part of the war, and which was held by them when the armistice was signed. Then we went through Luxembourg, which is a beautiful country, about the size of the average county in the United States. Our journey took us through Treves (Trier), an ancient, historic, fortified city, and then through Bernkastel, on the Moselle River, where we had lunch with Gen. Martin. This is a fine section of country, largely devoted to the raising of grapes. We crossed over the divide into the Rhine Valley and entered Coblenz, which is the headquarters of the American army of occupation. Gen. Dickman was in command at that time and had 240,000 American soldiers in the occupied area. All the expense of keeping this army is being paid by Germany, including the monthly salaries of our soldiers and officers. Coblenz is on the west side of the Rhine and is strongly fortified, with a fort upon a commanding point on the east side. It is also located in the bend of the river, which is a natural defense.

We visited the city of Cologne, about 75 miles up the river, and on our way took luncheon at Bonn, which is the site of one of the great German universities. We went to this occupied section because we were anxious to see and interview as many of our troops as possible, and also to learn as much about conditions in Germany as we could. This stretch of country had not been touched by the war and, of course, was in a fine state of preservation. The farms are being cultivated, and from all outward appearances the people were well clothed and fed. Upon inquiry, however, we were told that food prices were exceptionally high, and that the poor back in the interior were in a distressful condition and unable to get fats and other nourishing foods.

On our return trip we went through Bar-le-Duc, which is a railroad center, and through which much of our supplies were shipped. At Chaumont, the headquarters of Gen. Pershing, we discussed with him at length and with members of his staff conditions in France and everything connected with the war—the various battles in which our soldiers were engaged, his difficulties, and his triumphs. He is a fearless soldier, a fine gentleman, a man of great capacity, and an excellent executive, as well as a splendid military officer. In response to our suggestions, he indicated that our soldiers would be returned to the United States as early as conditions would permit and as soon as ships could be secured.

We returned to Paris by the way of Troys, Tonnerre, and Frogny, where we saw four or five hundred Oklahoma boys belonging to the Thirty-sixth Division, who were billeted in that vicinity. They were all well cared for, well clothed, and well fed, with ruddy complexions. They appeared to be in the very best of health. We were proud of these manly men, the military representatives of the greatest and grandest Republic beneath the stars. I am glad to say to the fathers and mothers of America that we saw nothing to criticize in the conduct of any of them, and we were glad that they were from our State and Nation.

After remaining a few days in Paris, where we called upon the American ambassador and President Wilson, and spent a few days visiting the libraries, museums, Government buildings, the grave of Lafayette, and other places of public interest, including Versailles, a suburb of Paris, where the peace delegates are now in session, and where the treaty with Great Britain ending the Revolutionary War was signed, we started up to the northern front, held by the French, English, and Belgians. Our route carried us through Arras and Lens, a city of about 25,000, in which there is not a single house standing intact. We went over Vimy Ridge, upon which there is no sign of human life. The wreck and devastation is complete. For miles in that immediate vicinity we passed ruined cities and towns with not a single house standing. The entire country was covered with shell holes, and not a human being lived there. We saw only soldiers here and there guarding property.

Going north through Lille we passed east through Ath and Tournai to Brussels, in Belgium, which is a beautiful city, with approximately 800,000 people. It was occupied by the Germans in the early part of the war and was not attacked by the Belgians, because they wanted to save their capital. It was not wrecked to a very great extent. We had an audience with King Albert, who is very much beloved by the Belgian people, as is also his splendid wife. He is very intelligent and soldierly, being more than 6 feet tall. He enjoys the confidence of his people to an unlimited extent.

We spent one afternoon upon the historic battle field of Waterloo and saw where Napoleon, the idol of France, fought against the combined armies of the Old World and lost. Instead of gratifying his ambition to dominate Europe, he died in exile six years later in St. Helena.

From Brussels we went to Louvain, a university city. The university and great cathedral were destroyed here in the war. Our route took us to Charleroi, 50 or 60 miles south, where there were some great steel factories. The machinery was removed from these factories and the plants destroyed. This was purely an act of vandalism, and was committed, so it is claimed, in order that the Germans might not have Belgian competition after the war was over.

We visited Dinant, on the Moselle River. It is a small city, where the people were terrorized and abused. A number of them were lined up against a wall and shot, in order that the remainder of the population might be terrorized into submission. We were shown one wall where 116 men had been shot. Some survived, and we saw their wounds.

We went to Antwerp next. It is to be a port of embarkation for our army of occupation. This city was not hurt. We took luncheon with Cardinal Mercier, who is known as the "grand old man" of Belgium, at Malines. Though he was often threatened by the Germans, perhaps he did as much, if not more, than any other man to strengthen the people in their resistance to the foe.

We were entertained by the Belgian Parliament at Brussels and were accorded every courtesy. The people are very grateful to the United States for our substantial assistance in sending them food and clothing and for the part we took in the war.

We left Brussels, going through Ghent, where the treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain was signed in 1814. We remained overnight at Bruges, which was the submarine base of the Germans. Following the canal to its mouth brought us to Zeebrugge, where on April 24, 1918, the British, by one of the most daring acts in all history, entered the harbor around a strongly fortified island, under artillery and machine-gun fire, and sank four cruisers with the greatest precision. This prevented the further dispatch of submarines from this port and closed the base. Of the 4,000 men who volunteered for this task, 800 were killed. The wonder is how any escaped.

We followed the coast around by the way of Ostend and crossed the Yser Canal, where the dikes were opened by the Belgians to check the advance of the Germans. Here the Belgian King, having been forced to the extreme western border of his country, issued his famous order that any Belgian soldier who retreated farther would be a traitor to his country. He maintained headquarters at Furnes, which the Belgians held, with a narrow strip of their own country, throughout the war. To the south lays the Ypres sector, where the battle raged with great fury. It presents a picture of devastation impossible to exaggerate. All the cities and towns in it were destroyed. The trenches and wire entanglements remained intact. The hills were cleared of trees by artillery fire, and the ground is thickly covered with large shell holes.

We passed down over the fronts held by the British and French to Paris, and all over this battle area, both to the north of Paris and the east of Paris, everything of value is completely destroyed. No one can pass over this battle ground without having the greatest admiration for the bravery and bulldog tenacity of our British ally, whose troops made such enormous sacrifices of life on this bloody field. It must be remembered that they came into the war unselfishly to assist Belgium, whose neutrality England was under treaty obligations to protect. Like others, they fought for heroic ideals, that right and not might should rule for the cause of humanity and for the ideals that we all cherish. The Ypres sector, Vimy Ridge, Lens, Cambrai, and the northern front will stand as enduring monuments to their bravery and heroism.

To make a study of the peoples of western Europe, to get a glimpse of their mode of living, and to form a more correct estimate of them, we made some hurried side trips to historic Rome, Naples, Mount Vesuvius, the ruins of Pompeii, and Genoa, the home of Christopher Columbus, which is preserved in the heart of the city. We spent a day in the city of Geneva, Switzerland, renowned for its cleanliness and beauty. It is to be the seat of the league of nations in the event one is formed. We spent a week visiting England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, including London, with its innumerable places of historic interest; Oxford, the seat of the great university; Stratford-on-Avon, Shakespeare's home; Edinburgh; Glasgow; Belfast; and Dublin in our itinerary.

Each one of us was disappointed in seeing their primitive farming methods, their very general use of cattle as work animals, their antiquated farming machinery, their inadequate railroad facilities, and their insanitary surroundings. Almost everything was done with a view of protection in the event of war, and for this purpose they built splendid roads, to permit rapid communication, cities and towns on hillside and mountain peaks in order to defend them easily, and protected themselves in the lowlands by walls and moats. Even their great cathedrals were built for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants in case of attack. Their museums everywhere are full of art treasures. Most of them are statues representing great heroes, or paintings of great battles and victories won.

There are many beneficial lessons that our trip suggested, but I want to emphasize three.

The first is the splendid roads throughout western Europe, with stone bridges and culverts, some of them constructed 2,000 years ago. They are kept in fine shape and, in fact, road building is one of their principal industries.

The second is that nothing is done for temporary use in Europe. Every building is carefully erected for permanent use.

The third is that absolutely nothing is wasted, but everything is saved and preserved.

Three outstanding features of this war stagger the imagination. They are difficult to describe in language, and are therefore incapable of full appreciation.

The first is the magnitude of the task accomplished, after the declaration of war on April 6, 1917, and before the date of the armistice, November 11, 1918, in a little over 19 months. There was no Army to speak of—about 200,000 troops all told, officers and men. Legislation had to be thought out, recommended, and enacted, and money had to be appropriated to pay the expenses before an army could be raised. Clothing, munitions, and supplies of all kinds had to be made and concentrated at supply depots, so as to be available for use. Camps had to be constructed to house the men drawn from their homes. Machinery had to be made and plants enlarged to manufacture artillery and many necessary supplies. Regulations had to be formulated, promulgated, and administered for 110,000,000 people unused to military discipline in order to raise the vast army which would turn the scale in favor of the Allies. We must have transportation facilities on land and sea, to gather raw material, concentrate it at factories, provide fuel, and gather the men from every township throughout our vast country, as well as to carry to them the supplies necessary for their use and equipment. After being trained the men were transported to seaports, where we encountered a ship shortage. Ships were needed to bridge an ocean more than 3,000 miles wide. We rented, built, and commandeered every available bottom. We landed through ports in France and Great Britain 300,000 men per month with the immense stores of supplies and munitions needed by our brave men, without which they would have been helpless and useless. On November 11, 1918, we had in the Army and Navy approximately 5,000,000 under arms. More than 2,000,000 of them were on the bloody fields across the sea. Food, clothing, and all necessary munitions and supplies followed them. Docks on foreign soil had to be built, where our troops could be landed, and warehouses were constructed near the ports for the supplies. Warehouses had to be built also at concentration points in France. At Giveres we built warehouses covering 6 square miles. If placed end to end they would have formed a line 20 miles long. Everything was stored here but heavy artillery. Railroads and dirt roads had to be built, and equipment had to be added. Everything had to be enormously enlarged so that supplies and equipment as needed might be at the right place promptly, and they were there.

The second is the rapidity with which we accomplished things. When our Government recognized that a state of war existed, we pledged all the resources of this Nation to achieve a victorious result. While other nations moved with apparent deliberation, we acted promptly. We had never known defeat, and we were not going to suffer any stain on our victorious flag. [Applause.] We legislated in financial terms of billions. We concentrated men in armies of millions, and we threw both men and munitions into the battle front in such numbers and quantity as to cheer the hearts of our Allies and break the morale of the enemy. Germany figured that by the use of the submarine she would cripple England at sea, cut off supplies of food and munitions, and even if America entered the war she would have conquered Europe before we could transport our forces across in sufficient numbers to be effective.

The third is the courage and daring displayed by our soldiers on the field of battle. We are not a military Nation, but love peace. When our Government was established it was founded on certain ideals. No nation can violate our cherished rights on land or sea with impunity. Germany misinterpreted our love for peace into an abject surrender of our international rights. There is no question of the unity of our people when attacked by a foreign foe. The splendid support given our Government by all classes of citizens in every township and school district throughout the United States challenged the admiration of the world. [Applause.] The flower of our country obeyed the bugle call. Fathers and mothers, wives and sisters bade their loved ones farewell as they marched forth to duty, perhaps to death. Patriotic men and women, whether on the platform or in the pulpit or in the editorial chair, inspired our citizens upon all occasions to do their full duty and loyally and aggressively support the cause of this Nation. Bonds were purchased and money was subscribed to meet all financial requirements. Having tried to avoid war, knowing that our cause was just, cheered and sustained by the American people everywhere, our Army went into the war determined upon aggressive action and a victorious result.

When we reached France we found our Allies hard pressed by a well-trained, brutal foe bent upon overrunning and conquering Europe and the domination of the world. Our men were quickly trained in the new methods of warfare and hurriedly thrown into the battle line, first among the British and French troops, where they could be used to the best advantage and strengthen the weaker points. Appreciating the necessity of unity of action among the allied armies, Gen. Foch was agreed upon as commander of them. He is a great strategist. They were fighting on French soil. Their capital, Paris, was immediately at stake, and I think no one ever doubts the wisdom of placing this grand old warrior of France in supreme command.

Our boys had been in line in defensive trench fighting until in April when the Twenty-sixth Division went into action in the Toul sector near Seicheprey, where they thrilled our Allies by their daring, inspired confidence in them, and served notice on our enemy that we were ready to meet them on the field of battle.

The First Division attacked the German line on May 28 and captured the town of Cantigny in the Montdidier sector and held it under heavy artillery counterattacks. The enemy was again, in a great offensive, seriously threatening Paris on the Marne near Chateau-Thierry. Our troops in divisions, commanded by our own officers, were hurried to the relief of that point, so necessary to be held at all hazards. Paris was almost in sight of the enemy. Their long-range guns were dropping shells upon the terror-stricken people within her walls. Many had fled to distant cities. The fall of the French capital was imminent, and I remember with what breathless interest we watched the fighting in July, 1918, in the Chateau-Thierry sector. The French had withstood with grand heroism the terrible onslaughts of a foe superior in numbers, equipment, and preparation for four years, and must soon yield if not strengthened. Nothing can better describe the desperateness of the situation, the bravery of the French soldier and his love for the capital of his beloved country, than the inquiry of the French officer of the general commanding our American supporting divisions, if he might fall back on the American troops for support or die there.

In the Belleau Wood our soldiers attacked and counterattacked the enemy with such fierceness and daring as to capture it and the town of Vaux. For a number of days the battle raged along the entire line until the Germans were routed and driven beyond Soissons and Paris was saved. Who knows but what the civilization of a thousand years was saved. [Applause.] We wrote a new record in the military annals of our country. We captured more than 7,000 prisoners and many pieces of artillery. We did far more. We established confidence in ourselves. Our Allies recognized that we could be depended upon, and we measurably destroyed the confidence of the Germans that they could win.

I have been all over this ground hallowed by the blood of our boys who fell in defense of this country. The thick, almost impenetrable wood known as Belleau Wood was literally shot to pieces. Trees more than a foot in diameter were shot to pieces, and they appeared as if a cyclone had gone over them. In addition, the ground was pounded with shells, and great holes pock-marked the surface on every hand. No human being could survive such an artillery fire. The little town of Lucy on the hill near-by was completely destroyed. Not a single house was left standing. There was not a single person there, save a soldier or two guarding the ruins. We stopped at a little cemetery near there on top of the hill, where, with uncovered heads, we bowed in silent reverence and contemplation in honor of 78 Americans who sleep beneath the lilies of France. They died gallantly on foreign soil to uphold the emblem of their country. I thought that a grateful Nation would hold them in affectionate remembrance and generously care for any dependents left behind.

Hardly had the Chateau-Thierry German offensive been checked, and the enemy driven back to a safe distance, than our troops were withdrawn and concentrated for a drive on the St. Mihiel salient, which was planned and executed by the commander of our forces, that brave soldier and excellent officer, Gen. Pershing. This was to be the first distinct American offensive, and was to put to the test not only our readiness to fight but our ability to command and to plan. More than 600,000 troops, in addition to a few French troops, took part in this offensive. The drive was skillfully planned. Our forces were moved and placed in position with such rapidity and secrecy that the veteran German officers and soldiers were surprised when, with clocklike precision, at break of day on the morning of September 12, under an artillery barrage that consumed 1,000,000 shells, we attacked with such dash and fury that we wiped out the salient resting on the Meuse River—in fact, crossing it at one point and threatening Verdun, a strongly fortified city that the Germans had almost surrounded and besieged for four years. We captured 13,751 prisoners, 443 guns, and much material. The brilliancy of this attack and the necessity for it can be better appreciated with a knowledge of the topography of the country. It lays between the Meuse and Moselle Rivers. The drive relieved Verdun and enabled us to shell Metz and greatly interfere with the concentration of supplies there. The Oklahoma and Texas troops in the Ninetieth Division, under Gen. Hunter Liggett, took part in this drive and share the credit of the first distinctive American victory. When I visited this battle field and an officer explained the Army maneuvers, as we passed through the city of St. Mihiel and towns of Thaicourt, Vilcay, Villers, Hattonchatel, Billy, Thillot, Vigneulles, and others, and as we gazed on Mont Sec, which was pounded and cleared of all timber by artillery fire, I could better appreciate the splendid courage of America's brave sons, including those from my own State, in marching to victory through a veritable rain of shot and shell and machine-gun fire up and across the Woevre Valley to a sweeping, glorious, triumphant victory. [Applause.]

The Argonne salient was to the west and north of the Meuse and between that and the Aire River. Much of this battle area is rough and hilly; in fact, mountainous. It is covered with heavy timber and the Germans were intrenched in dugouts and strongly fortified. They thought the position impregnable. The name is given to a wide area. So important was it that the Crown Prince himself had his headquarters at Montfaucon. The attack was planned with great care and carried out with almost mathematical precision. Across hills and ravines, through thick, heavy woods, over shell-torn, spongy soil, braving every danger known to modern warfare, our gallant boys in khaki charged, capturing machine guns, heavy artillery, and about 10,000 prisoners. Roads had to be built over which to move our heavier guns, but our engineers met every emergency. Everyone who visits France and surveys this battle area, when he considers the mountainous, wooded country, the German intrenchments, and the favorable locations for their heavy artillery, stands and silently wonders how such a successful drive could be made and carried out with such precision. This drive ended the war and perhaps changed the current of history. [Applause.] The Crown Prince from a high eminence in a strongly fortified building on the point at Montfaucon, where through a periscope he viewed the location of troops and their maneuvers for miles around, saw his trusted officers and men yield one strongly fortified position after another. He witnessed Malconcourt and Batlincourt fall and retreated in safety before Montfaucon was captured. Each day, with renewed determination to quickly end the war, our divisions added new luster to our flag as the troops scaled mountain peaks, dislodged machine guns, captured prisoners, and rolled in waves down the valley upon the enemy below. This is one of the most memorable battles of all history, and the names of the towns and villages captured and occupied during this sanguinary struggle, lasting from September 26 through the entire month of October and into November, 1918, will become household words as this decisive drive is studied and successful result appreciated. [Applause.] None were too strongly fortified or manned. They all fell alike before our artillery barrage and infantry attack. Apremont, Fleville, Montfaucon, Malancourt, Brieulles, Clery, Aucheville, Villers, and Stenay among many others will remain on the pages of history.

We had to win. We could not afford to fail. An indecisive result at this time of the year, with the rainy season beginning, meant the discontinuance of offensive hostilities, digging into trenches for the winter, and giving the Germans an opportunity to reinforce their demoralized forces and to bring up reserves, munitions, and equipment. It meant a prolongation of the war into the following year and the consequent great sacrifice of human lives. This successful offensive brought the armistice of November 11, 1918, which was in effect an unconditional surrender. In this supreme struggle the brave sons of Oklahoma in the Ninetieth Division were in the thick of the battle and far to the front when the hour of 11 on the 11th day of the eleventh month tolled out a cessation of hostilities, while the Thirty-sixth Division, also an Oklahoma and Texas division, in the Champagne were in action near Suippes and Chalons, adding new laurels to our State and Nation and rapidly pursuing the retreating Huns up the Aisne. Their valor and individual acts of heroism will be recited over and over as the days lengthen into years and as long as bravery and love of country and devotion to ideals are admired by patriotic men and fair women of our beloved country. [Applause.]

As they displayed deeds of heroism on the field of battle and conducted themselves so as to add new glory to their Nation, I am sure these same qualities will follow our brave boys back into civil life as they again take up their duties of citizenship and with renewed vigor and an enlarged vision assume their places in civil life. They can be depended upon to measure up to our fondest expectations. As they bore the flag unstained to victory, they will in the future conduct themselves as becomes an American soldier. They will see that no stains besmirch their old, cherished uniform. Their opportunity is great, and that they will avail themselves of it I have not the slightest doubt. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the association of the Grand Army of the Republic was organized soon after the Civil War, and the early Memorial Days were celebrated by long lines of soldiers marching in the streets of cities, boroughs, villages, and hamlets, each post conducting exercises in commemoration of dead comrades. Not long since, I attended a reunion of the veterans residing in my county. The occasion was the assembling of very few members, as time had thinned their ranks. A resolution was adopted to disband their posts because of the few surviving veterans. For the same reason the Confederate camps also will soon be dissolved. At the time of their inceptions, the two associations were antagonistic, but since, good fellowship toward each other has developed a united interest for the growth, prosperity, and continuity of one Government, one country, and one Republic. Their descendants, but yesterday, fought side by side to preserve our rights and inherited privileges; fought for a greater America, not greater in the acquisition of territory, but a renaissance of a higher social and political standard for the peoples of the world. The War of Nations, long prophesied, has been waged and ended. New conceptions and hopes spring from the results of wars. Premature ideas of governmental policies, and a period of unrest will shadow for a time the building up of our industries, and our commercial relations with foreign countries. The industrial period, however, must wait until the reconstruction plan is based on a true and solid foundation.

When the German Emperor challenged the American people as a Nation, he did not place his ear close enough to hear clearly the voice of the American sentiment. He had a longing to conquer the Republic over the seas. He was not big enough, his allies were not strong enough; his ambition, the dream of an insane man.

Men of the past have attempted to conquer the world and crown themselves emperors. Alexander the Great extended his power over many nations; he desired to be triumphant over all, but he could not rule the world. He died the victim of excessive indulgence. Cæsar had the same ambition for conquest, but he fell at the zenith of his power by the assassin's poniard. Napoleon, the grestest general of all history, did not reach his goal, and died in exile on the island of St. Helena. The Kaiser hoped to win where others had failed. The American troops, however, proved an impenetrable wall, the strength of which he did not know. His remaining days will be of agonizing terror and mental torture. No one man can rule the world. This must be the conclusion, if we read carefully the pages of history.

We pause to pay the highest tribute to the American soldiers and sailors to whom we owe victory and peace. Here in the halls of Congress appropriations are made to build battleships and engines of war, but it was the heroes of our Army and Navy and the fifty thousand and more, now under the sod of France who won the battles for our Republic and liberty. Never did a people make nobler sacrifices and show greater heroism than the fathers and mothers of America. [Applause.]

Congress proposed the construction of aeroplanes, but it was the American champion, who met his single adversary in the clouds 16,000 feet above the earth and conquered him, thereby winning the supremacy of the air. No war ever revealed more courageous deeds, than were performed by our soldiers and sailors. [Applause.] On the field, in the air, and under the sea they acquitted themselves with the highest honors for bravery, valor, and fortitude. They won the war for the world's progress; they won it for more perfect attainments. Civilization moves onward, extending her growth into the dark future only to enlighten it as time develops the necessity of a greater knowledge to satisfy the new thoughts and new ideas continually evolving from the intellect and the divine power of the human mind. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I shall avail myself of the privilege extended to Members to extend their remarks on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, it is my observation that the genius of America is what was evidenced in France by the American soldier in winning this war. Personally I observed and kept in touch with matters preceding the declaration of war. Then, as the matters progressed I also kept in touch with the general situation, until it finally culminated in the declaration of war by this country against the German Imperial Government, and from that on, pending and during the legislation that made it possible to accomplish what the American Army and Navy accomplished, it was my privilege as an American Representative for the State of California to participate and favor that legislation.

I observed, as far as it was in one's power, what the people were doing in this country in the way of preparing for the war and the work done in various cantonments and training camps. I observed on every side what the father and the mother and the sister and the son were doing who were not able to enter the actual service in the Army and the Navy.

I also observed the work that was being done by the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Salvation Army, the Jewish Welfare Board, and others who were assisting in this wonderful work.

I want to say now that too much credit can not be given to all those who were unable to enter the service, but who assisted in making American genius a part and the mainspring of our soldiers' and sailors' lives. Not being content with what I could see here, as soon as opportunity presented itself, in company with other Members of the House, I crossed the ocean, and for two months observed, as far as one could, the obstacles against which our soldiers fought. I observed the battle fields where our soldiers were, where the French fought, and where the English fought. I went over the German battle fields as well. We visited and had the pleasure of seeing American soldiers in the occupation of Coblentz and the territory on the Rhine. It was for the purpose of seeing our boys over there just fresh from the battle fields, for the purpose of seeing the character of the country and the kind of hardships they had to endure, the disadvantages they were up against, that we went, as well as to observe the kind of work that had been done by these organizations that I have named. Language fails when giving credit to the general of our Army, to his subordinates, and to the soldiers who participated in the conflict. We can not be too high in our praise of those who were unable to go because of circumstances, because their time had not come to be at the front, but who were engaged in preparing for those who were there, in assembling the material, providing the munitions, and seeing that the soldiers were thoroughly and well equipped, that the conditions of our soldiers were looked after and provided for; and their work has been wonderful, and credit to the highest should be extended to them.

This resolution recognizes and gives all credit, as it should—to the mother who stayed at home, to the soldier son who bared his breast to the German gun. The pen of the best writer will never be able to describe to the people at home the conditions under which our boys faced the German Army and the terrible obstacles they encountered in making the success they did. At the risk of repetition, I say that it was the American spirit, the ideal of home and country, which is instilled into every American boy from the cradle up, that made him face unflinchingly the German cannon and machine gun, the German dugouts and the pill boxes, that forced the Germans into the open and advanced until they drove them back, that won the day. It is that American spirit which caused them willingly to lay down their lives for that which they believed to be right. In any resolutions we pass we will not be able to repay those who made the supreme sacrifice. It was known that some must advance. It was necessary that those in the front line must lay down their lives, and they did it, and did it willingly; and the wonderful thing about it all is that there were so few cases, if any, of desertion. All of the soldiers whom I met regretted that they were not at the front. No one turned back. That was the disposition of them all, and it is well that we should celebrate this day not only as Memorial Day for those who have gone, but as a recognition, as far as we can make it, of those American soldiers who participated in this terrible World War. This resolution voices the sentiment of the Members of this House unanimously, and I know that it voices the sentiment of the American people. I heartily approve of and shall vote for the resolutions. At a later day I shall speak upon the war and our participation more in detail. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, memorial institutions to the thoughtful man appeal very strongly. They have their origin in the birth of a religion, in the birth of a nation, or in a crisis in either. We have as a heritage in our own civilization memorial institutions of the birth of the Christian religion, memorial institutions of our country that originated in its birth or in events that saved it in a great crisis. To-day we honor the boys who gave themselves to the saving of the civilization of the world. Too fulsome eulogy can not be paid to these men. Once in the history of the world a tragedy so great, so terrible, came upon civilization that no language is extravagant when applied to it.

With you to-day I have been thinking, not only from our entrance into the war but from 1914, when out from a clear sky, without warning, there came the thunderbolt of all Europe engaged in a mighty struggle.

We had been so long intoxicated with our own idealism that we had begun to believe that never again could there be a war on earth. We so little understood conditions in Europe that we did not know the war was inevitable. There were eddies in this country apparently running counter to it, but the gulf current of human events was bearing us on irresistibly to the maelstrom of war. You and I are too near to measure its causes or to comprehend its vastness; too near to begin to understand its final results; but we are not too near to measure the circumstances that obtained in this country in 1914; we are not too near to understand with what self-concern we thanked God that we were 3,000 miles away; that we thanked God that we were not in war and should not be—notwithstanding that Belgium was ravaged, that France was being undone, that savage modes of warfare were going on, that children in schools and hospitals were being bombed, for did not you and I assent to the proposition that we should be neutral, even in that, and we disseminated that thought to the farthest reaches of the rural population, and the men and the women of the country treasured it in their hearts as being adequate protection.

We can not deceive the soldier boys as to what ultimately thrust us into this war. We can not deceive the French, we can not deceive the English, we can not deceive the Germans

Let us not try to deceive ourselves. We were thrust into this war to defend our own sovereignty on the sea after it had not only been violated but when there was a threat of continued violation. These boys who volunteered and who were drafted had read with breathless interest all the magazines and daily papers. Carefully they had scanned and noted every kind of fighting and outrage, and the blood of the humble boy was chilled. This war had to be fought out first in the mind and heart of the American people before a single soldier was sent across the sea. I talked recently with a man returning who had been on the Verdun front and who had continued in the army of occupation. He said to me that it was not so bad over there as it was in the anticipation of what might come. This may not be quite true, but it is of the quality of mind and heart of the generous American soldier.

Those boys in the country and the boys in the towns and in the cities had been as free as air. For the first time they were subject to military discipline and felt the shock of the camp, the shock of the denial of their personal liberty, the shock of the hard discipline in the camp service, the shock of the transportation overseas. You who have been upon the sea in the darkness of the night when the waves roll, when the stars refuse to shine, can imagine what must have been in the heart and mind of those boys, to many of whom the voyage itself was dreadful; what must have been in the mind and heart when those boys knew that any time up from the subterranean caverns of the ocean a monster submarine might come. The human suffering, the agony of it all, makes it the most tragic experience of the human race. Circumstances such as these were around the boys, and yet they had been reared in an atmosphere so brave, so true, with ideals so high that this great people of ours turned from a pacific to a militant attitude. No people could have been thus turned save a self-respecting, educated, self-governing people who knew the principles of national righteousness and had them incarnated in mind and heart.

These boys are no longer boys. They have aged into men in two short years. The tragic experiences through which they have gone, whether here or abroad, whether in thought only or in both thought and deed, have put a stamp upon them that shall tell their own generation about it and transmit it to generations yet unborn. We shall have for another 50 years among us men who bear in their bodies the marks of their sacrifices for their country. It has ever been thus. For 50 years after the Revolution there were in every hamlet the heroes of Concord and Lexington, and Bunker Hill and Saratoga, and Brandywine, of Valley Forge, and Trenton, and Yorktown. This personal heritage was ours from the sea in the War of 1812, while the homes in the West learned the story of our second war for independence from those who fought at Lundys Lane and New Orleans. The Mexican War gave us another band in whose hearts the fires of patriotism burned.

There lingers yet a remnant from that host that from '61 to '65 gave all they had and offered all they hoped to be on the altar of their country. They fought to preserve the Union. We now know they fought to save civilization itself. Liberty, not only here, but everywhere, hung in the balance in the fateful years when the sad-faced Lincoln sat in the White House. The tremendous issues were clearly defined by him in that immortal address at Gettysburg. Hear him as he sets it forth in imperishable form:

> Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.
> Now we are engaged in a great Civil War, testing whether that Nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure.

A remnant only of the "boys in blue" remain, but they have lived long enough to see their sons shoulder to shoulder with the sons of those who wore the gray go "over the top" on the bloody fields of France. They have lived to see men honor the flag from the South and North and East and West by paying the last great price in its defense. To-day we honor the soldier that saved the Union—that liberty might not die out.

The Spanish-American veteran came strong and true to the country's call. I can make no distinction between soldiers in any of the wars. They are all the soldiers of my country. Some have suffered more, and the hearts of all, citizens and soldiers alike, go out to them in grateful recognition of the priceless value of their sacrifice. The soldiers of this Great War are home and coming home. Theirs has been a rare service. There is deep gratitude in the hearts of our people for what they have done. We welcome them to-day formally by this resolution. This is well; but the love-lit eyes of the dear ones at home is the welcome that counts most. They are tired of war. They want only to be at home now with those they love. To us who represent them is given the task of protecting in wise laws the institutions for which they fought.

We know the causes which led us into the war. We declared war because our own rights were invaded. That is clear. However, we must not think any worthy solution of the peace of the world is impossible. "Fondly do we hope, earnestly do we pray" that somehow reason and conscience and the thought of Him who holds the sparrow in the hollow of His hand may at last control this war-stricken world. This is no party question. It must not be made one. The first draft has been modified. There may be other changes. They may be necessary. Wisdom is not with anyone who blindly opposes nor who as blindly upholds any form of the league of nations that is proposed. Rather is it with those who study earnestly and honestly to know the nature of the proposed covenant and to show forth the effects that in all probability will follow if the league is adopted.

The future is doubly secure. The soldiers of the World War see with clear vision. Their love of country has become a deep and abiding passion. American to the core, they will not be willing that our heritage of more than a hundred and forty years of priceless liberty and abundant opportunity for the struggling masses of the world shall be lost to their children or children's children. Altars of patriotism will be erected in 4,000,000 homes. So clear, so definite, so marked in their thought is the condition of the people of Europe contrasted with the happiness of the people of this great Republic that these soldiers will turn with ever-increasing love and confidence to the wisdom of the fathers. They will study our confession of faith, the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution of the United States as never before. The events of our history will have a deeper meaning. They understand now that things do not happen. Wisdom and strength and honesty in leadership is necessary. Wise and just principles must be incarnate in that leadership. Such leadership and such principles gave us the Republic and have thus far preserved it. Washington and Lincoln still live in the hearts of the American soldier as the fullest expression of Americanism. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, from the very beginning of the war it was recognized that there was but one termination that could be contemplated by the American people, and that was victory. It was freely recognized that whatever the price may be of victory America was going to pay that price. We have paid that price financially and in the blood of our soldiers. To-day victory is ours.

To-day all over this land the people of America will gather to express their appreciation and admiration of the soldiers who fought beneath our flag and nowhere will the patriotic voice of America be lifted in begrudging the financial cost the war has involved. We have poured out money unstintedly, greater than ever before contemplated in the financial circles of the world, and yet it is true to-day that the total expense of this war only equals the earning capacity of the American people for seven months. Even while the war was being fought the American people earned its total cost two and a half times. Here and there may be a voice of depreciation, but the 19 months during which America was at war are the greatest months in the history of this country, in the history of the world. Regardless of whatever any whining American may say, that will be the judgment of civilization, it will be the history of America. And so to-day we do not turn backward, but the inspiring call of America is, Forward face, advance to meet the problems and opportunity of to-morrow.

Now, we seek feebly to express our appreciation of this Nation, but nowhere in the world are there lips that can adequately express the gratitude of this great Nation for its soldiers living and dead.

Our soldiers are going to return to us. Most of them are going to return in good health and strength. What do we owe to them? We owe to them everlasting gratitude. Some people would treat them as if they were dependents, as if they should become wards of this country. I do not believe that should be the attitude.

The true soldier of America is not returning in health and strength as a hero seeking alms. All he asks is a fair opportunity in this best of lands to work out his own salvation. He finds abundant compensation for his services in the fact that he fought and that he played a manly part in preserving the integrity of the future of this country, the land of his home and the land of his hope. He represents the virile, self-reliant manhood of America.

The Nation will be generous in advancing their interests, but after all is said and done we have nothing better to give our returning soldiers than the Republic of their fathers, a Government of liberty, of law and order, where the rights and liberties of minorities should be secure, where ownership of private property is respected and encouraged, where the sacredness of the old-fashioned home is still our hope and anchor, a Government of equal rights before the law and opportunity for all.

The mother of the returning soldier is fully compensated in the happy hour of his safe return. Her prayers have been answered. She is compensated for the sleepless nights, the disturbed dreams, and all the days of anxious waiting.

The war has given us back our wounded and maimed soldiers. They return to civilian life handicapped by having paid their price for victory. We have attempted to provide for them as no nation has ever provided before. We will go with them to the end of the journey. We seek to restore their health. We seek by vocational education to broaden the opportunities that yet remain to them and to equip them to fight their own battle in civilian life. More than that, we give them financial compensation to the end of the disability. When we have done all this we have not fully paid our obligation. The obligation is not paid unless the appreciation of the Nation shall go with them as long as they bear their scars and their maimed limbs. We are not worthy of them unless we appreciate them long after they shall wear those badges of their loyalty no more.

The war shall not give back our dead. Our opportunity to compensate them is past. Our Government has attempted partly to meet her obligation to them by preparing insurance for their survivors. A chaplain in the war tells me that the knowledge that a soldier had insurance, which he never doubted would be paid, has been a consoling thought to many American boys dying on the fields of France. When the end approached and the mind wandered away from the din of battle and dwelt upon the loved ones at home the thought that they would be cared for furnished a gleam of contentment in the mind of the dying soldier.

But we have not compensated him. We know no compensation for the mother that gave her son who never returned. For her the world holds no compensation. There is no reward for the vacant chair, for the lips that can no longer speak the love of a father, husband, or son, for the arm that can no longer foster or defend. Yet their loved ones are not without consolation. For 40 centuries the world has believed, and perhaps for 40 centuries will yet believe, there is no nobler death to die than upon the battle field, fighting for country.

The soldier dead of America have left to their Nation the proud heritage of a noble sacrifice. They fought in an Army that never retreated; they died in the righteous cause of their country. Their memory will live in the gratitude of their countrymen as long as Americans are worthy of that name.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I shall only take the time of the House to repeat what I said this morning at an earlier hour to the surviving soldiers of three wars of this Republic:

No generation in the history of civilization has produced greater results than the generation that preserved the Union and saved the Republic of the United States. That was an event of so great importance to all mankind that it can not be computed. Then, too, the developments and improvements that followed the war mark the greatest material and social progress in any period in human history. Our population multiplied to more than a hundred million; new inventions and discoveries were made that have created new opportunities to reward the pursuit of happiness in our own land and throughout the world. The hand sickle and the flail, the stagecoach and the freight wagon, the spinning wheel and the loom, the crane and the Dutch oven, were the simple implements used in providing the necessities of life when you old boys were young boys. These crude implements of industry have been sent to the antique shop by the reaper, the thrasher, the tractor, by the limited express and the fast freight, by the coal, gas, and electric ranges in our kitchens which take the place of the Dutch oven on the hearth.

We have shops with a million forges and factories with more than a million spindles. We have instant communication with every quarter of the globe, and fly in a few hours across continents and over seas. The span of your lives has seen this marvelous evolution in material progress. Your day and generation performed the miracle of this great change.

I congratulate you on the important fact that this development and progress were the result of individual initiative and individual industry and without the patronage of government. You enjoyed the hope of reward of individual excellence and accomplishment. You supported the Government and only asked that the Government make you secure in your life, liberty, and the pursuit of your happiness. Government bureaus did not assume to instruct you as to your going in and your coming out. Government agents did not stand over you or shadow you at every turn. Liberty of action and the hope of reward for individual effort were the inspiration of your day and generation.

I have reminded you of our country's progress and prosperity through individual accomplishment, achieved through the hope of individual reward, so I might urge you as patriots and patriarchs to warn your sons and grandsons of the danger of paternalism, socialism, Bolshevism, and all other "isms" that deny the hope of individual reward for individual effort and achievement. Evidences are multiplying in Russia and throughout the world that that government is best that only assumes to guarantee life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and leaves the rest to the aspirations, the initiative, and the industry of the individual.

You were soldiers and are the sires and grandsires of soldiers. Your blood has made glorious every field on which it has been engaged, at Fort Donaldson, at Shiloh, at Gettysburg, at San Juan, at Manila Bay, at Marilao, at St. Mihiel, Chateau-Thierry, at Argonne Forest. Truly you can exclaim, "Mine eyes have seen the glory."

All that has passed in our country's history is an inspiration and a hope for a future full of promise that all the guaranties of a great Government will be secured to the people of the Republic of the United States while they hold fast to that which is good—a government of the people, for the people, and by the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I have no carefully prepared declamation in praise of our soldiers and had not intended to say anything to-day at all until I heard my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], speak of the Twenty-sixth Division and its gallant work. Then it occurred to me that some one should say a word or two, at least, with regard to the Twenty-seventh Division and perhaps the Seventy-seventh and other divisions which represented the State of New York.

First, let me say that I do not believe anybody in this House was more profoundly interested in this war than I was from the beginning. I am sure some besides myself will recall the big map we had in the Speaker's lobby there in August and September, 1914, when the Germans were speeding on toward Paris and when it seemed that nothing could stem the tide of their onrush. At length they were held at the Marne by the French and driven back to the Aisne; and we remember the anxious days when we saw the little pins on the map stand still. We thought every day for several weeks that the Germans were going to be driven back from the Aisne and out of France into their own borders. That hope in the course of the fall was shown to be false. Both sides dug in, and the line was stabilized, as they say, and the fluctuations for a long time were very slight, so that finally the map was taken down, as the War College men who came here to move the pins found there was no moving to do, and we had to study the war in some other way.

It seemed to me probable almost from the first that we would get into the war if it lasted more than a year or two, and I recall talking with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Dr. TEMPLE, who is one of the most profound students of history in the House of Representatives, about our chances of getting into the war, along in September or October, 1914, and he agreed that if the war lasted long enough the United States was almost certain to be drawn in, just as we were drawn into the earlier world war in the days of Napoleon. I could not understand in 1915 and 1916 how anybody could claim to be keeping us out of a war which everything seemed to show we were being drawn into. If this was a war for democracy in 1917 it was equally a war for democracy in 1914, 1915, and 1916. The destruction of the Lusitania in May, 1915, and other outrages committed upon our people on the ocean made it perfectly clear, it seemed to me, that the nation which had started out so ruthlessly on a career of world conquest was not only willing to trample over the rights of neutrals in general, but had an absolute contempt for the people of the United States, and thought they could not fight and would not fight; that they were honeycombed with pacifism and pro-Germanism and wholly given over to pleasure seeking and money making. Finally we did get into the fight, tardily, without preparation, but in time to give them a rude awakening. We slowly got our great Nation in motion, and I believe it is true that the valor of the American spirit and the dash of our men won the war.

But, true as this is, we must not seek to detract from the credit of our allies, who had borne the brunt of war so long before we began. Our men won because they were fresh and eager to fight. They went on the field of battle without the discouraging knowledge of the loss of brothers and cousins and dear friends, such as the English and French had had to suffer. They probably did not even realize how vital to success their presence was in the spring and summer of 1918. They had no idea of losing. They knew the great American people were behind them with tremendous resources, and when they were given a chance they went ahead. The hardest thing for them was to stand still and drill and prepare themselves in the camps. And I think that has always been so in American life.

A good deal has been said about the harshness of the court-martial system, and with truth I think, but it is not new exactly. I recall distinctly an old fellow who is still living up in my district, who fought in the Civil War, and remember asking him one day, "Charlie, what did you do in the Civil War?" He replied, "I fit and bled and died for my country in the guard-house." He was a good deal of a wag, a harum-scarum fellow in his younger days, and, while I know he did his share of fighting when there was fighting on hand, there was some truth in his statement about the guardhouse. An army has to have discipline. It can not have it unless the men obey orders. It is hard for American boys to learn those things. They have been accustomed to independence at home and to acting entirely on their own initiative, and that is why discipline comes hard to them. But when it comes to actual fighting, when the time comes after sufficient training when they are ordered to go forward, they show what they are made of, and then they naturally win if victory is at all possible.

I am sorry to see some evidences of what may be called propaganda against the officers of the American Army. I think it is true that the Regular Army conducted the military policy of the country in this war, and I believe it was well conducted. I believe that is one thing that was well conducted in the war and is least open to fair criticism. Mistakes were made, but not nearly so many mistakes as were made in the Civil War or any of our earlier wars. In the North we raised volunteer regiments in the Civil War. The South had a better policy than the North. Companies and regiments were organized in the North in local districts, and officers were appointed from among local men, and in many cases generals were appointed from civil life, often with very little knowledge of technical military affairs. When those regiments finally went into battle what enormous losses they had. Many of the officers of those regiments became able leaders, but it is also true that many did not. We hear much of the successes and not much of the failures.

In this war the higher officers were taken, as a rule, from the Regular Army. I know that there has been a good deal of heartburning about that, but criticism of this policy can not properly be made, it seems to me, by anybody who understands war. Generally speaking, they were doing their work well, so far as the training of the men and the larger matters of strategy and tactics were concerned. Whether these Regular officers, when they got into actual action in going over the top, were better leaders than officers chosen from the militia or from the training camps I do not know. I have heard it said that when they got in motion natural leadership rather than training came to the front. Probably that is true, but natural leadership and training were often combined. Genius is after all about three-quarters industry and training in any line of endeavor. Somebody has to do the previous studying and planning, and the success that is won by the rush of final action does not come wholly through the courage and dash of the men.

Now, I wish to say a word in regard to the Twenty-seventh Division, of New York. I went to New York to take such part as I could in the tremendous demonstration of welcome given to that division on the 25th of March. It was an inspiring sight. When the great city of New York starts out to honor its soldiers, it gives them right royal welcome. Such a tremendous outpouring of people I have never seen before, and I am sure it must have been an inspiration even to the veterans who were tired from the marching. It was my pleasure afterwards to hear Gen. O'Ryan tell about the fighting of the Twenty-seventh, and how they broke the Hindenburg line, and I have since then talked with a good many of the men from the division. Three companies of it came from my district, and they are worthy of all the honor that has been given them. The men of the Seventy-seventh also fought splendidly, and in fact we are all inclined to think the division in which our friends fought was the best division. I am sure that while we can not say too much in praise of the valor of the men in the ranks who fought in the great battles of this war, we must also give full credit to their officers; and we must consider that as a rule they did not have the same advantages for popularity as the old Civil War officers had of having come from the same localities as the men. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, as surely as the works of God are eternal, and as surely as God shapes and controls the destiny of nations, so surely are the works of him who serves his country, in a great cause, everlasting. He can never die.

Our patriots of the past are not dead, although they have passed off this stage of action. They still live in the hearts of their countrymen and in the very life of the great Nation which they helped to build.

Washington still lives, wherever the air of freedom is breathed; Lincoln still lives, wherever love of country is admired; and Lee still lives, wherever chivalry, true manhood, and Christian character are respected.

The deeds of valor, of sacrifice, and of service of our noble men and women in this Great War shall last as long as the sun in yonder sky shall shine. The people of this country who have contributed in any way to winning this war can never, never die. They shall ever live in the everlasting, ever-increasing glorious achievements of the greatest Nation on earth; in a world-wide democracy; in a league of nations worked out in accordance with God's great plan, and in an everlasting peace. God made our Nation great and full of the love of freedom, and sent our armies into the conflict when they were needed to save the day for civilization and freedom. He raised up a great generation and a great people, and raised up great men to lead us in the mighty conflict, and we won. America was destined to shape the destiny of the world.

The Omnipotent has always prepared a people equal to the task to be performed, and He has always prepared a leader when He needed a leader. Just as surely as He sent Christ to die for the sins of men; just as surely as He prepared Moses to lead the Israelites out of Egypt; just as surely as He prepared Washington to free the Colonies from bondage, so surely did he prepare Woodrow Wilson to lead our Nation in these perilous times. [Applause.] To-day Woodrow Wilson, with the liberty-loving peoples of the earth gathered about him, standing on the top of the highest mountain peak of the world's history, is delivering to the nations of the world the commandments once delivered to man on Sinai, and is preaching "Peace on earth, and good will toward men." "Woodrow Wilson, with the wisdom of Soloman and the patience of Job; with the meekness of Moses and the vision of Isaiah; with the talent of David and the judgment of Paul; with the courage of Peter and the gentleness of John; with the statesmanship of Washington, the patriotism of Lincoln, and the leadership of Lee—such a man meeting such an hour could only come from the Master Mind, who always sends a Savior in the fullness of time."

A great people with great leaders constituting a great Nation has been raised up with a great destiny. Their duty has been performed. Their glory is immortal. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, it was not my intention when I came into the House to-day to speak to the pending resolution, and I would not now but for my desire to call attention to one or two facts that seem to have been overlooked in the very beautiful tributes that we have listened to to-day to the armed forces of the United States, and to call attention to the unjust and unfair statement made regarding our alien population.

We all glory in the growth and in the mighty power of this Republic. It is a great country, as the world has discovered. It has been made great and it has progressed because we have drawn upon the best blood of the peoples of the world, and the development of the country, the ingenuity of our people, and the way we do things is the cause of wonder everywhere. We are naturally proud of the achievements of our Army abroad. They rendered a service to our country not only on the field of battle, but one that will no doubt hereafter make our flag respected wherever it proudly floats. We glory in men who sacrificed their lives in the mighty struggle for justice and for right. As the President said, "The purposes of the United States in this war are known to the whole world—to every people to whom the truth has been permitted to come." We did not enter this war for any selfish purpose of our own, but to "bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free." All praise to the New World Army; they fought bravely against poisoned gas and in the trenches, and they won, although not given much credit abroad; and what they want as they return is an opportunity that helps a man to be a man. [Applause.]

But there is also praise and glory due to those soldiers who were compelled to remain here, where they rendered valuable and loyal service. It was not alone the fact that we were winning battles in France that brought about the armistice so soon, but it was because of the preparation that we were making in this country to win the war, that the enemy knew about, that hastened the Central Powers to ask for peace. The work of all kinds that was done in this country, the privations endured by the people everywhere to back up the efforts of our Army abroad, and the courageous and splendid work of the Navy are among the reasons why we achieved the success we did upon the blood-stained fields of France.

We should remember and not overlook the fact in speaking of our growth, advancement, and power that the people who came from other shores anxious for liberty and freedom, and who made their homes here, helped us to develop this country and make it what it is. They are also entitled to some of the credit for the progress we have made. But the course we have pursued for upward of a hundred years of welcoming immigration to the United States some are now attempting to change, and they would shut the door against the people who want to come here and share in our prosperity. I am against any such legislation. I can remember when it was the policy of this Government to welcome the oppressed of every land to our shores.

In the days when I went to school we used to sing in the morning, at the opening of the exercises:

America, sweet country dear, for every race a home;
We love the land of liberty and all who hither come.

But that is not to be the policy from now on if some people have their way, nor will such a song be popular. It was stated here this afternoon—and I was somewhat surprised at the assertion—that 10,000,000 aliens in this country refused to fight during this war. I do not know where the gentleman who made the unjust statement got his figures, but I do know something of the alien population of this country; he evidently does not. The section of the country from which the gentleman who made that assertion comes has very few aliens in it, and few aliens ever cared to make their home in that neighborhood.

I represent a district made up largely of foreigners and the children of foreigners, with very few Americans in it. Does anybody believe that we did not furnish our quota for the Army? Does anybody believe that they did not willingly volunteer for the Army and Navy in that district without waiting to be drafted? Hundreds who were entitled to exemption waived their rights and went in under the draft. They showed their courage and they showed their Americanism, and they went to the front like any other soldier of the Republic. Aliens by the thousands in this country were anxious to enlist, but were deprived of an opportunity because they were subjects of countries with which we were at war. Not only in this war, but in every war we have ever had, the foreign-born residents of America have taken a part. Why, in the Civil War my oldest brother at 16 years of age was in the Army of the Potomac for nearly four years. Regiments of Irish soldiers were in the Civil War, as were those of other nationalities, and in every other war we have ever had, and we find monuments in this city to Lafayette, Kosciusko, Pulaski, Von Steuben, Barry, and Sheridan; and reading history you can find Irish names as plentiful among the Revolutionary heroes as you can find them upon the membership roll of this House to-day. They fought in that glorious struggle for liberty, believing that this country would remain what it has always been, the hope of the oppressed everywhere. Foreign names! Look at the casualty lists sent over from France, as published in the daily papers; foreign names one after another. But aliens by the thousands are now waiting for an opportunity to leave the country because of certain restrictive legislation and because they believe in personal liberty. It is unfair to stand up here and say, without the facts, that 10,000,000 aliens refused to enter the Army of the United States. The Council of National Defense, the State councils, and the draft boards, the women who knitted and those who sewed, those who nursed the sick and wounded and cared for our troops in the trenches and on the battle fields, all contributed to our success, as did the labor forces of the country, and are all entitled to share in the glory achieved, and there is glory enough for all. We fought a great fight because we fought for the things we believe to be right, and our flag was an inspiration on the battle line to the worn and struggling armies of our Allies and urged them on with renewed courage to strike the blow that brought victory to our cause.

Let me finish with a verse of a poem by D. F. McCarthy in his great tribute to our glorious flag:

Here's our love to you, flag of the free,
And flag of the tried and true.
Here's our love to your streaming stripes
And your stars in a field of blue;
Here's our love to your silken folds
Wherever they wave on high,
For you are the flag of a land
For which it were sweet for a man to die.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, much has been said, much will be said, in praise of the valorous deeds of the American soldiers in the Great War which was recently brought to a victorious and righteous conclusion. However, too much can not be said in their praise. Their heroism, their self-sacrifice, their patriotism, will live in song and story and history forever. These young heroes will forever be enshrined in the hearts of their countrymen. Their deeds of valor and heroism will forever inspire the youth of the land. So far as language is concerned we can but enlarge upon the beautifully worded resolution offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. However, I trust that this Congress will speedily enact legislation which will recognize and reward the heroism and sacrifices of these soldiers in a substantial and beneficial way.

I wish to lay a garland of pure white lilies at the feet of the mothers and wives and sisters and daughters of the heroes of this war, who, inspired by patriotism and love, devotedly toiled and suffered and prayed for their country and their loved ones, and many of whom are now wearing, or are entitled to wear, the golden star. And we should not forget those hundreds of thousands of soldiers who were held in the various camps in this country, who were subjected to the hard, tedious, monotonous grind of military training, but who, much to their regret and disappointment, were denied the privilege of engaging in a spectacular manner in this Great War and deprived of an opportunity to inscribe their names upon the scroll of fame. They should be remembered. They are entitled to their share of praise, and I say this in all sincerity, notwithstanding the fact that I have a son, even now but 18 years of age, who recently returned from overseas after having rendered active service on the Metz and Argonne-Meuse fronts.

However, it is inevitable that those who crossed the seas, those who were offered and who seized the opportunity of doing their part in that larger way, will be more acclaimed than those who were not so fortunate.

No army ever went to battle with a higher, a more unselfish, and more patriotic purpose than did the American soldiers—not for self-aggrandizement, not for territory, but in behalf not only of our own country but of the downtrodden people of all the world. It was exceedingly meet that the greatest Republic in all the tide of time should enlist in this war for democracy and liberty, and I think that no more beautiful sentiment was expressed during the war than that by Gen. Pershing, who, reverently standing with bowed head at the tomb of Lafayette, said, "Lafayette, we are here." And we were there, and we continued to go in increasing numbers, and with renewed enthusiasm as time went on. We did not arrive an hour too soon, but we did arrive in time, turned the tide of battle, and materially helped to win the great victory. I shall not take time to recount specifically any of the deeds of valor and of courage displayed by the American soldiers, except to state that it was a source of pride to me the other day that the entire membership of this House rose en masse and greeted a returned soldier who resides in my own State, and who is generally acclaimed as the greatest individual hero of the World War, Sergt. Alvin C. York. [Applause.] I was proud of him and his superb courage and marvelous achievements. However, there are innumerable other heroes from my State and from every State in the American Union. There is glory enough for them all, both officers and men, as well as for the countless hosts who remained at home and toiled to the best of their ability in various spheres and capacities. In fact, with few exceptions, the American people almost man to man and woman to woman enlisted wholeheartedly in the great war against despotism and militarism.

I wish to state, in conclusion, that these World War veterans are returning to our shores with broadened vision, with quickened step, with heightened impulse, with increased patriotism—better citizens, truer Americans than ever—and these returning heroes will in the future direct the energies, control the policies, and shape the destinies of this great Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, as there are no other gentlemen who desire to speak, I offer the amendment which I called to the attention of the House at the beginning of these exercises, and ask that it be now read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 13, after the word "served," insert "on the selective-service boards and," and at the end of line 13 insert the word "patriotic," so that it will read:

"That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served on the selective-service boards and in the various auxiliary forces, whose humane and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the comfort and support of our valiant warriors."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is definitely and clearly to recognize the services of the selective-service boards, sometimes known as draft boards.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. The inclusion of the selective-service boards is, of course, very proper, but they neither assisted materially in the "comfort" or the "support" of our soldiers, referred to in line 1, page 2. It seems to me, in order to complete the thought that the gentleman has in mind, the word "organization" ought to be inserted before the word "comfort," in line 1, page 2, so that it would read:

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served on the selective-service boards and in the various auxiliary forces, whose patriotic, humane, and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the organization, comfort, and support of our valiant warriors.

Because these selective-service boards were engaged chiefly, it seems to me, in the organization of those forces.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield, would not the word "mobilization" be better than "organization"?

Mr. WELLING. I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to encumber the resolution——

Mr. MONDELL. I fully realize that, and I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I was just thinking for a moment and running it over in my mind. We went very thoroughly and very carefully into this, and I will admit that the amendment that I offered, which it was necessary to offer because of my good-natured agreement, to the change of a single word, involves possibly a little further change——

Mr. WELLING. The word "organization" seems to me best suited to complete the thought.

Mr. MONDELL. I think possibly the word "organization," of the two that have been suggested, is, perhaps, the better, and I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WELLING to the amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: On page 2, line 1, before the word "comfort," insert the word "organization."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent for the modification of the amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The question was taken, and the amendment as modified was adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was unanimously agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, May 31, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 31, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee our Father in Heaven for the splendid demonstrations on the floor of this House yesterday and throughout the length and breadth of our land in memory of the American soldier, living and dead, who fought for his country and for humanity in all the wars of the past.

Teach us, we pray Thee, the value of patriotism, not only in war but in peace, that right and truth and justice may live and make the world pure and strong and a safe place for the home, industry, and our religious convictions. To the glory and honor of Thy holy name, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DUPRÉ, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Widow Emma Golden (H. R. 12263, 2d sess., 65th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I ask unanimous consent for permission to that committee to sit during the sessions of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, asks unanimous consent that that committee have permission to sit during the sessions of Congress. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOHN L. BURNETT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a brief resolution of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on the death of its late chairman, the Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT, who was also a Member of this Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a brief resolution of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on the death of the Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT, late chairman of that committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the resolution referred to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives of the United States of America has learned with deep regret of the death of Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT, late chairman of this committee.

Appreciating his sterling worth and honoring him for his loyal and whole-hearted service to the people of the United States, the members of this committee desire to extend to his widow and his family their sincere expressions of sympathy: It is therefore Ordered, That the clerk be directed to enter a copy of these resolutions on the committee minutes, to present a copy to the House of Representatives for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and to transmit copies to Mrs. John L. Burnett and Mr. P. W. Burnett, of Gadsden, Ala.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 1200) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the Memorial Day speech made by the President of the United States in France yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the speech delivered yesterday by the President of the United States. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

B. F. ESTOPINAL.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, from the Committee on Accounts, offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 56.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to B. F. Estopinal, clerk to the late Hon. Albert Estopinal, a Representative in Congress from Louisiana at the time of his death, April 28, 1919, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILEAGE, STATIONERY, ETC.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 1200 and ask for the immediate consideration of the same.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state the character of the bill for the information of the House?

Mr. GOOD. The Senate has passed the bill with regard to mileage and stationery allowance, and with provision for the pages, as reported by the House, with two amendments. That bill as it passed the House made the mileage that had been appropriated for in the legislative bill for the regular session of Congress available for this special session of Congress. The Senate adopted the suggestion that was made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and struck out that provision, and made a direct appropriation for the mileage of this session, thereby obviating the necessity of making a new appropriation for the same purpose for the next regular session. They have also added the stationery allowance for Senators and the regular allowance for pages and other employees in the Senate. If this consent is given, I expect to move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asks unanimous consent that there be taken from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 1200, with Senate amendments thereto, and that the same be immediately considered. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that the bill that has just been messaged over?

Mr. GOOD. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 1200) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a bill transferred from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a bill, Mr. Speaker, that has only one purpose, and that is to increase the pay of officers in the Army. The reference was clearly a mistake, and it should go to the Military Committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my colleague from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that I ask unanimous consent to have rereferred a bill that was introduced by me for increasing the pay of officers in the Army. It was referred incorrectly to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I ask that it go to the Committee on Military Affairs, which has sole jurisdiction of the subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman consulted the chairman of each one of these committees?

Mr. DYER. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and he, of course, says it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. The same bill was presented in the House in the last Congress and went to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARNER. That meets with the approval of each one of these committees?

Mr. DYER. Oh, yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that it should have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I gave notice the other day that it seemed to me that it would be conducive to the orderly dispatch of business if gentlemen in position of some responsibility on this side, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], responsible on his side, were informed in advance in regard to these requests. I think that was a reasonable suggestion, and I believe that it is a suggestion that should be followed for the protection of the House. If this matter were tremendously important, I would not object; but in view of the statement I made the other day, I feel that at this time I must object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming objects.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, if it were a matter of any great importance, I would have consulted the distinguished leader of the House; but it is a very simple matter, involving nothing except that a little bill, which has nothing on earth to do with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but is a purely military matter, should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] moves that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order at this time. Other business has intervened, and the gentleman has not stated that he has authority from his committee for making the motion.

Mr. DYER. That is not necessary.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri was in order, of course, immediately after the approval of the Journal; but other business has intervened, and an appropriation bill has been taken up, and the Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Obviously there is not.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seventy-eight Members have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

REPEAL OF LUXURY TAXES.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Committee on Ways and Means has a very urgent measure that it is desirous of bringing up in the House immediately. In view of that fact I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2021) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, may we have it reported?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks that the bill be reported. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2021) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is sufficient. It is notification that this bill relates to the luxury tax?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SNELL. To ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan how long the consideration of this bill will take, and whether it is the intention to proceed with the Agricultural appropriation bill when this bill is finished this afternoon?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know what the procedure will be after the passage of this bill, but I think it will take but a very short time to pass this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think anybody can prophesy about that until we find out what it is.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2021.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will take the chair. [Applause.]

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2021) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

Mr. WALSH took the chair amid general applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of H. R. 2021, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the report be read. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred H. R. 2021, to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

On February 28, 1919, the Committee on Ways and Means favorably reported a resolution to repeal section 904 of the revenue act approved February 24, 1919, and the following is quoted from the report submitted by Mr. KITCHIN at that time:

"The purpose of section 904 was to encourage thrift and economy and to prevent extravagance, as well as to provide revenue. It was understood that these consumption taxes were levied as war taxes only. This was a proper tax in time of war, but your committee believes that in time of peace it can not justify the placing of the burden (1) on the retailers of the country of keeping the necessary additional accounting system to collect the tax from the taxable sales in order to properly return the tax collected to the Government; or (2) such a heavy tax upon the consumer.

"Your committee is unanimous in recommending the passage of this resolution.

"Section 904 of the revenue act of 1918 reads as follows:

"'SEC. 904. (a) That on and after May 1, 1919, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of so much of the amount paid for any of the following articles as is in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article, when such article is sold by or for a dealer or his estate on or after such date for consumption or use—

"'(1) Carpets and rugs, including fiber, except imported and American rugs made principally of wool, on the amount in excess of $5 per square yard;

"'(2) Picture frames, on the amount in excess of $10 each;

"'(3) Trunks, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

"'(4) Valises, traveling bags, suit cases, hatboxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

"'(5) Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

"'(6) Portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

"'(7) Umbrellas, parasols, and sun shades, on the amount in excess of $4 each;

"'(8) Fans, on the amount in excess of $1 each;

"'(9) House or smoking coats or jackets, and bath or lounging robes, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

"'(10) Men's waistcoats, sold separately from suits, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

"'(11) Women's and misses' hats, bonnets, and hoods, on the amount in excess of $15 each;

"'(12) Men's and boys' hats, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

"'(13) Men's and boys' caps, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

"'(14) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' boots, shoes, pumps, and slippers, not including shoes or appliances made to order for any person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle, on the amount in excess of $10 per pair;

"'(15) Men's and boys' neckties and neckwear, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

"'(16) Men's and boys' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $1 per pair;

"'(17) Women's and misses' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $2 per pair;

"'(18) Men's shirts, on the amount in excess of $3 each;

"'(19) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' pajamas, nightgowns, and underwear, on the amount in excess of $5 each; and

"'(20) Kimonos, petticoats, and waists, on the amount in excess of $15 each.

"'(b) The tax imposed by this section shall not apply (1) to any article enumerated in paragraphs (2) to (8), both inclusive, of subdivision (a), if such article is made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory, or (2) to any article made of fur on the hide or pelt or of which any such fur is the component material of chief value, or to (3) any article enumerated in subdivision (17) or (18) of section 900.

"'(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of the sale and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 502.'"

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this matter of the repeal of section 904 of the new revenue act was considered by the conference committee at the time the revenue bill was before that committee last winter. The conference committee had no jurisdiction over this section to strike it out, both Houses having agreed to it; but by unanimous vote of the members of the conference committee it was agreed that a special bill would be introduced looking to the repeal of this particular section. Bills were introduced in the House for the repeal of this section of the law at the last session of Congress, but owing to the lateness in the session they failed to pass. The Committee on Ways and Means therefore at a meeting last week took up the consideration of the repeal of several of the sections of the new revenue law which relates to consumption or so-called luxury taxes. The consideration of the matter of the repeal of other sections or parts of sections of the bill was deferred, awaiting further information from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury. Therefore the committee, by unanimous vote, all members being present, ordered a favorable report of this bill for the repeal of section 904.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. This is the same identical bill that was passed by the House just before the adjournment of the last session of Congress, but failed to pass in the Senate?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. This bill, if enacted into law, will repeal, according to estimates made by the Treasury Department, an amount of revenue estimated to be $85,000,000. My candid opinion is that the tax provided for in section 904 would yield more than $100,000,000. I think it will go above the estimate.

A bill has been introduced also—introduced by myself—looking to the repeal of section 630 of the new revenue law, which relates to the tax on soft drinks and ice cream. According to the estimates, if that section of the law is repealed, it will repeal $21,000,000 of taxes in addition to those accounted for by this section.

Many requests have come from every quarter requesting the repeal of other sections of the so-called luxury or consumption taxes. Among others is a request from the dealers of the country for the repeal on the tax on automobiles. If that provision of the law is repealed, it will cancel some $90,000,000 or $100,000,000 more of those taxes.

The total amount of taxes that will be collected during the coming fiscal year, as estimated by the Treasury Department under the so-called luxury or consumption taxes, is in round numbers $350,000,000. Therefore this bill, as I have said, will repeal from $85,000,000 to $100,000,000 of those taxes.

I do not know that I care to make any further statement unless some gentleman wishes some information, which I will be glad to give if possible.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The estimate made at the last session of Congress certainly was that the automobile tax would raise $125,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; but that estimate is reduced by the Treasury Department now to $90,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That has been reduced, has it?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. But I will say to the gentleman that it is my opinion that it will yield far more than $90,000,000, because at the time those estimates were made there were not as many automobiles being made as are now being made. I made an inquiry recently of several of the principal automobile dealers about the delivery of a car, some of the kind in quite common use, and I found that it is almost impossible now to get the delivery of an automobile short of two or three months, if it were ordered now. There is a very great demand in the country for automobiles. The factories are running full blast, as fully as they can find labor anyway, and therefore I believe the amount of the tax to be collected by the Government on automobiles, if this provision of the law is not repealed, will far exceed $100,000,000 this coming year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to inquire whether or not this bill will repeal the so-called luxury tax on jewelry?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; jewelry is not included in this section of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have received a great many letters from merchants asking for the repeal of this tax. I see that it is paid wholly by the consumer, but I do not recall receiving a letter from a consumer asking that this tax be repealed. I should like to inquire whether consumers are asking for the repeal of this tax.

Mr. FORDNEY. The information that has come to me comes largely from dealers, although I have had many requests from consumers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The statement that the gentleman has made would indicate that the automobile business has not suffered very severely by reason of this tax.

Mr. FORDNEY. No. I saw a bill for the sale of an automobile the other day to the purchaser, and it was made out giving the price of the automobile and some extras, for extra tires, that in addition thereto the Government tax, stating the exact amount, and then giving the total to be paid by the purchaser of the automobile. Therefore I believe that in all cases the tax is added to the price which the purchaser or consumer pays, and the purchaser or consumer pays it.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Did the committee consider the question of fixing a specific date ahead upon which this law should take effect?

Mr. FORDNEY. No.

Mr. GARRETT. I have seen the statement—I do not know how accurate it is—that unless something of that sort be done a considerable expense and a great deal of annoyance will be caused to the Government on account of having to return taxes that will be collected between the date of the passage of this act and the time of notifying them to stop taxing.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say that I had some talk with Government officials about that. It was their opinion, and it is my opinion, that if the bill takes effect immediately on its passage every merchant in the country will report the amount of taxes collected from the date that the law took effect and the date of its repeal, and therefore there will be no burden on the Government to separate the taxes from the nontaxing period.

Mr. GARRETT. The point I understood that was made was that there would be a great many who would not have notice of the passage of the act and would continue to collect the tax, and hence it would be necessary for the Government to return all that might be collected after the signing of the act.

Mr. FORDNEY. It might be well to fix a special date; but I hardly think so. I think the Government would give notice through the press, so that everybody collecting the tax would know immediately. If the bill passes the House, as I believe it will, and then immediately is passed by the Senate without amendment, it will be notice to the country that the signing of the bill by the President, wherever he may be found, will be the date of the cancellation of these taxes.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman think it good policy at this time to repeal a tax which is going to yield $100,000,000, and a luxury tax at that?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman, in answer to his question, I have been and am now opposed to putting upon the people a consumption tax. I have opposed it and did when the committee was preparing these hearings on the bill. I do not believe in consumption taxes so long as we can raise the necessary money to meet the running expenses of the Government in some other way less burdensome to the people. The consumption tax in every instance must and will be paid by the consumer. Now, there is a possibility of raising the necessary funds to carry on the running expenses of the Government by collecting money in some other way that would be less burdensome on the poor people.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman will not contend that this is burdensome on the poor people.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is very burdensome on the poor people, because boots and shoes are worn by the poor as well as the rich, and the price that the poor man pays for a pair of shoes to-day is far in excess of the limitation set out in the law. Not only that, but in many other articles of wearing apparel. Prices are high to-day, whatever the cause may be. Conditions all over the world are abnormal as to the cost of living and everything that pertains to food and clothing. There are many articles covered by this section of the law used by the poor people. I believe the tax would be less burdensome to the people of this country if imposed on people that have large incomes instead of upon those whose incomes are meager.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman mean to say that the poor man pays more than $10 for a pair of shoes?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.

Mr. PLATT. I do not pay that.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am a poor man, and I pay more than $10 for shoes.

Mr. PLATT. It is not necessary; the gentleman can get the shoes cheaper if he wants to.

Mr. FORDNEY. If I wanted to buy a pair of stogies I probably could buy them for less than $10, but such a pair as the gentleman wears and I wear costs more than that.

Mr. PLATT. I get a pair for $7.

Mr. FORDNEY. I pay more than $10 for shoes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Is it not a fact that practically all sections of the country are in favor of the repeal of this law?

Mr. FORDNEY. I speak for myself; I have received but a single letter asking the Ways and Means Committee not to repeal this section of the law.

Mr. DYER. The committee was unanimously in favor of the repeal of the section?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Has the gentleman's committee given consideration to the repealing of the taxes on other matters?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; the committee did take up and discuss the repeal of other sections of the law, but deferred action, waiting to receive information from the Treasury Department, as requested by them.

Now, let me say further to the gentleman. I want to say to the gentleman that in reporting this section of the law and as to these taxes imposed by the various sections of the law this must be borne in mind: No matter who is responsible for it, what the cause or occasion may be, this situation faces the Congress of the United States. The expenses of the Government for the coming fiscal year are going to be in excess of the revenue collected by the Government somewhere from one to two billion dollars.

The question is, Where are we going to get that money? The duty devolves upon Congress to raise that money to meet the expenditures already contracted for and expenditures that can not be relieved before the end of the next fiscal year. The Army and the Navy are still costing us a large sum of money. I do not see any good reason why our soldiers who are in this country should not be more promptly discharged. Every man now held by the Government in the Army and the Navy in this country in excess of the ordinary size of the Army and the Navy in normal times is a burden upon the taxpayer, and a great burden. The taxes are millions of dollars per day, caused by the slowness of the Army and Navy Departments in discharging men from the service who ought to be discharged. That is my opinion, at least. I may be wrong about that; but those expenses are going on from day to day, and they are enormous, and where in the world we are going to get from six to eight billion dollars of taxes this coming year is a quandary. It is a matter of very serious consideration for the Congress of the United States, and in repealing any of the existing laws we must bear in mind the question of where we are going to get the money in lieu of those taxes that we are repealing.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. A pair of shoes that costs $10 does not pay any tax.

Mr. FORDNEY. Up to $10; no.

Mr. CANNON. If they cost $12, there will be a 10 per cent tax?

Mr. FORDNEY. Twenty cents on a $12 shoe.

Mr. CANNON. If a woman's dress costs $200—and it is my experience that that is not a high price for a woman who goes in fashionable society—she has to pay how much tax?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know; my wife has not had a new dress since the Democratic Party came into power. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Most of us do know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield for just a moment for an explanation?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to call to the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the fact that women's dresses are not in this bill at all. Women's dresses are not taxed; neither is men's clothing. Those two things were taken out by amendment in the Senate one midnight when everybody appeared to be asleep. So they go scot free. They are not in this repealer at all, because, owing to the parliamentary status due to the fact that women's clothing and men's clothing were taken out, the bill was in such shape in conference that it had to be reported out in that way or else the whole bill would have been defeated.

Mr. CANNON. Let us take trunks, for instance. A trunk costing up to $50 does not pay any tax. I see that is especially mentioned here in this bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If the trunk cost $60, the purchaser would have to pay how much?

Mr. FORDNEY. Ten per cent on all prices paid above $50.

Mr. CANNON. How many men in the House have constituents who buy trunks costing over $50?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. We all have them.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; the gentleman is from Chicago; but how many of his constituents, how many of his laboring men? How many of the farmers of the country buy such trunks? How many of the people who are producing things?

Mr. FORDNEY. All wardrobe trunks pay a higher price than that.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; that is where you travel with a wardrobe trunk, and have your silk dresses and your spike-tail coats hung up on hooks.

Mr. FORDNEY. I may say to the gentleman that I do not own a wardrobe trunk, but I thought perhaps he does.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I do not; I am one of the poor fellows.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no!

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, the gentleman says "Oh, no!"——

Mr. FORDNEY. I am joking.

Mr. CANNON. So am I. [Laughter.] But seriously I do not believe that 5 per cent of the people of the United States pay one single cent on these articles mentioned. [Applause.] I want five minutes after a while in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. JEFFERIS. I would like to inquire where they expect to raise this revenue amounting to $100,000,000 if not raised on these articles in the manner provided.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know just from what source it will come, except it will come from the people in some manner. Taxes must be raised; the money must be collected somewhere from the people. I would say, however, that we must not be frightened over the amount of taxes that we are paying because of this Great War. Let me say to the gentleman that I picked up a Chicago Tribune the other day, and to my great surprise I saw that the English budget, which is the English Government's expenditures for this fiscal year, which begins the 1st day of April and ends on the 31st day of March—their taxes will amount to $7,500,000,000.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Taxes or appropriations?

Mr. FORDNEY. Taxes. Their budget represents the amount of money they must pay this year, collected in taxes, not from the sale of bonds. It must be remembered that the population of Great Britain—that is, England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales—is about 45,000,000, while we have a population of more than 100,000,000. Their public debt is almost identical with our public debt. When our Government has disposed of the Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness already authorized, together with those that have been disposed of, our public debt will amount to $37,500,000,000 and is almost identical with that of Great Britain. Great Britain holds obligations of her Allies in an amount equal in round numbers to that held by our Government from our Allies, namely, $9,000,000,000. So that England's public debt and budget are identical with that of ours this coming fiscal year, with less than one-half of the population that we have to pay the bill. Therefore, her taxes must be double the tax imposed upon our people now.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Can the gentleman give any information as to the percentage of the people of the United States who are paying any portion of this so-called luxury tax on these different articles?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I could not, because, in the first place, the Treasury Department did not have that number; that is where that information must come from, for the reason that these luxury taxes are not yet far enough advanced. They were only put into effect on the 1st day of May, if I am correct, and it is now too early for the Government to find out how much these taxes are going to be and who pays it and what class of people pay it, so I have not that information.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Did the gentleman's committee have any information as to the cost of collecting this tax?

Mr. FORDNEY. No, sir; we have not. We have no information from the Treasury Department as to the amount.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman has given the population of the United Kingdom. I would like to inquire whether or not the English budget is not spread over Australia, Canada, South Africa——

Mr. FORDNEY. No, sir; it is not; it applies only to Great Britain. Canada has an independent government of its own, as has also the Union of South Africa.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman have any data showing how much will be saved in the collection of this tax and in seeing that the law is administered if it is repealed?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; that would be coupled with the question asked by the gentleman from Nebraska as to how much it would cost to collect it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to state awhile ago that the public debt of the United States was $37,000,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. FORDNEY. The amount of the outstanding obligations of the Government, together with the authorizations, is $37,500,000,000.

Mr. DENISON. And in that connection Mr. KITCHIN, the former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, stated at the last session that when all the war debts were paid the public debt of the United States, exclusive of what we had loaned other Governments, would be $20,000,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. Well, it must be understood—perhaps I should have gone further and stated that at the present time we hold in round numbers, it is a little above or below, $9,000,000,000 of the obligations of our Allies in this war, which are to be deducted from those figures which I have just given.

Mr. DENISON. According to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] in the House here in answer to an interrogatory I put to him, he stated that the total indebtedness of the United States Government after we had paid all the debts of this war, including the amount of foreign bonds we held, would be about $29,000,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is, exclusive of the obligations held by this Government, it is $29,000,000,000. Now, let me say to the gentleman in the payment of our obligations for the next 12 months, beginning the 1st of July, the interest on our public debt is going to be somewhere between $1,000,000,000 and a billion and a quarter dollars. That is the interest upon our public debt. So far the interest from the obligation of the Allies that our Government holds has been promptly paid by the Governments borrowing that money, but it must be borne in mind that so far we have loaned them the money to pay, but that will be changed; we can not keep that up forever, and we expect in the future that they furnish the money to pay both interest and principal.

Mr. DENISON. And I think they should. Now, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DENISON. I was somewhat impressed by the question put by the gentleman from Nebraska as to where we will get the $100,000,000 we are losing in repealing this section, and I want to ask the chairman if he can tell the House what part of this $100,000,000 of revenue will be realized under subsection 20 of section 904, which puts a tax on kimonos, petticoats, and waists, on the amount in excess of $15 each?

Mr. FORDNEY. I might be more familiar with it than the gentleman from Illinois, because he is a bachelor, but I must confess I am not thoroughly posted as to just how much we would get from the sale of kimonos. There are no figures on the subject. The gentleman ought to be better posted.

Mr. DENISON. Did the gentleman's committee consider how much of this $100,000,000 revenue which would be lost would be lost by that particular item of the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; there is no way of giving the information correctly, and I will say seriously, because these taxes have only been in effect a few days and the Government has no real statistics other than the estimates made at the time the bill was drawn last year, and where that information was obtained I do not know, but a Mr. McCoy, of the Treasury Department, who furnished these statistics and estimates on all former revenue bills which have been enacted since this war, is the gentleman who furnished those statistics and it was found that he was conservatively correct in all his estimates. I have stated, and I believe now, that his estimates are conservative, because under the act of 1917 for last year and under the act of 1916 it was estimated we would raise about $3,600,000,000 of internal-revenue taxes from the provisions of the law. More money than that sum had been raised and when the Commissioner of Internal Revenue came before the committee, together with the Secretary of the Treasury, both stated that if we would give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a sum of money, of about $7,000,000, to pay expert accountants to review the tax returns that had come in they would collect—and that estimate was taken from those reports that had already been reviewed up to that time—they would collect another billion dollars, and therefore that law would yield more than $5,000,000,000 on an estimate of $3,600,000,000.

Therefore, it would seem that the estimates provided in the same way by the same gentleman, as set out in this law, are conservative and below the amount that will be collected.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to state, Mr. Chairman, that I am in sympathy with the repeal of most of the items of this section, but it does seem to me that a tax on kimonos and petticoats and waists in excess of $15 is so clearly a luxury tax, if I understand what those mean——

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman does not claim that a petticoat is a luxury?

Mr. DENISON. I do not know much about those items, but I think that is a luxury.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I merely wanted to say that while it is utterly impossible to give any figures as to how much the collection of these taxes is going to cost, my information is that it was necessary to organize a bureau in the department for the sole purpose of collecting this tax, and it is thought it would be extremely expensive to collect it. My guess is—and, of course, it is a guess—that our net loss of revenue from the repeal of section 904 would not cost anything like $8,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the gentleman is correct in that statement, although it is absolutely impossible to know at this time just how much money it is going to cost the Government to collect those taxes. But it is estimated, as the gentleman says, that it will cost a large sum of money.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. TINCHER. Have the committee under consideration any proposition for the repeal of section 907 of the revenue act?

Mr. FORDNEY. May I ask the gentleman what that section covers? I have not the bill before me.

Mr. TINCHER. It covers tooth paste, liniment, and everything that has to be handled in the ordinary drug stores.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not believe there was any specific bill introduced and sent to the committee for the repeal of that section of the law, but the whole proposition of the consumption and luxury tax was discussed by the committee briefly and brushed aside for further information, with the exception of this section which we are now offering to repeal.

Mr. TINCHER. Will there be in the hearings of the Treasury Department an endeavor to find out whether you can save a good part of this by repealing section 907, thus releasing from the Treasury of the United States a number of accountants that it will take to collect under 907?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know how much that will amount to.

Mr. HOCH. Is the proposition for the repeal of this particular section based upon the injustice of this tax or primarily on the difficulty and impracticability of collecting the tax?

Mr. FORDNEY. There are several reasons. First of all, when this bill passed the House providing for the so-called consumption and luxury taxes it was at that time thought advisable and necessary to collect by the provisions of this bill $8,000,000,000. But the gentleman will remember that between the time this bill passed the House and the time it was taken up for consideration in the Senate the armistice was signed and the Secretary of the Treasury went before the Committee on Finance of the Senate and recommended a reduction of from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 for the taxable year of 1918 and a reduction to $4,000,000,000 for this year. Therefore it was thought not necessary to carry all those provisions; that we would not need the amount of money that bill would raise. But it now transpires we are going to need a great deal more money than it was thought six or eight months ago we would need this coming fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that there was no tax upon tailor-made clothes. I would like to know if the revenue bill provides for any tax?

Mr. FORDNEY. Answering the gentleman, it is my recollection, without going back and reading the specific provision in the law, that there is a tax, no matter where those clothes are made. If the value of those goods are above a certain sum, there will be a tax.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman pardon me again?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the assertion, and I am quite sure the gentleman will verify it when he stops to think, that men's and boys' clothing and women's dresses were in the original law, as reported to the House and passed by the House, but were stricken out in the Senate, and they are not in this bill or in this repealer. I understand that there is absolutely no tax whatever upon men's clothing and boys' clothing or women's dresses.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is as I understood the gentleman when he mentioned the subject.

Mr. FORDNEY. Possibly the gentleman is right.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. I simply desire to state to the gentleman that I believe there are members of the committee who would never vote for the repeal of this law if it is to be grounded upon the fact that these items affect the poor people. It must be grounded upon the fact that it is impossible or very difficult to make the collection, because we can not go before the country, in my judgment, and justify exempting shoes of $10, valises of $25, and trunks of $50. It was based prior to this time, and this time also, I take it, on the difficulty of making the collection, not only on the part of the retailer in keeping the account, but on the part of the Treasury Department. So if it is to be based, as has been suggested here, on the statement that it is going to help the poor man, I do not think we can go before the country on that issue at all, and I do not believe the chairman wishes to be so understood.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] that in making that statement he is reflecting upon the intelligence of another body, one of whose Members at a late hour in the evening made one of the greatest speeches ever made in favor of this bill, in favor of the poor women who wore calico dresses, and the poor workmen who would have to pay $25 for a suit of clothes, and succeeded in that argument in knocking out the taxes that had gotten in this bill against women's dresses and Parisian gowns, and things of that sort, and against tailor-made clothes of gentlemen who can afford to go out to evening parties.

I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will look up the RECORD and examine the speeches that were made by an eloquent gentleman in the other body, when appealing at 12 o'clock midnight to those who were in the galleries, who asked that justice be done to those unfortunate poor who would have to buy dresses for women and clothing for men.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FREAR. I have never found it necessary to be governed by the judgment of those in the other body in my reasoning, nor have I found it necessary or advisable even to be governed in my judgment by those in this body on a question of public economy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will always form opinions of his own on these matters.

Mr. FREAR. I am trying to do so now. I believe that there are many Members of this House who are acting upon this question of repealing these features of the bill solely because of the difficulty in making collections both on the part of the retailer and on the part of the Treasury Department, and they can not justify it because it is going to be a relief to the poor people, judging from these items. All that we have to do is to read them to make sure of that.

Mr. FORDNEY. I received a letter this morning from a man appealing to me to bring about the repeal of these so-called consumption taxes on the ground that he is receiving to-day from the Government—he is a Government employee—$65 a month, and he states that it affects the value of about everything that comes into his house, and on a salary of $65 a month this law is collecting from him a tax that he feels unable to pay.

Now, you can spread this tax over the poor or the rich as you may, but there are many items in this bill that are used by all the common people of the country on which the tax is being repealed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Reverting to the source of revenue, what proportion of the revenue will be raised by the war excess-profits tax? It is from $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000, is it not?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; something over $3,000,000,000 now.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have the gentleman's judgment as to whether that source will be very much after the war is over?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, I would say to the gentleman this—and I am glad he brought up that question, because it permits me to make a brief statement on the provisions of this law, which in my opinion ought to be changed; I do not know whether this would be a popular move or not, but I do know that it would be a very beneficial move to the labor of this country and to the capital of the country if the present excess-profit tax imposed upon the corporations should be transferred to the stockholders instead of the corporations. If the gentleman will permit me, a corporation is only the trustee of property belonging to the stockholder. It owns nothing. The stockholder owns all that property. The corporation is only acting for the stockholder. I do know this, that there are industries to-day, corporations that after they have earned a sufficient or reasonable income upon their capital invested are loath to go any further in making any large profits, because of being brought out of the lower paragraph of the income-tax law or the excess-profit tax law. The taxes upon further profits are very heavy, and that corporation, after it has earned a reasonable income upon the capital invested, does not care to break its neck, so to speak, in making more money and paying out $4 out of $5 to the Government on all money earned above a certain sum. That was the case with the taxes for the year 1918, now reduced. I believe that if that excess-profit tax should be removed or transferred, as I have said, from the corporation to the stockholders, the corporation would be given a free hand to run at its fullest capacity, producing more cheaply than under any other circumstances, and when the money is once paid to the stockholder, the Government should collect from the stockholder a sum equivalent to that which would be collected from the corporation.

I am not advocating less taxes on the stockholder or the corporation, because I know that we must collect a large sum of money there, but what I want is the privilege extended to the corporation to run the whole year round at its fullest capacity and to make all the money it can, and by so doing give full scope to its productive ability. But when that money is once earned, it should go to the stockholders; and if not distributed to the stockholders during the taxable year, then some equitable plan should be adopted to tax that money in the hands of the corporation as if it had been distributed to the stockholders, but giving the corporation a freer hand for the greater expansion of business.

Now, another thing: In the law there is provided a certain income from the sale of real estate and other property. The Treasury Department, through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has adopted a plan of collecting income taxes. It is a regulation, not a law, in my opinion, and it is this: If a party were selling some real estate to-day under the usual terms of deferred payments, say, one-fourth down on the purchase of the property or the signing of the contract and the balance in one, two, or three years—which is very common in the sale of real estate—if notes are given, the Treasury Department treats that as a completed or closed contract, and the parties selling the property must pay a tax on not only the cash received but the full value on the sale. Now, on the other hand, if notes are not given and the amount that would be provided for in the notes is provided for in the contract to be paid in one, two, or three years, the Treasury Department does not consider that a completed contract or completed sale and only considers as income the amount of cash received, and the deferred payments then are considered income in the year in which it is paid.

Now, that is a ruling of the Treasury Department through the commissioner's office, and it is wrong. I know of many instances where contracts have been made for the sale of property and notes given for deferred payments that never will be paid. I know a specific instance; I have one myself, in a sale which I made in 1912. I did not report income because the cash payment was very small. I took notes for long-time payments, payable every 90 days. In the meantime a storm came along and blew down much of the timber covered by that contract. The corporation to whom I sold is financially irresponsible except for the security of the property which I sold, and now to-day I must lose a large sum of money on that contract upon which I am called upon to pay a tax, and I never did and never will get that money.

You will pardon me for referring to a personal matter, but I know of other such instances. A note should not be considered income until the money is received for that note. Neither should a stock dividend be considered as income until the money has been received for that stock, and since this law has been enacted the Federal court in the district court for the southern district of the State of New York has held that the stock dividend is not income until it has been converted into money.

I believe that is a just and equitable decision of the court; but the Federal Government has appealed that case, and it will go finally to the Supreme Court of the United States if it is not there now. These things are rulings on the law, not provisions of the law, and I believe there are many other provisions of the law that work an injustice upon the people of the country.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. My concern in the reduction of this amount of $100,000,000 is with reference to the future, because if the excess-profit tax continues, as I presume it will, whether rightly or not, after the war is over I can not see that there will be such a great amount collected under that tax. It seems to me that that was very largely penal, and when people talked about profiteering in the war the answer was, "Let the profit be made, and the Government will take it in the form of a tax." That will not go on after the war, and if the receipts from the excess-profit tax are materially reduced what are we going to look to as a source of revenue?

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe it will be businesslike to do two things: First, to prune most industriously everyone of the appropriations for the maintenance of this Government. [Applause.] We ought to curtail wherever we can without crippling the Government. Secondly, then we must look around for the necessary money to meet our ordinary expenses. The obligation is upon the Government, and the people are the Government, and therefore we must raise the money in some way. We must raise it in the most equitable and just manner.

Let me correct a statement that I made just a minute ago. When I stated that a stock dividend was not income, I did not mean that. I had reference to the note or obligation in a contract for the sale of real estate. The law did provide that a stock dividend should be considered income.

Mr. FESS. I understand the gentleman has no trepidation about our ability to pay the expenses incurred for the war without injury to the public?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I have no fear whatever about our ability to pay our debts. I have not the exact figures before me, but I have them in mind, and they are very nearly correct. It is stated that the public debt of Great Britain to-day is, in round numbers, $800 per capita, and that the per capita debt of France is $900 for every man, woman, and child in France, and the public debt of Germany to-day is equal to 50 per cent of the total value of all property in Germany. That does not include the obligations that would be placed upon Germany by the Allies now considering that matter at Paris.

Mr. CARTER. How much is the public debt of the United States?

Mr. FORDNEY. The estimate is that the wealth of the United States is $300,000,000,000, and exclusive of the obligations of our allies that we hold the per capita debt of the United States to-day is only $300, one-third that of France, about one-half that of Great Britain, and far below that of Germany, because Germany's wealth before the war was only $80,000,000,000 as against $300,000,000,000 for the people of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman permit a further interruption?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I had felt that these luxury taxes were conducive to saving as against extravagance. I was rather inclined to oppose the repeal for that reason. I also thought, in reading it over pretty carefully, that a man of my standing could get through without paying any luxury tax at all. I do not see any article in here that would hit me, and I think I would represent the average fellow. I thought the tax was in the interest of frugality as against extravagance at a time when we are trying to save money, and we need all the revenue we can get. I was questioning the wisdom of the repeal, although there is a tremendous clamor for it.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman was present, as I was, in this Hall two weeks ago last Saturday night, when the Republican Party in conference, or in caucus, as you may call it, passed a resolution recommending the repeal of the so-called consumption taxes. This is one of the sections. The Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee have joined with the Republican Members of the House in a unanimous report for the repeal of section 904, and this is a partial compliance with the resolutions passed by the Republican Party two weeks ago. Therefore, whether or not there are some people who would pay the tax who could well afford to pay it, who are caught under section 904, I do not want to argue that; but this action is in line with the resolutions passed by our party in conference two weeks ago, it is in line with the agreement of the conferees in the last session of Congress, and the bill for the repeal was passed in the House without a dissenting vote at that time, but failed to pass in the Senate because of the lateness in the session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will ask for 20 minutes more time, solely for the purpose of answering questions, if anyone wishes to ask me any. I do not think I will use all that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his time be extended 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As one member of the committee on Ways and Means I wish to add one word to what the gentleman from Michigan has said, with which I am in entire accord. It is true, as the gentleman stated, that the committee unanimously agreed to report this bill. Perhaps the members were influenced by a different reason, but I think there were few and possibly no members of the committee who objected to this tax in the abstract. The objection to the tax arose from the manner in which it worked out, more than from the nature of the tax itself; from the expense of collecting it and from the fact that it was generally believed that some persons succeeded in evading it, and because in many cases the cost of keeping track of it on the part of the merchant was more than the tax amounted to.

Then, there was another thing that influenced some—especially myself—and that is that over in the other body, spoken of by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, they proceeded for some reason, thought good by themselves, to take out the tax on men's and women's clothing, which made the whole section look unfair and unjustifiable in comparison. Influenced by these matters, it became not, as the gentleman from Michigan said, a party matter at all, because at the last session a bill was passed for its repeal, went through the House without opposition, and was presented by the Democratic floor leader, and both Democrats and Republicans voted for it. That was another reason that influenced members of the committee—that there was an implied pledge or understanding that these taxes would be repealed at this session. So I think, as a whole, it is not the nature of the taxes themselves that influenced the committee so much as these other matters.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think this matter ought to be determined on what was done heretofore or upon the fact as to whether Democrats or Republicans voted for it. What is its purpose by taking taxes off of those who will not feel them and placing them on those who are not able to pay them? I do not understand that a suit of clothes is not necessary in and of itself, but the price of it ceases to be a necessity whenever you put it beyond that which is necessary to pay for the purpose for which we wear clothes—to keep us warm and comfortable. I understand that on a suit of clothes costing over $50 the excess over $50 is taxed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me say again to the gentleman that men's clothing is not taxed at all. If any dealer in this city or elsewhere taxes a gentleman who comes in and buys a suit of clothes he is liable to go to jail for one year and pay a fine of $1,000 for misrepresentation of the facts.

Mr. SIMS. I do not care whether it is a suit of clothes or a trunk costing $50.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me say again that when the bill came into the House from the Ways and Means Committee it carried two provisions—that men's clothing in excess of $50 per suit should pay a tax, that women's clothing in excess of $50 for a dress should pay a tax. If a woman wanted to buy a dress and pay $49.99 for it, she paid no tax. If she wanted to buy a $5,000 dress, she would be taxed on everything above $50. If a workingman or a rich man paid $49.95 for his suit of clothes, he paid no tax under our bill. If he bought a suit costing $150 or $200 from a fancy tailor, he paid a tax on all in excess of $50.

When that bill got to the other side, to the unmentionable body, a Member of that other body, in an outburst of eloquence that swept those in the gallery off their feet and almost brought tears into their eyes, pleaded in behalf of the poor workingman who would be taxed by this bill, having in mind the workingman who would pay over $50 for a suit and the good, dear lady who takes $5,000 of American money, goes to Paris, and buys a Parisian gown, and insisted that there should be no tax on women's dresses. We provided that she could buy a dress without paying a tax if she did not pay more than $50. We thought that we took care of the poor in this bill.

Mr. SIMS. The luxury part is not in the amount paid, as fixed by the Ways and Means Committee, but in the amount over what is considered to be necessary for the necessary uses of a garment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not think that a $5,000 gown is necessary for any lady, does he?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, there are some ladies down in Tennessee——

Mr. FORDNEY. The more handsome the lady, the more handsome she makes the gown look.

Mr. SIMS. The more handsome the lady, the less she needs a gown costing over $50. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, let me say to the gentleman, to recompense the Government for taxes lost by the repeal of section 904, since the war several great industries have sprung up in this country that could not survive against the strong and unfair competition that we had prior to war conditions. One is potash. If you gentlemen of the House wish very valuable data on that subject, you will read the annual report of the Alien Property Custodian, the Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, now Attorney General. In his annual report, beginning on page 25, he there describes the unfair and ruinous competition in the chemical industry in this country carried on by the Germans prior to the war. He explains it there more fully than I have time to explain it now. He showed in one particular instance where there were five industries established in this country in the chemical industry; they ran along, but afterwards competition became so keen that the price of the article produced was cut down so low that three out of the five were obliged to suspend operations.

When the war came on the two that had survived, it transpires, were branches of a parent company in Germany. Since that time the Government has taken them over under the enemy alien property act.

Since the war broke out people have invested in this country some $50,000,000 in the production of potash.

Mr. SIMS. What has that to do with women's underclothes?

Mr. FORDNEY. It has a lot to do.

Mr. SIMS. I do not see how that comes in.

Mr. FORDNEY. How could you raise cotton without potash, and women's underclothes are made of cotton.

Mr. SIMS. Not those that cost more than $50.

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, that is the reason why Republicans and Democrats should read this statement of Mr. Palmer.

Mr. SIMS. Of course the Republicans are not in favor of taxing luxuries. We all know that, but this is one time we believe they would stand for the Democratic policy of putting heavy taxes on luxuries and light ones on necessaries.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, $50,000,000 has been invested in that industry, and the Geological Survey reports that in a certain lake in California there is raw material in sight to supply our wants at the present consumption for the next 80 years, and another lake in Nebraska quite equal to that of California. Potash is produced in 12 States in the Union from various sources. That industry will be put out of business unless we give them some protection, and the Ways and Means Committee will in a few days report what we might call a separate or shotgun bill for the purpose of protecting that industry.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has introduced a bill to protect the dyestuffs industry, one of the most important in the land. We have all the raw material necessary to make all of the dyestuffs for the whole world. All that is necessary is for our Government to protect that industry in this country against the cheaper made article and the ruinous competition from Germany that existed before the war and will exist again the minute this war is over.

Another is laboratory glass, and I could go on and detail several of them. We will present to the House separate bills for the protection and relief of those industries, and we are going to ask our good Democratic friends to help us protect them from ruination, from competition from Germany the minute the peace treaty is signed, and I know you will do it.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] said that, of course, the Republicans are in favor of the repeal of luxury taxes. I just want to quote from the President's message to the end that the Democrats may see there are some Democratic reasons for the repeal.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. If the gentleman can find anything really condensed in that message he will do more than I can.

Mr. REED of New York. In that message the President said:

> Many of the minor taxes provided for in the revenue legislation of 1917 and 1918, though no doubt made necessary by the pressing necessities of the war time, can hardly find sufficient justification under the easier circumstances of peace, and can now happily be got rid of. Among these, I hope you will agree, are the excises upon various manufacturers and the taxes upon retail sales. They are unequal in the incidence on different industries and on different individuals. Their collection is difficult and expensive. Those which are levied upon articles sold at retail are largely evaded by the readjustment of retail prices.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, that all applies to soda water and things like that.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have in my possession 42 propositions on which the President has taken 89 positions. That makes three more. [Laughter.] He might change his mind again before he gets over here.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. It has been stated by members of the committee on the floor that one of the motives actuating the committee in seeking a repeal of this section is the fact that another body has taken the tax off men's clothing in excess of $50, and also women's clothing. Is there any other reason why we should repeal this tax, and because another body takes out two things that should be taxed, is there any reason why we should retaliate and take out all of the rest?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is not the reason.

Mr. REAVIS. What is the real reason?

Mr. FORDNEY. The real reason is that it is a consumption tax, and because of the items contained in that section 904 being composed of articles of common use by all of the people. It was thought advisable, by both Democrats and Republicans, to strike it out, and here we are.

Mr. REAVIS. The statement is made in the report that the reason is the difficulty of collecting the tax and the burden that is imposed upon the retailer. What information has the committee on that point?

Mr. FORDNEY. We have no reliable information, because the law has been in effect only a short time, and there is no reliable information obtainable, except the general information that we know that it is going to be very expensive to collect this tax.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I want to take the gentleman out of this political turmoil and ask him a question about that thing he was discussing when first interrupted. As I understood the gentleman's policy, it is that the excess-profits tax should not be assessable until after distribution of dividends?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. CARTER. Let us have the gentleman's position on that.

Mr. FORDNEY. My idea—and I do not know whether this be agreeable, for it is only a personal idea; I do not know what my party or the gentleman's party might think of it—is that it would be a great benefit to the industries of the country to permit them to run full blast, if we would put the tax upon the individual stockholder and not the corporation. If the corporation fails to distribute the money, it should be taxed as if it were distributed. I am not trying to get away from any of the taxes at all.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. As I understand the chairman of the committee, you expect to lose by the repeal of this section $100,000,000 of taxes, and you know of no place now from which you can get that amount?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; we do.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. What is the method, then?

Mr. FORDNEY. By an import duty, and we propose to bring in a bill of that kind as soon as we can. It will take several months to prepare it, but we are going to bring it in.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will that bill bring in a sufficient amount of revenue to cover the deficit which the gentleman has stated here will exist?

Mr. FORDNEY. We have no bill prepared. We have not had time. The gentleman will remember last year it took the Committee on Ways and Means 20 weeks to prepare the present so-called new revenue bill.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Has there ever been a tariff bill prepared that would bring in that amount of revenue on imports——

Mr. FORDNEY. One hundred million dollars?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. No; the amount that the gentleman stated would be a deficit. I think the gentleman stated $6,000,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no; but I will say this, however, that if the rates of duty had been in effect last year which are provided for in the Payne tariff law, which had the lowest ad valorem rates that we had had for half a century down to 1913, on the amount of goods imported last year we would have collected more than a billion dollars of import duties. We collected $170,000,000. Our import duties to-day are lower than those of China, lower than any country in the world that has any tariff law.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Have not the requests which have come for the repeal of this section come largely from the large department stores, and not from the small merchants?

Mr. FORDNEY. I could not say that was just correct; they came from many sources.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Was it the unanimous report of the committee—both Democrats and Republicans alike—that this section of the bill should be repealed?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir; both at this session of Congress and at the last session.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Then, this does not savor of anything like a party division, so to speak?

Mr. FORDNEY. No.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Was it the unanimous opinion of the committee that one of the principal reasons for this repeal was the excessive cost for the benefits derived under the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. This is one of the consumption-tax provisions of the law; and I believe that nearly every man on the committee was opposed to consumption taxes then and is now. This section being one of the most obnoxious, they thought it ought to be repealed.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Will the chairman be kind enough to state——

Mr. FORDNEY. One of the most burdensome, I will say.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Whether or not it was considered and whether that was one of the reasons why this section was recommended for repeal—the excessive cost of collection?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, that was part of it; but this is a consumption tax, my friend, and that is one of the reasons.

Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I thank the gentleman, but I think I will take the floor myself later.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is this repeal proposed as a beneficial measure? Are people unduly taxed now, or what is the purpose of it?

Mr. FORDNEY. To relieve the taxpayer from paying taxes, the consumers of the country who purchase these articles.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then why do the committee stop on one section, 904——

Mr. FORDNEY. This is the largest luxury-tax or consumption-tax provision of the law; all of them amount to $350,000,000. Now, this repeals about $100,000,000 of that, so it is the largest item in the law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How much would the repeal on ice-cream soda amount to?

Mr. FORDNEY. Twenty-one million dollars on soft drinks and ice cream combined; $12,000,000 on soft drinks and $9,000,000 on ice cream.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows we had a tax on soft drinks in the previous bill. The ice-cream soda tax was put on this alone. Is not that correct?

Mr. FORDNEY. I introduced a bill, my friend—it was not in the 1917 law—for the repeal of section 630, which is the soft-drink and ice-cream provision of the law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has that bill been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee in reporting a bill which was unanimously reported by the Democratic and Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee last session and unanimously passed by a Democratic House, both Republicans and Democrats voting for it. I was amused a moment ago when in answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] the gentleman from Michigan reminded him of the fact that all Republicans in the last Congress just before we adjourned and all Democrats voted for this identical bill which the gentleman from Michigan, as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has reported out, and wondered why now the gentleman from Ohio and other gentlemen on that side, who then voted for it, should question the righteousness of this bill or intimate that they were not going to vote for it. He could not understand it. Well, the gentleman from Michigan need not wonder. The explanation is easy. The Republicans of the House simply had more confidence in the Democratic Ways and Means Committee of the last Congress than they have in the present Republican Ways and Means Committee. [Laughter.] When the Democrats reported out, with the approval of every Republican member of the committee, this identical bill, every Republican and every Democrat in the House on February 28, just before Congress adjourned, including the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and others who now question its wisdom, voted for it. It passed the House unanimously and was only defeated in the Senate by the filibuster of three Republican Senators. It is therefore natural that the present distinguished chairman of the committee should express surprise that gentlemen on the Republican side question very much the justice and wisdom of this bill reported out by him. Why, fellow Republicans, this bill is all right. [Laughter.] You said it was all right the last session, just a few months ago. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says he thinks he is going to vote against this bill. Why, the gentleman stood right within 5 feet of the then chairman of the committee while it was being thoroughly explained, and voted for it. Now, I would like to know why this change unless I have given the exact explanation and reason for it. It is just simply a question of lack of confidence on their part in the Republican Ways and Means Committee; that is all. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, let us get the facts concerning this bill and its history. From the foundation of this Government until last year, when the Ways and Means Committee, both Republicans and Democrats together, was writing the biggest revenue measure that was ever presented to any legislative body on earth or any people were ever called on to pay, no such a tax as is involved in this bill was ever inserted in any revenue bill. Such a tax is a revenue innovation. Some call it a luxury tax. It should be called a price-luxury tax. The articles taxed are necessities. They only become a luxury according to the statute when the price of them exceeds a certain arbitrarily fixed price. The Ways and Means Committee put that tax provision in the original revenue bill at the earnest recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the administration, not so much to get revenue with which to prosecute the war, although we needed every cent we could get then, but for the purpose of encouraging thrift and economy among the people during the war—to discourage extravagance. The Secretary recommended a rate of 20 per cent instead of 10 per cent.

This provision, whose repeal by the pending bill is asked, passed the House together with what was then paragraph 1 of the section. That included clothing, suits of clothes, overcoats, coat suits, cloaks, dresses, underwear, and so forth. It passed the House unanimously during the war, as its repeal passed unanimously after the war was ended.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I should read one sentence from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. I will be glad if the gentleman will read it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It says:

> This tax is recommended not only to raise additional revenue but for the equally important purpose of discouraging waste and consumption and unnecessary production.

The necessity has now been entirely removed.

Mr. KITCHIN. As I say, we passed this bill during the war. Before it got out of the Senate Finance Committee the war ended. The armistice was signed. Then, with the sanction of the Ways and Means Committee, Republicans and Democrats, I notified the Finance Committee of the Senate, Senator SIMMONS, Senator LODGE, and others, that it would be satisfactory to our committee if they would strike out all this section 904. It was intended to exist for and during the war. Everything taxed in that section is a necessity of life and not originally a luxury. The bill fixed an arbitrary price above which that necessity should become a luxury and be subject to a tax and below which that same article should remain a necessity.

The Senate Finance Committee, after maturely considering it and its whole history, Republicans and Democrats, unanimously struck it out of the bill which they reported to the Senate. The Senate on the last day of the consideration of the bill restored the whole provision, including the tax on clothing, suits, overcoats, cloaks, dresses, and so forth. Before the vote was taken on the entire bill, in the hurry and flurry of that day's discussion, the paragraph containing the taxing of such wearing apparel articles was stricken out, but the provision taxing the articles now included in section 904, which this bill proposes to repeal, was left in. Though fine, high-priced clothes, suits, overcoats, cloaks, dresses, some reaching into hundreds of dollars each, was made exempt from the tax, a tax of 10 per cent on shoes, hats, caps, hosiery, and many other such articles of necessity was levied. The conference committee met the bill just in that shape.

The House conferees would have been willing to have stricken the entire section out for certain reasons I will give you. They knew there was a discrimination in favor of one class of wearing apparel and necessities against another. They felt that if one was taxed, the other should be; if one was exempt, the other should be. The conferees on the part of the House and Senate had no jurisdiction to strike out the entire section 904, as it appears in the law. Why? Because there was no disagreement between the House and the Senate with respect to the tax on articles covered by section 904. Both bodies passed the bill with such a tax in it. For the benefit of the new Members I will say that conferees have jurisdiction only on matters of disagreement between the two Houses.

The only way to harmonize the tax was to put back the tax on clothes, overcoats, dresses, and so forth. The Senate conferees would never agree to that. The conferees felt that the entire section should go out of the bill; but, as I said, they had no jurisdiction or authority to strike out the tax now in section 904, as both Houses had passed such a tax. So it became law. The conferees were all agreed that the only way we could harmonize it, and the only fair and just thing under the circumstances, taking into account the history of these so-called luxury taxes and the discrimination contained in the section, was to introduce and pass a bill, immediately after the revenue bill was signed by the President, to repeal section 904.

A statement as to this agreement and understanding of the conferees was made in the House and Senate. It went out through the country and everybody understood it. Not one objection to its repeal was heard from any source. It seemed that the whole people, when the matter and the facts connected with it were fresh in their minds, approved the proposed repeal. Accordingly, immediately after the revenue bill was signed by the President the Ways and Means Committee met and unanimously reported out a bill for the repeal of section 904, a bill identical in all respects, word for word, with the pending bill. On February 28, 1919, after explanation to a full House, the repeal bill, just like this one, was unanimously passed by the House. It went to the Senate. The Finance Committee of the Senate unanimously favored the repeal, but on account of the filibuster in the Senate was unable to reach a vote on it in the Senate.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the conferees had not come to that arrangement and understanding, is it not a fact that, owing to the parliamentary situation that then prevailed at the close of the session of Congress, this revenue bill would possibly have been thrown back on the Senate for further discussion, and probably would have failed, and the Government could not have secured the money nor could the machinery have been put in motion to collect these war taxes at this time? That is the fact, is it not, and that is one of the reasons why this understanding was reached?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Now, let us see whether this is a wise and just tax now that the war is over. It is easy for one of a demagogic trend of mind to picture an opposing demagogue on the stump in his district arousing the prejudices of the people, especially the prejudices of the poorer people, against one who voted for the repeal of any kind of a tax supposed to be aimed at the "rich folks." In fear and trembling he imagines how his demagogic opponent will make the welkin ring by holding him up as an enemy of the "poor folks" because he voted to take the tax off silk petticoats, silk stockings, fine bonnets, $5.10 hats, $3.05 shirts, and $2.07 caps. He underrates the intelligence and sense of fairness of the people. No man, rich or poor, intelligent or ignorant, can see any good reason why a Member of Congress should be willing to let a $100 suit of clothes, a $200 overcoat, a $500 cloak, or a $1,000 Parisian gown go absolutely tax free while perfectly willing to put a 10 per cent tax on a hat costing over $5 or a cap costing over $2 or a shirt costing over $3, or on many other articles of necessity. Suppose I make clothing. My friend over there from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS] makes shoes. I have a clothing industry. He has a shoe industry. Shoes are just as much of a necessity to the people of the country as clothing. Both are absolute necessities.

Is it right to say to the gentleman from New Hampshire, "We are going to handicap your industry by putting a 10 per cent tax on your products when it reaches the consumer, while we propose to let KITCHIN's products go free of any tax," though both industries are similarly situated, having same capital, and producing articles of living necessity? I could give illustration after illustration of the discriminations of this tax as it now exists in section 904.

Until the revenue bill of last Congress neither party, from the foundation of the Government, ever incorporated in a revenue bill or ever suggested, even during the Civil War, that this kind of a tax should be levied, making a necessity of life a luxury if sold over a certain arbitrarily fixed price. The Government of France levied such a tax during the war. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] if the Government of Great Britain finally adopted such a tax? I know it was being discussed in Parliament at one time.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The French Government was the only Government that finally enacted this law. The revenue was somewhat disappointing on account of the difficulty of collecting, and the dissatisfaction was very great. After several months of consideration of a bill of that kind the British Parliament abandoned the matter, so I am informed.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is my understanding.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] a moment ago made a very important suggestion regarding the repeal of this tax. He said one of the important reasons why we repealed the section last session and propose to repeal it now is on account of the difficulties of its administration and collection. This is true. While the Secretary of the Treasury, last Congress, when the war was on, strongly recommended such a tax in the interest of frugality and economy as well as revenue, those in the department who had to do with the administration of the revenue laws pointed out very clearly the many difficulties which would be incurred in the administration of such a tax provision and of the many commissions of frauds it involved. This is different from any other section of the bill. It will be almost impossible for the Government in its administration to safeguard itself and protect the honest dealer against a competing dishonest dealer.

There are only three kinds of retail taxes—that is, taxes collected from the consumers when the articles are sold—contained in the revenue act. These are the so-called patent or proprietary medicine tax, the soft-drink tax, and the tax in section 904, now under consideration. The patent-medicine tax is only 1 cent on every 25 cents or fraction thereof. The soft-drink tax is 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof. There are 20 people engaged in the sale of the articles in section 904 to 1 engaged in the sale of patent medicines or soft drinks, and the sales of articles under this section will amount to hundreds of millions of dollars more than either of the other two classes.

The Government can not protect itself or the honest dealer by issuing of stamps or tickets to be delivered canceled to the purchaser at the time of sale as it can do in case of sale of patent medicines or soft drinks. In both of such cases the unit of each sale is so small that the use of stamps or check tickets is practicable, but it is impractical in case of sales under section 904. How can we keep up with the accounts and keep track of the more than one million dealers in articles coming under this section and see whether every month, when they make returns of the sales and the tax, they have or have not pocketed Government money or evaded the tax? How can one tell whether or not they have noted and returned each taxable sale? And then if we lose all of the taxes on pills and tablets and other patent medicines and half of the taxes on soft drinks we will lose very little as compared with the amount that we would lose under this section unless it was possible for the Government to effectively administer the provisions and collect substantially all the tax. And this the Bureau of Internal Revenue fears can not satisfactorily be done.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and the gentleman will notice also that in the same store there will be a dozen different articles, each paying a different rate, upon which a different amount must be paid and a different return made.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is true, which shows how very difficult and costly will be the administration of the provision.

The price of soft drinks, including ice cream, will either be 5 cents, 10 cents, 15 cents, 20 cents, or 25 cents a drink and the tax on each unit of sale or article will never, except in rarest cases, exceed 3 cents, and on pills or tablets and patent medicine the tax on any one sale will not in one case out of a hundred amount to over 4 cents. So the tax in each sale will be a small amount. In such cases the Government can easily protect itself by stamps or tickets to be canceled when the article is sold and the cost of collecting is small. It will get the tax in advance, and the tax being small, the dealer will be able to purchase such stamps or tickets and hold them for sales. But in sales of articles in section 904, how can the Government reasonably protect itself? How can it calculate whether the tax is going to be $1, $5, $10, or $20 on each unit of sale? Sale of stamps or tickets in this case would be impracticable and would involve too much outlay on the part of the dealer. It seems there is no reasonable way in which the Government is going to protect itself or the honest dealer against the rival dishonest dealer in the enforcement of this provision. The Bureau of Internal Revenue agrees with your committee in this matter and recommends the repeal of this section.

Mr. BAER. I was thinking that the same rule might apply to notes in banks. They do not know what size notes you are going to give, but if you fix up a note they put on any amount of stamps. I think the same rule would apply to this.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the gentleman can understand the difference between the illustration I gave and the case that he gives. In the first place there are just so many banks in the United States. They are infinitesimally few as compared with the number of dealers coming under section 904. They are in certain places. The Government knows every one. The banks keep accurate account of each note taken. They are always of record. Of course, the farmers' friend from North Dakota did not know that. [Laughter.] They do not do it in a haphazard way. Then, there is a Government inspector, called bank examiner, who goes around four or five times a year and examines these notes, the amount of each of them, the makers, and so forth. Then the bank officers have to swear four or five times a year as to the amount of notes they hold. The Government can find out exactly, to a cent, the amount of notes outstanding at any one time in any bank. Both the bank examiner and the agent of the Bureau of Internal Revenue can at any time inspect the notes and see whether the proper amount of stamps has been attached to them. And then, too, the bank would refuse to take one's note unless properly stamped. I have dwelt on this for the benefit and information of the farmers' friend from North Dakota.

The Government, in a practical way, uses the stamp method, as in case of notes, as a protection of the revenue or as a protection to the honest dealer. It might cost the Government almost as much as it gets out of the tax to properly administer the law so as to be fair to the retailer and fair to the Government itself. If the Government can not collect substantially every dollar of tax that is due from a dishonest dealer, then it is going to be a great hardship on the honest dealer who turns in every dollar he receives and collects from his customers every dollar of tax due. It will work in favor of the dishonest competitor who pockets the tax collected or, to undersell his honest competitor, fails to charge to the purchaser the tax.

These are some of the considerations that led the committee to believe, on the whole, that this tax in its present shape and at the present time is an unwise tax and that it ought to be repealed. Some gentleman says, "Where can you get it from?" In the first place, let me tell you that, while technically the Treasury Department made estimates of the amount that they would collect from this source, yet practically it never considered it a part of the revenue bill, for the reason that the Treasury Department knew of the understanding of the House and Senate conferees with respect to this section; it knew that, in pursuance of that agreement, immediately after the President signed the revenue act, the Ways and Means Committee reported unanimously a bill to repeal section 904, and the House unanimously passed it, and the Senate Finance Committee, composed of Republicans and Democrats, unanimously approved the repeal. It therefore presumed that section 904 was going to be repealed. The estimates of revenue from this section is a pure guess. It may be $85,000,000. It may be more. It may not be half that amount.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman from North Carolina know of any authority under existing law whereby the Treasury Department or the Internal Revenue Department can require a storekeeper to keep his accounts in a certain way, so as to record each sale, and whereby the inspector or the revenue collector can tell the amount of any particular sale?

Mr. KITCHIN. I know of no law requiring that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not understand that by this act you can compel a man to keep any record of his sales, and therefore you can not tell whether he has robbed the Government or whether he has not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Government might require him to keep his books in a certain way.

Mr. KITCHIN. I doubt whether it would require him to keep a record of every sale, regardless of whether it was a taxable sale or not, but the Government can require him, under its regulations, to keep an itemized account of every one of the sales on which this 10-per cent so-called luxury tax applies; but unless it could make him keep a record also of the sale of articles whose price was under the luxury price there would be no way to check him up. If he was required to keep a record of every such sale, it would be an undue and most expensive hardship.

Gentlemen, let me say that there should be no demagoguery in this thing. In some parts of the country they may think a man who buys a shirt that costs more than two or three dollars is indulging in a luxury. The poorest outdoor laborer in the cold regions of our country can not buy a shirt for less than $5. They must have woolen shirts. Instead of $3, such a shirt, which three-fourths of the outdoor laboring people in the North and Northwest must have during the winter months, can not be bought for less than $4 or $5, and when you put a tax on all over $3 you are taxing the laboring man of the North and Northwest 10 per cent on every dollar he pays above $3.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there any reason for taking off this tax that would not equally apply to taking off the tax on ice cream?

Mr. KITCHIN. Why, certainly. Ice cream, whether the same quantity in one place costs 10 cents and in another 40 cents, is not an article of necessity but purely a luxury. Every article in this section is a necessity for the poor and rich alike, whether it costs $1 or $10. The soft-drink and ice-cream tax is very small per unit of sale. The Government can, as I have tried to show, easily administer the tax provision as to them, and safeguard in the most practical way the collection of the tax, and at the same time protect the honest dealer, while it can not satisfactorily do so in case of the tax under consideration, as those charged with the administration of the law have pointed out.

We should remember, too, that articles which are absolute necessaries of life by this arbitrary scale of price fall into the luxury class in these abnormal times, while in normal times they would fall much below the luxury price fixed by this section.

A hat that you could buy for $3 three or four years ago, in normal times, now costs $6. A hat that you could buy for $5 three or four years ago you can not buy now for less than $10. A pair of shoes that cost $5 before the war you now have to pay $10 or $12 for. Such hats and shoes are not a luxury, but they become so according to the arbitrary price standard fixed by the section, because of the present abnormally high cost of such articles.

An article of higher cost may be a necessity to one person as much as one of lower cost may be to another. Take a suit of clothes. Here is a man, a splendid gentleman, just as good and as much of a gentleman as anyone, who, in normal times, wears a suit of clothes costing from $15 to $25. He deems that sufficient for him, according to his business associations and surroundings, and he is content. Here is another man no better, but with different business associations and surroundings, who pays $50 or $60 for a suit. That is just as much a necessity for him as the suit costing $15 to $25 is to the other man.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not seriously mean to say that ice cream is not a necessity, taking into consideration the climate and conditions and the needs of children?

Mr. KITCHIN. Why does not the gentleman come right out and say that when prohibition goes into effect in New York, ice cream, as well as soft drinks, will become a necessity. Is that what the gentleman means? [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not exactly; I am very serious in this.

Under the conditions and the surroundings we have in New York City, I say ice cream is a necessity for the proper care and nourishment of children.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman wants me to express an opinion, although I am not an expert——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is an expert on raising children. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I am not a physician, and do not know much about the Public Health Service, but I would say that if the children can not afford to pay the small tax on ice cream, I would suggest that if they would take a glass of pure milk, costing a good deal less, put in a little ice, it would be much more refreshing and more wholesome, and in every way serve their health much better than ice cream, the make-up of which is, in many cases, very doubtful.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman stated that a $20 suit purchased by one individual was no more of a necessity or less a luxury than a $50 suit purchased by another individual.

Mr. KITCHIN. Both are necessities to each individual; I did not say luxuries.

Mr. REAVIS. Is not the presumption justifiable that the man who buys a $50 suit can better afford to pay the tax than the man who buys a $20 suit?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think there is no doubt about that. I suppose a man who is worth a million dollars is better able to pay a tax of $200 on a $60 suit of clothes than a poor man to pay any tax upon his, but the financial ability to pay taxes is not the real basis of the tax under consideration. If it was we would provide that the man who paid $60 for a suit of clothes and was worth a million dollars should pay, say, $100 tax, and the man worth $500,000 should pay $50, and a man worth $100,000 should pay $10, and so on. The income tax, with its high gradations, catches the man of financial ability.

Mr. REAVIS. Was not the committee, in the first instance, actuated by the knowledge that if a man insisted on paying $25 for a grip, or $10 for a pair of shoes, he ought to be compelled to pay a tax because of his ability to pay the tax on the article above that price? Was it not founded on his ability to pay?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, that entered somewhat into it, but one of the principal ideas was to discourage men who were not so able financially from being extravagant in their purchases. If, however, they, rich or poor, insisted on such purchases they would pay the tax. One of the main purposes of the section was to promote economy and frugality among the people during the war.

Mr. REAVIS. You relieved them from the tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. This bill repeals such a tax, for the reasons I have given.

Mr. REAVIS. Does not the same motive that inspired the committee to put the tax on these things, miscalled luxuries, still prevail?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think to anything like the same degree.

Mr. REAVIS. It differs only in degree?

Mr. KITCHIN. I believe I can make the matter very plain, so that the gentleman will not be willing to carry out to its legitimate conclusions his own theory. We all admit that these are necessities.

Mr. REAVIS. The article itself.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Now, a house to shelter a man's wife and children is a necessity. There is no man in the United States who can not take $5,000 and build a house sufficiently good to protect his wife and children, to let them live comfortably, shelter them from the storms, the wind, and the sunshine. The house may not be as fine as some others, but it will provide that sort of protection. That is a necessity. Take the man who has the $5,000 house and the man who has a $20,000 house or a $50,000 house. Would the gentleman be in favor of fixing an arbitrary price and saying that every man who buys or builds a house to shelter himself, his wife, and children at a cost or price over $5,000, or even $10,000, should pay 10 per cent upon the excess?

Mr. REAVIS. If the gentleman is asking me the question, I would not, because temperamentally I am opposed to a consumption tax, but I have listened carefully to the gentleman and to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] for some reason why this should be now repealed. The only reason yet given is that the committee agree upon it. That is not persuasive with me. Another reason is that you are discriminating against the shoe man in favor of the clothing man. That discrimination against the shoe man can be secured by putting the clothing man in instead of relieving the shoe man.

Mr. KITCHIN. How about the collection of it, the extreme difficulty, which the department points out, of its administration, and the ease with which a dishonest competitor can take advantage of an honest competitor?

Mr. REAVIS. Oh, that prevails with every consumption tax in the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Was the gentleman here when I explained the difference between a consumption tax on soft drinks, patent medicines, and so forth, in which cases the Government could protect itself by a stamp or ticket in advance, and the difficulty of collecting a tax of this kind and guarding the Government and an honest dealer against a dishonest dealer?

Mr. REAVIS. I heard the gentleman's explanation, and, with all due regard for the gentleman, I do not accept it.

Mr. BAER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] that I regard him as one of the most brilliant, most able men in this House, one whose mind can comprehend any proposition as quickly as anyone; and after Mr. FORDNEY's full explanation, clear as a bell, and after my full explanation, as clear as two bells [laughter], how in the world his mind to-day fails to grasp the sound reasons for the repeal I can not understand, unless he got no sleep last night. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me see if the gentleman and I are not in agreement upon the real bedrock proposition involved here. I conversed with the gentleman from North Carolina at great length about it when it was first suggested. The prime object of this tax was not to raise revenue, but it was to discourage the sale of high-priced articles—not only discourage the sale, but the production of them. So that it would leave the manufacturers who were producing high-priced clothes an opportunity to go to the production of lower-priced necessaries; so that this tax was a tax to penalize not only the sale but the production of the articles described. The gentleman from North Carolina and I agreed that it was an unprecedented tax, a tax which so far as we knew was never in existence in any country, except in France as a war tax, but was justifiable because we were at war. We wanted to stop people from even producing such articles as I described in this section, and was only justifiable in that way as a war tax. Now that the armistice has been signed, we not only do not want to discourage production but we want to encourage it. That is the reason why this law should be repealed.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman has clearly stated many of the reasons why the tax was put in the bill and why it should now be repealed. If gentlemen will think a moment they will realize that other articles could be included in a tax of this kind almost without end and the same reasons as gentlemen give for opposing this repeal could be applied to justify the tax on them. Take chairs, for instance. A man can sit on a chair that cost $2 or $3 just as well as he can in a chair that cost $50. Take davenports, beds, furniture of all kinds, blankets, and hundreds of other things. You can go into every class of articles, though necessaries, and put them into this class of so-called luxuries by fixing an arbitrary price above which they should become luxuries and be subject to a tax.

Let me bring to your attention another consideration. This section, if unrepealed, will unjustly cause the retail merchants of this country to lose millions and millions of dollars. This did not become a law until February 24. When the revenue act, which included this section, became a law, under the circumstances I have explained the dealers and the people generally understood that this section would be repealed. When the act was passed the merchants had on hand many millions of dollars of stock bought long before such a tax was suggested, much less enacted, and with no idea that the price to their customers would be increased by such a tax. The purchase of these millions of goods was made on the basis of a certain profit, that they could dispose of them to customers at a certain price. After they got these goods on the shelves this section was enacted. This would of necessity compel them to charge a higher price to the customer or consumer, who by the provision is to pay directly the tax.

You will see at once that millions of dollars of these goods would never be bought. A person would go to buy a bonnet or hat or stockings or shoes, and so forth, and after the price was stated the merchant would have to say, "In addition to the price you have to pay 10 per cent tax" on such and such excess. In many cases the reply would be, "I will not buy if I have to pay the tax," or the customer would ask for the article below the luxury price and not subject to the tax. There is no doubt that millions of dollars' worth of goods would be left on hand, a loss of millions to the dealers, who purchased or contracted to purchase long before they knew of such a tax. Many women, perhaps, through the influence of "frugality" societies, would refrain from buying articles in the so-called luxury class for fear of being regarded as extravagant or as belonging to the luxury class. Retailers, as we know, must contract six or seven months in advance of the season for which they buy. Before this law was ever put upon the statute books millions and millions of dollars were contracted for to sell at a certain price retail. In these contracts the tax was not considered, as there was no law providing for such a tax, and if contracted since the revenue act was passed, or after the conferees had agreed on it, the dealers had every reason to believe this tax would be repealed. As I said, necessarily many millions of goods will be left on hand by reason of the tax if it is not repealed, to the great loss of the innocent retailers. If such a tax was put on the manufacturer of the articles and applied to articles hereafter manufactured, then the manufacturer and the retailer could protect themselves from loss of the goods already manufactured or purchased.

It is possible that the Government may have to resort in the future to a tax somewhat similar to this, but it should be levied in a way to safeguard the Government in the revenue and protect the honest dealer against a competing dishonest dealer.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I was very much interested in what the gentleman was saying, but I labor under a good deal of the same apprehension or misapprehension which the gentleman from Nebraska has expressed.

What troubles me about this thing is, while the taxes on these particular articles expressed in this bill are repealed, that the tax should be left on things which seem to be equally deserving of repeal. Take, for instance, the matter of fur coats. I come from a northern climate, where a fur coat is a necessity.

Mr. KITCHIN. Is the fur coat troubling the gentleman? It has troubled me. As the gentleman says, in his northern climate and in the Northwest fur coats are a necessity for rich and poor alike. The tax on them should be repealed. It was practically understood at the last session, when the repeal of this section was passed by the House, that the Senate would amend the repealing bill by including the tax on articles made of fur and that the House would concur. This will probably be the course pursued at this session if this bill passes the House. It so happens that the tax on fur coats and other articles of fur is in another section with articles of several different classes. Properly it should have been in the section under consideration. The committee thought it best to confine the repeal to section 904. The Senate, no doubt, will amend by adding fur coats and other articles of fur worn by the people, and the House, or its conferees, will agree to it, as was the understanding last session.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Was that understood?

Mr. KITCHIN. That was the tentative understanding of the members of the Ways and Means Committee and Finance Committee.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I was in favor of the repeal of these——

Mr. KITCHIN. The other articles taxed in the act are real luxuries, regardless of the price. Take the question of smoking. It makes no difference whether a cigarette costs a quarter of a cent or 5 cents each, it is a luxury. It makes no difference whether a cigar costs 5 cents, 10 cents, or a dollar, it is a luxury. It makes no difference whatever whether it costs 10 or 25 cents or a dollar a pound, candy, for instance, is purely a luxury. So are practically all the other articles taxed in the bill. I ask pardon for consuming so much time. I had no idea of taking over 5 or 10 minutes.

In conclusion, permit me to give you gentlemen over to my left some advice——

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Do not interrupt me while I am starting out in my advice to you gentlemen. I noticed the other day when the Committee on Agriculture had up its appropriation bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that on several propositions, which the Committee on Agriculture, after thorough study and investigation into all details, had recommended and reported, and which the Committee on Agriculture, Republicans and Democrats, of the last Congress had, after mature consideration, reported favorably, the Republican Members present, except the members of the Committee on Agriculture itself, led by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], voted almost to a man to strike out. After my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the other gentlemen here who voted with him had made up the majority membership of the Committee on Agriculture, composed of as intelligent, able, and patriotic Republicans as can be found, and had them nominated and elected by the House as worthy of our and the country's trust and confidence, we had the spectacle on this floor of the gentleman from Pennsylvania combining together practically every Republican present in an effort to vote to discredit this committee of their own creation and repudiate its first official effort and act. Fortunately for the committee and the agricultural interests of the country there were enough Democrats here to vote with the committee to save in its substantial entirety the bill.

Mr. BAER. I would like to ask the gentleman if that was not a Democratic bill, and that this Republican committee did not have any hearings on it at all?

Mr. KITCHIN. Here are the facts: The committee last Congress had extensive hearings, all published. At the hearings and in the consideration of the bill in the committee were the present chairman and many other Republican members of present committee. The bill, just like the pending bill, was reported favorably by the unanimous vote of Democrats and Republicans after the fullest consideration. The pending bill, being the identical bill which was reported and passed last session, was, after full consideration by the present committee, Republicans and Democrats, at this session again reported favorably by a unanimous vote. Mr. LEVER, a Democrat, was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture last Congress, and a majority of the committee were Democrats. Mr. HAUGEN, a Republican, is the chairman of the committee this Congress, and a majority of the committee are Republicans. All, Democrats and Republicans, in both Congresses reported the bill by unanimous vote. By your votes you attempted to repudiate the Republicans on the committee last session and the Republicans on it this session. I saw that effort made five times. I saw the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who had more power in creating this committee than any other man, five times ask the Republicans of the House to discredit and repudiate this committee of his own creation, and five times did I see practically every Republican present stand up and respond to his demand. This does not look good. Mr. MOORE and the Republicans who followed him should kick these gentlemen off the committee and put others in their places, if they are either in patriotism, in integrity, or in ability unworthy. I am glad to say that the House is in entire disagreement with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the Republicans who followed him with respect to the membership of this committee.

Now comes the Ways and Means Committee this morning and reports a bill, a Ways and Means Committee the majority membership of which was created by the Republican caucus, and under the influence of the bad example set by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and his followers in respect to the Agricultural bill many Republicans indicate and assert that they intend to repudiate the first official effort and act of their own Ways and Means Committee. They propose to discredit, as far as possible, the Republican membership of that committee. All right, go ahead. I remind you again that you yourselves voted for and the House unanimously voted for this very bill a few months ago. Now, then, shall we understand that you confess that you have made a mistake in electing the Republican membership of the Ways and Means Committee, and that really the Democrats of the last session, when you voted for the bill, had a better committee, a committee more worthy of your trust and confidence? Do you want to stand here at this session and repudiate your own committee while you indorsed our Democratic committee? [Laughter.]

I think Mr. FORDNEY'S committee is right in reporting this bill out favorably, and I hope every Republican and Democrat will vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I offer to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman want to pursue the line of argument now?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have finished my argument.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina and to the committee that I do not propose to talk upon this immediate matter. I intended to talk upon a feature of the revenue bill, and it might be more desirable to the committee to have this, which is right in line upon this section, concluded before I say what little I have to say. I am perfectly ready to go ahead now if it is desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, before he begins, if he will be willing to yield to me 10 minutes of his time in order to avoid asking recognition in my own behalf?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] also would like a little time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With pleasure. I hope the gentleman will interrupt me if I overstep the time, so that I can keep the promise. I will gladly yield.

Mr. Chairman, having sat side by side with the gentleman from North Carolina for many moons, I have every faith in his patriotism, but on public occasions, when there is an opportunity for brilliant oratory, I am impelled to say that his partisanship sometimes overtops his patriotism. Here to-day is a proposition which, as I view it, is nonpartisan. I would not inject partisanship into it, but I find, owing to the speeches that have been made upon the other side and the suggestions that have come from the gentleman from North Carolina, it is necessary to cover the situation, even though one or two partisan references may be made.

If the gentleman will recall the elections recently held, by which a Democratic Congress was turned out and a Republican Congress was put in, after the President of the United States had made an earnest appeal to the people to elect a Democratic Congress, since he had not faith in a Republican Congress, he will probably find a reason for the expressions that come up from the new Members on the Republican side. These gentlemen have been sent here because of a lack of faith in the administration and in the Democratic leadership here. I do not wonder that new Members on the Republican side ask questions about these bills. They have seen enough in the last few days to lead them to believe that the Democrats while in power were capable of putting over a good many things that were in the interest of the Democratic Party, more so perhaps than they were in the interest of the country.

I have a distinct recollection with reference to the Agricultural bill. When it came up here under Democratic auspices from year to year it was raised in the aggregate of appropriations from time to time until it provided ultimately for upward of 18,000 employees, mostly Democratic officeholders, who were sent broadcast over the country to talk to the farmers, and who occasionally did what a Congressman used to do in the old days when he was a candidate, left just "a few kind words for the administration" before he departed from the mission on which he had been sent. It is mighty helpful if 18,000 representatives of the Department of Agriculture, coming from the colleges and theoretical institutions, going broadcast among the farmers in all the States, and particularly in the Middle West, after teaching a few lessons on making cottage cheese and the preparation of apple butter, should say, "Don't you think President Wilson is right on the league of nations?" or "Don't you think our splendid President should be backed up by your votes?"

I do not wonder, if men have been put into the Department of Agriculture or any other department for this purpose, that Members of Congress, coming here for the first time and observing that a Democratic hold-over bill is being expedited in its passage through the House, not because the Republicans had any particular choice in the matter but because it had to be passed speedily to save the face of the Democratic administration, I do not wonder that some of them have been asking, "Why were not hearings had upon the subject?" And I do not wonder that they failed to know that this bill had had hearings up to the tune of 1,000 or 1,200 pages at the last session of Congress under a Democratic administration. They were not aware how the bill had been turned over to us. This bill, as we all know, must be passed before the 30th day of June next or the functions of the Department of Agriculture will cease and whatever benefit the farmers get from it will not operate, unless a Republican Congress passes a resolution, in accordance with Democratic practice, extending the appropriations of the preceding year—a war year, by the way—into peace times.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to my friend from Iowa, the new chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who is proceeding under great difficulties in the conduct of a Democratic bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Not at all. May I ask the gentleman if the bill under consideration at the present time has any resemblance to a Democratic bill such as that which was passed in the last Congress?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. It has a close resemblance to the bill passed through the House when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] was chairman of the committee and when the Democratic Party was in complete control of the House and of the committee and when he had the approval of a majority of the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. In what respect has there been a change since the last Democratic Congress?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I see no substantial changes.

Mr. HAUGEN. How is it a Democratic bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am referring to the Agricultural bill now. It is a Democratic bill, passed under Democratic auspices in the last Congress, and is re-presented because there has been no real opportunity to prepare a proper bill since the Democrats passed it, and we are in a situation where, if the bill does not pass speedily, the functions of the Department of Agriculture will cease. So that it is a matter of prime necessity to get the bill through.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. I do not recall that the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered any amendment to the bill as it passed the House at the last session, except that he offered a provision for the extermination and eradication of mosquitoes. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is usually accurate, but in this instance he falls short of the mark, because while that was a standing motion for three or four sessions of Congress previously, and while it met with a heartless rebuff from the gentleman from South Carolina always and ever, although his section of the country is sometimes as afflicted by the pest as any other section of which I spoke, yet that question did not arise at the last session of Congress and no such amendment was offered by me.

Now, I want the new Members to observe that the present agricultural bill contains no provision for the extermination or eradication of the mosquito, which the gentleman from South Carolina seems to have preferred to preserve rather than exterminate. I hope, however, that under a Republican administration we may be able to put the mosquito out of business, even in the gentleman's territory. [Laughter.] So that, to resume, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] was answered to a certain extent by the action of the people of the United States when they went to the polls last November and practically said, "Get out, ye Democratic Congress; we want Republicans on guard." Hence, we are here, picking a few flaws in the kind of legislation that was thrust upon us when we were in the minority and when the steam roller was pushed over us from the White House, all the way down the line.

Who was it—who was it that induced Republicans to support the war revenue bill? Did I vote for the great tax bill in committee or upon this floor because I wanted to tax the people? No. And yet I voted for that bill.

Why did I vote for that bill, even for this so-called luxury provision? I voted for it because under the administration of the President, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, the country was brought to such a financial pass that it was absolutely necessary almost to tax the shirts on the backs of working men in order to raise the revenue necessary to permit the President to run the Government, and those taxes included the $100,000,000 we voted to him, much of which he has been spending during his sojourn on the other side of the water.

How much money did he want? Well, gentlemen, up to the beginning of this present fiscal year, which ends June 30 next, we had appropriated and spent, including loans to our Allies, $12,000,000,000—$12 per minute for every minute that has elapsed from the time Jesus Christ was born down to the present moment. That is what we spent up to the end of June, 1918. Then stepped into the Congress of the United States, before he undertook his voluntary mission abroad, the President of the United States, and mounting that rostrum yonder, said that the necessities of the Government were great, that vast sums of money would be needed, and that taxes would have to be levied upon the people, but that the people would not complain. Oh, go and get the address of the President, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, and read there his words to the effect that the people would gladly—I think I am using the exact word—the people would "gladly" bear the burden of the taxes that we should levy upon them, and that it was our duty to do so.

Previously he had suggested that we should go so far as to levy taxes upon stationary engines, upon gasoline and oil; but political conditions that are ever present in the mind of the distinguished and eloquent gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] prevailed in the Committee on Ways and Means, and when it came to taxing the oil—kerosene—that went into the farmer's lamp, "No, no"; the committee could not see it as the President saw it, and the suggestion of the President was heard no more. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania voted for the appropriation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Which appropriation?

Mr. GARNER. The appropriations that we made in the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And all the taxes, too?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All the taxes imposed during the war.

Mr. GARNER. I think the gentleman admits that he voted for all the appropriations and all the taxes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I have already said so. I would not have done it except under the compulsion of war and the direction of the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, who said that unless we levied these taxes, which he said the people would be glad to pay, failure in the war stared us in the face.

Mr. GARNER. Probably the President would not have suggested the appropriations or the taxes either if it had not been for the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not true that, when the President was escorted in here, and from his high place yonder made his address to Congress, he said that for the fiscal year 1919, now about to close, he would need $24,000,000,000? Am I right? Is that what the President said?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; and did not the gentleman from Pennsylvania vote for every appropriation necessary to make up the $24,000,000,000?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. I am coming to that. I am not denying anything with respect to that.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman seems to be criticizing the President of the United States because the appropriations were necessary and the taxes were necessary, and he excuses himself for voting for them on the ground that it was a necessity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will wait a minute—though I did not intend to go into all the details this afternoon—I intended to suggest that although I had confidence in the President of the United States and voted all the money he asked, I have not had complete confidence in the manner in which it has all been spent, and I am inclined to think there has been a great extravagance, which I have not approved. There were cantonments, some of them in the gentleman's own State. There were large Army contracts. There was waste in aviation—$640,000,000 gone up in one lump-sum appropriation for the construction of airplanes. There were 1,500 or 2,000 young American aviators waiting in France for American aeroplanes in which to attack the enemy, but not a single combat plane was produced for the $640,000,000. That money was spent, and there was no satisfactory return for it. And even though the President was forced to investigate it and did appoint an investigator and finally appointed the distinguished ex-justice of the Supreme Court, Mr. Hughes, who found that certain people ought to be court-martialed, yet those gentlemen are still walking abroad, applauded by their superiors in the War Department, are guests at banquets where songs are sung in their honor, the chief of them being whitewashed by the Secretary of War, who tells the public that aeroplanes tingle from the ends of their fingers. Yet our appropriation of $640,000,000 went glimmering, and we never had a single combat plane in France, where for a time approximately 2,000 young Americans, trained for the purpose and waiting to serve, never had the honor of fighting in an American machine. Those are some of the reasons why I think it is fair to criticize the appropriations which, because of our confidence in the President of the United States, we voted for, though we taxed the people heavily to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that $640,000,000 had been expended for aeroplanes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Six hundred and forty million dollars in one lump-sum appropriation, and not a question asked, because the President said that amount was needed. We were told we must keep our mouths shut in Congress, though we were taxing the people almost to an industrial death, because if we asked how this money was going to be spent we might be "giving information and comfort to the enemy."

Mr. MADDEN. In order that the gentleman may get the correct figures into the RECORD, I should like to say that the total amount of money expended for aeroplane activities was a little over $1,800,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why, of course, after they wasted the $640,000,000 they came in and asked for $800,000,000 more, and we were still told, "Ask me no questions. Give us the money." And the administration appointed men to high places to see that the money was honestly expended. If the gentleman from Illinois is correct, the extravagance has gone way beyond $640,000,000—the expenditures up into the billions. That is the reason I say to my friend from Texas, who is always able in defending the Democratic Party and the administration, that we have a right to criticize the manner in which the administration has conducted itself, though we are respectful to the Commander in Chief.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman knew that $640,000,000 had been spent without a single combat plane being constructed, and still voted for additional appropriations for the Aviation Service, did he not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Still having confidence in the President of the United States and reluctantly reposing some confidence in those whom he appointed to administer the funds.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I think it would be well for you to explain the amendment that you had to these appropriation bills, which would have provided for a committee to supervise the expenditures.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I had not intended to say anything about that, because it might be charged that that was partisan, and yet I think it was not. Two amendments were offered to those revenue bills, by way of motions to recommit, asking for the appointment of a committee on expenditures to cooperate with the Commander in Chief—to cooperate, not to interfere—with the President of the United States and the heads of departments, in seeing that these moneys were properly and efficiently spent; and those amendments were defeated, because word came from the White House—the President then being an inmate of the White House [laughter]—because word came from the White House that to impose such a restriction upon the revenue bill would so embarrass and tie the hands of the President as to make him practically ridiculous before the nations of the world. Yet no less a man than Abraham Lincoln, whose memory is still dear to some of us, though sometimes there is danger of an eclipse—in the time of Abraham Lincoln Congress passed a resolution providing for the appointment of such a committee, and it visited the White House occasionally, which, I regret to say, our leading Democrats did not often do while the European war was on. [Laughter.] And they cooperated with the President, the immortal Lincoln, and from him they received much more encouragement, I am sure, than even my distinguished and eloquent friend from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], who now rises to put a question to me, ever received from the hands of the President whom he has loyally supported.

Mr. BLANTON. There are 18 gentlemen from the State of Texas. Which one does the gentleman mean?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The distinguished gentleman from Texas to whom I have just referred. I said in the days of Lincoln Congressmen visited the President, and were received sometimes for purposes of consultation. I yield now to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. If my good friend from Pennsylvania wants to have a row with me, whether I want it or not, I should like to say that I think fully as many members of the Democratic Party during the Civil War visited the White House when dear old Uncle Abraham was there as did the Republicans during the war that tested the life of the Nation when Woodrow was up there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Texas may have a more intimate knowledge of the events of 1861 to 1864 than I, but I am sure from everything I have read that President Lincoln welcomed Members of Congress and was extremely patient with them. And while he might have differed with some of them—the leader of the party, Thad Stevens, was that kind of a man who would force himself into the presidential office, whether invited or not—the immortal Lincoln conferred with the people's representatives even as our President, abroad now, confers with Clemenceau and Lloyd-George, the representatatives of their Governments, about matters here, there, and elsewhere.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman now yield to the more obscure gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman from Texas who began the controversy has not concluded; but having been compelled to rule favorably to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] the other day I yield again.

Mr. BLANTON. I think my good friend from Philadelphia, in which the most of this money was spent, ought to tell us how many prominent Republicans had anything to do with the expenditure of the money which he claims to have been wasted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not count them on the fingers of my two hands.

Mr. BLANTON. And in whom the President had confidence then, but I can not say that he has now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want the gentleman to get this all in—whatever the gentleman knows about Philadelphia Republicans who have been unfair to the President of the United States should be put in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not mean Pennsylvania, but all over the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has heard of the cantonments in Texas, of which there has been much complaint, and of expensive Army camps which should be investigated.

Mr. BLANTON. I think there ought to be an investigation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman confirms my statement that they should be investigated. There should be an investigation of cantonments in Texas, of course; and I am willing that the investigation should be extended to Pennsylvania, New York, or any other State. If there has been corruption, if there has been crookedness, if there has been profiteering, if there has been deviltry in Texas, the State from which the gentleman [Mr. BLANTON] comes, or any State, the Democratic Party is as much interested in it as the Republican Party. When it comes to the ordinary morals taught in the Sunday schools the gentlemen on the Democratic side are as well brought up as Republicans; they want no corruption or profiteering or crookedness under the guise of patriotism. I have sat by the side of the gentleman from North Carolina for some time; he does not swear; he does not drink; he has no bad habits except to smoke lamp lighters, which he manufactures himself.

[Laughter.] I have every confidence that he would be as delighted to have the matter of waste and extravagance investigated in Texas as in Illinois or New Jersey or elsewhere. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. I had not asked to interrupt the gentleman, but I hope when he gets the investigation he will be very thorough with it, and he will find me voting with him to see if anything wrong was done at the Hog Island shipyard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman from Texas well enough to know that Hog Island is in his mind, and I hope when the committee comes to examine it closely neither he nor it will have fault to find with that great work of construction. If anything wrong has been done, I will stand with him for the punishment of the culprits who profiteered on the Government or who used the guise of patriotism to make money while our boys were fighting and dying abroad. I would be in favor of punishing them in the great States of New York and Pennsylvania as I would if it occurred in any other State.

Mr. EAGLE. None of the things that I have observed during the war gave me more profound satisfaction than the trip I made up the Delaware and witnessed at Hog Island the marvelous energy, concentrated intelligence, and wonderful achievements of American organization, American labor, in that matchless work, contributing so largely to win the war. I hope when the investigation shall be made, if ever it is made, on the published charges that wrongs were done in connection with that business, that it may turn out that nothing wrong was done in connection with the Hog Island shipyard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I can not let this opportunity go by without saying that I have always found the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] fair and statesmanlike in matters of this kind. His tribute to Hog Island is more eloquent than I could possibly make it, and I think is justified by the facts. At least I hope so.

If we proceed in this spirit, Democrats and Republicans alike, we may catch the crook, if there is one. We may punish him, and for the sake of American honor may purge ourselves of some of the charges that have been bruited about in the newspapers and elsewhere.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And for these reasons the gentleman has given he thinks this bill ought to pass. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I think the bill ought to pass, and I am rather pleased that the gentleman has suggested that I come to a speedy conclusion; but before doing so, since the Texan controversy has been so elucidating, I shall speak of another matter. I think I should say to my friends on both sides, and particularly to our new Members of Congress, that they must be on guard against propaganda. If there is one place on earth where the propagandist gets in his work it is in the Congress of the United States, and if there is one man above another to whom the propagandist will go and upon whom he will work his wiles, it is a new Member of Congress.

Just a word to our new brethren. If there is an old pension bill that is a stench to high heaven, that has been floating around the Capitol for 50 years, it is likely to bob up when some new Member of Congress arrives. It is not that the old soldier is being wronged, but it is that somebody who has had that old bill in tow thinks that because the new Member has been saying he is a friend of the old soldier he can unload that bill on him.

In tax matters it is very much the same way. When we are raising money—and I thank God that we never had to raise any by direct taxation during my experience here under a Republican administration—the same condition of affairs results. Professing patriotism, talking loudly about what they have been doing for the country, about their love for the flag and all that, interested parties will come before the constituted committee of Congress and say, "Yes; you have got to raise this money, but do not put it on that; that hits me. Do not put it on this; that touches my profits." When you come to take taxes down, as in this case, you will find the fellow next door coming in with his appeal, saying, "Take mine down, too; the war is over, why tax me?" One reason I am not quite in accord with the partisan suggestions of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] when he indicates that we have followed blindly in these two or three bills the action of the Democrats in supporting them is that propaganda has been getting in its work. My experience of more than six years under a Democratic administration here has shown that one of the highest propagandists this country has ever known is the gentleman who guides the destiny of this Nation. He starts things. People then say the President said this or the President said that, and they are influenced by what they read of his sayings, but sometimes, having started something, the President finds that the masses of people are against what he starts and then sometimes comes another address, indicating another change, because, with ear to the ground, our distinguished Commander in Chief has heard what the people have been saying. We have something like that before us now in this tax-repeal agitation.

Why are you hearing from your constituents all over the land about this revenue bill? Who is it who started the flood of telegrams that have been coming upon you during the last two or three weeks? Who is it that started the writing of letters from taxpayers in your district urging you to take the tax off this and the tax off that? Strangely enough it is chiefly the same high official of this Nation, who, according to the admission of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], insisted that the necessities of war required $24,000,000,000 up to the end of June next, including $8,000,000,000 of taxes. It was he who demanded that we levy these taxes on the people. It was his Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, who came before the Committee on Ways and Means, and in a long and learned address to the committee stated that he and the President agreed that it would be absolutely necessary to raise $8,000,000,000 of these twenty-four billions by a direct levy upon the people.

Gentlemen on the other side would endeavor to place the responsibility for these bills upon the Republican Party. I indicated the other day that this whole business had been dumped upon those who were coming into power. I repeat that the Democrats and the administration have endeavored and are endeavoring to unload the greatest burden of all history upon the Republican Party, which has come into power in this House in recent months. It was not of our choosing. To be sure, we voted when the President asked for money to give him money. We differed as to these bills and questioned them as they went in. There were many things in them to which we did not agree, but there stood the mandate of the man whom the people had chosen President of the United States, and there was his Secretary of the Treasury in daily contact with the Committee on Ways and Means, demanding that we hasten the passage of the bill that would carry $8,000,000,000 against the people in order that twenty-four billions might be in hand before the end of June next.

When we followed instructions the people began to complain and those in power responsible for the estimates began to renege. There is no use mincing words about this. When the House bill got to the Senate, those in control at the Treasury began to yield. As to the luxury tax, they said, "Take that down." The Secretary, before the Finance Committee of the Senate, instead of standing up for the $8,000,000,000 by taxes, began to talk about borrowing the money from the people, although we had been borrowing to the limit. Then they cut that bill down so that it would appear that they were not taxing the people $8,000,000,000, as the President and his Secretary of the Treasury had indicated and directed. They cut it down by $2,000,000,000, making it possible under that bill to collect only six billions for the current year and $4,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1920. The people had not taken kindly to the President's appeal for the election of Democrats because he could not trust Republicans. Yes, although they had appropriated the money as originally estimated, they reduced the 1919 taxes to $6,000,000,000 and the 1920 to $4,000,000,000. Oh, yes, the Democrats were constructive. They believed their President was constructive when he incurred the expenses and he was still constructive when he reduced the taxes. You can be against a ship subsidy and have no American merchant marine, but you can be constructive if you are willing to take the money for ships directly from the pockets of the people.

Republicans generally avoided that kind of constructive legislation. The President was against a good many other Republican propositions—against a tariff upon imports, for instance—he was not in favor of levying a tax upon the foreigner who sends goods into the United States to compete with us. Rather should we tax our people on what they produced to raise money for the war. It is easy to do big and daring things if you can tax the people to get the money to do it. Yes; you can be constructive with the money wrung from the people by taxation, but the Republican Party never indulged much in that kind of construction.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand the purport of the gentleman's argument is that this bill is one unloaded on the Republicans by the Democrats?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; it was unloaded on us, but there was nothing else for the Democrats to do. They had reached the limit. The President said we would have to have $24,000,000,000 in 1919. The Secretary of the Treasury said we must have $8,000,000,000 of taxes, and the Ways and Means Committee, under the direction of the gentleman from North Carolina, with Republican support, yes, went forward in good faith to raise that $8,000,000,000. Then they did not face the people with such a heavy tax burden, and it was cut over in the Senate to six, and then it was cut to four. As I told you a day or two ago, my friends on the Republican side, we have got to meet $10,000,000,000 appropriations next year, and if we have only $4,000,000,000 in sight under the tax bill the Democrats left on our hands, and $1,000,000,000 miscellaneous, we may have to make up a deficiency of anywhere from $5,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. That is our responsibility, and it was dumped on us while the people were led to believe the tax burden was to be steadily lowered.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I understood the gentleman to say, in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], that this particular bill was one of the bills dumped upon his party by the Democrats. I should like to ask the gentleman how that happened. We assumed the responsibility of passing it through the House. It only failed in the Senate by a filibuster of three Republican Senators.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman raised that question of a filibuster. I have heard it used here several times. It must be a rich morsel in the mouths of our friends upon the other side. It does not seem to worry even our new Members on this side; but if there was a filibuster over there, or if there were long speeches over there, it might have been intended to prevent the President of the United States from getting another $5,000,000 to spend "over there" without taking us into his confidence. [Applause on the Republican side.] It might have been to save billions of dollars in certain large appropriation bills that this Congress intends to cut down, and which I may say the administration of the Republican Party will report minus certain very large and very attractive and very juicy appropriations and lump-sum appropriations for stocking-up purposes which the Senate did not want to pass.

Mr. GARRETT. Then the gentleman indorses the course pursued over there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say, if it was to save enormous sums of money, I do not blame a few Senators for making a few speeches. If the President had not been so late in coming home to help the Congress of the United States do the business that he was elected to perform, and if he had not been so infernally anxious to get back again, we would not have been in the perplexing situation we are to-day. It was the President of the United States who controlled that whole situation. He could have called this Congress in session March 5 and have remained here until the appropriation bills were passed; but instead of that he preferred to go over there and make speeches challenging the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. My friend, then, indorses the course which was pursued?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, not necessarily. I say I am glad they made a few speeches over there, because they brought out very interesting facts that the people wanted to know.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We learned only yesterday that out of $100,000,000 which we gave the President of the United States, he had allowed the Czecho-Slovac nation $5,000,000, and if it had not been for some little inkling from the other side, not in a covenant openly arrived at, that he gave up $5,000,000, we would never have known anything about it. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he, during his long and very useful career in this House, has been called in conference by the President of the United States more than half a dozen times since that gentleman has occupied the White House?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, I do not know that I remember the times. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, I will say that the President would be a wiser man to-day if he had called into consultation occasionally the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee. [Applause.] I am not flattering the gentleman from Tennessee when I make that statement.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is very kind. But pursuing the line of thought of a moment ago, let me say to the gentleman if at the proper time it be desired to discuss what the President of the United States has done with the funds which were given to him by the Congress without any strings attached to them, of course we should be ready to discuss that. Mr. McKinley was given $50,000,000. There was never a suggestion of making an inquiry as to what he had done with that fund. Why? Because at the time it was given to him it was stated that no investigation and no question would ever be made of it. Do I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, by the suggestion as to investigating the President's fund, means to impugn the integrity of his use of that fund?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that I have heard of $100,000 given to Mr. Baruch to be spent for purposes not clearly explained. There has been a suggestion that many governments have been generous and kind to the President of the United States, and that it is the custom of potentates when they travel abroad or visit another's country to leave some token of their regard. Congress might not approve the expenditure of money in this way if called upon to do so specifically.

I question whether the people of the United States know all these things. I question whether even the newspapers have commented upon the simple statement made in the old Congress by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], that the President granted out of the $100,000,000 fund $5,000,000 for the incorporation of a company in the State of Connecticut to do business in Russia. We can not understand why one Vance McCormick, Democratic national chairman at that time, should be connected with that enterprise. We do not know much about it, but we should know. It seems to me that the people generally would be better satisfied if the President, in whom we have shown confidence during the war, should tell the Congress of the United States something about these things. I do not want to embarrass him while he is over there. But I wish he was home. I believe it would be better for the people of the United States if he were back here now. When we are trying to get information about money we authorize him to spend, you can not blame us if because he remains away we ask that Congress be permitted to perform the business the Constitution requires of it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say as to the disposition of the $50,000,000 placed in the hands of President McKinley that it was distributed among the heads of the various departments in this Government, and the record is there to show what became of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman, after he was in Congress before, and before he arrived this time, having been an auditor, knows whereof he speaks and does honor to the name of a great man. This country reveres the name of William McKinley. There was never a breath of suspicion against any expenditure made by him. But the trouble with the President is that from the beginning of his career in Washington, though in the first utterance he made to the public he said that his doors were to be open, they have been closed to Congress and to his own party. Even his leaders have not consulted him. He has done the most daring thing in the history of the world, leaving the Congress, leaving the people, and leaving the country for an indefinite period, attending as much to the business of the people of the world as he does to that of the United States, and at the cost of the United States. If our cost, according to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan who spoke here this morning, is true, is to be as great as that of England, we may well inquire about our trade routes. We talk about shipping and trade, but where is it? We have heard that at least one of our great Allies has not given up a single trade route nor lost one ounce of its foreign business since this war began. What about ours? Ours, it seems, is but to yield and to pay. We are to go on doling out millions, to be raised by taxation and to be taken from the people by loans, to do what? To encourage our love of humanity? To prove that the black man and the white man and the yellow man and the brown man can sleep in the same bed? That sounds like buncombe of the first class. The millennium is not here.

The nations supposed to be at peace on the other side are still struggling with each other. Judging from our mails each day, the battles of Europe seem to be transferred to the United States. We are expected to take up their quarrels here. We turn down little bridge bills on account of economy, a river here and a canal there, because you say it costs money, and yet we vote billions upon billions to lend to people on the other side to rebuild their roads, to build their bridges, and you appealing to Congress for yours. The President says our humanitarian effort is to go on until the last drop of American blood is shed and until the last dollar is spent. I do not believe in his time or in yours or mine we are going to see the realization of any such dream.

In my judgment, gentlemen, we are dealing with practical questions, and it is almost time, whether some folks like it or not, that this Congress show its mettle and stand by its prerogatives.

You say we swallowed your Agricultural bill. We have not yet. We may have to swallow it. The President, having failed to call Congress in session until we were driven into a corner where we could not help ourselves, has put the majority to a great disadvantage. He still lingers on the other side, and it will take the ship so many days to go and so many days to return bearing the bill as we shall pass it in order to obtain his signature. He has got us handicapped going and he has us handicapped coming. We have got to get the bill to him, and he will have to get it back before the 30th of June. And I suspect some of the wise gentlemen on the other side knew full well the difficulty that the Republicans would be under in endeavoring to razee the bills they dumped on them and concerning which they endeavor to lay the blame upon the gentlemen over there who talk a little longer when they get the floor than we do at this end of the Capitol.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. LEVER. I think this is a very interesting performance, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is complaining that we have not time in which to consider these bills. And yet the RECORD ought to show that he has spent nearly an hour in consideration of a bill and has not discussed the bill two minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much more time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to assure my friend from South Carolina that I am as anxious to get back to the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill as he is, and probably a little more, but of course we like a full attendance when we take up the consideration of the Agricultural bill, in order that we can point out the varied Democratic imperfections in that measure. [Laughter.]

The President put up this $24,000,000,000 demand to us in the House. We had a joint session of both branches of Congress here, and he told us what he needed. Before the Committee on Ways and Means we were told that $8,000,000,000 must be raised by taxes. I will not go over that story again. But step by step they began to fall back. There was too much complaint arising from the people, and evidently the Democratic leaders thought among themselves, "We will wait until the Republicans get in and unload it on them."

Now it is done. Our distinguished citizen on "the other side" says he does not keep in very close touch with this side. But he knows pretty well how to start a propaganda. I am going to read a message that the President did not deliver here owing to the fact that by reason of a prior engagement he was detained in Paris. In his message—and this is the first message of the kind the President ever sent to the Congress of the United States, the May 20 message, sent here by cable, and I think it must have been a very expensive message, although the wires temporarily are Government controlled—and I wish the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] would give ear——

Mr. KITCHIN. Two——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Two ears——

I hesitate—

Says the President—

to venture any opinion or press any recommendation with regard to domestic legislation while absent from the United States and out of daily contact with intimate sources of information and counsel.

In other words, he means to say: I have been unable to see my friend from Texas, Mr. GARNER, or my good friend from North Carolina, Mr. KITCHIN—I have been unable to mingle with the other leading gentlemen on the other side of the House, who could have given me valuable information—and being here alone, with nobody but Col. House to consult me—

I hesitate to express any opinion or press any recommendation with regard to domestic legislation while absent from the United States.

[Laughter and applause.]

Now, the President was modest about that, and we must give him credit for his modesty.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and I should have said that he would have been wiser to have called in also the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], but he says here that he had no chance to discuss questions with his intimate sources of information. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is the gentleman discussing the bill before the House or is he taking a ramble and a crack at all creation? The latter, I presume. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I am dealing with the bill right now. The President, you understand, put the whole responsibility upon Congress. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and other faithful Members on the Democratic side called in their friends and said, "This must be done or we lose the war." Things like oil, which Democratic farmers use, were prudently omitted. I am not going into those matters very minutely. But after it was all done here comes the President—that is, by cable—after an absence of nearly six months, after he has imposed this great obligation upon us, after Republican and Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means alike, in good faith, had attempted to raise the money required; after the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], and other members of that committee had stood right up to the rack and forced taxes right back upon their constituents, believing they were performing a patriotic duty—along comes the President's cabled message——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. How does the gentleman account for the fact that we were able to induce the gentleman himself, notwithstanding all his astuteness, and his colleagues on the Republican side of the Committee on Ways and Means, to join in all these measures?

Mr MOORE of Pennsylvania. I had faith in the President of the United States and I believed that he needed the money that he asked for, and that it would be honestly expended.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman admits that he did all these things that he has been complaining about for the last hour because he had confidence in the President.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I had faith in the President and voted him the money.

Mr. GARNER. I understand the sum and substance of the gentleman's excuse which he gives is that he had confidence in the President.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not have voted for any of these bills if I had not had an abiding faith in the President of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Faith is a matter that begins where reason ends. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was greatly disappointed in the position he took with regard to the Panama Canal tolls. But that was before the war. The President said he wanted the money to win the war, and on that statement, as in the case of my friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and my friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], I voted for those measures.

But after we had put this thing over, after the Democratic Senate had tried to save the face of the Democratic Party by making changes in the bill so that the people would not rise in rebellion, the President's latest message—his cabled message—arrived, and what did he say?

Many of the minor taxes provided for in the revenue legislation of 1917 and 1918, though no doubt made necessary by the pressing necessities of the war time, can hardly find sufficient justification under the easier circumstances of peace, and can now happily be got rid of. Among these, I hope you will agree, are the excises upon various manufacturers and the taxes upon retail sales.

Here was a new expression of the President, for whom we undertook to raise the $8,000,000,000 in taxes. Had he changed his mind about that $24,000,000,000? We had certainly spent it, or most of it. Why should it not be paid? Certainly the taxpayers who read that cheerful message would look to Congress for relief. The President did not say that the expenses are still on. He did not say that we do not have still to make enormous appropriations. He simply said, in effect: "Boys, I told you to put these taxes on; but seeing that the people do not want them, I advise you to take them off."

And so there comes a flood of telegrams from every corner of the United States saying, "The President says taxes are too high. The President says take the taxes off." My friends, that is an evidence of the manner in which a presidential mind that does not keep in close touch with the Democratic leaders can yet sense the popular will, even though far removed from home.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman admits that he followed the President when the President advised us to put these taxes on.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I followed the President when the President made his war demands.

Mr. LEVER. And when the President advises us to take these taxes off he follows him again, which ought to be conclusive that the President is right usually—that the gentleman still has faith in him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It ought to be known in South Carolina that the President forced us to impose these taxes. And now the President wants us to take them off, though the obligations still remain.

Now, getting down to this luxury tax, so called [laughter], the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] with regard to the parliamentary situation is exactly correct. The country was given the promise at the close of the last session, through both Houses, that this so-called luxury tax—which is paragraph 904, and which should be very carefully read, so as not to confuse it with other paragraphs of the bill—should be repealed. Good faith demands it. There is no other way, from my point of view. The conferees in the last session got into a tangle because of a situation that arose in the Senate, and they agreed to report back to their Houses, and both Houses practically agreed that that section, section 904, should come out.

The country was so advised and the people have been expecting it. Why? Not so much because of the administrative expense down here, but because of the damnable annoyance to every small dealer throughout the length and breadth of this land. I called up the Treasury Department a little while ago to find out just what the trouble was about this luxury tax, and it was explained that a small shopkeeper, a country grocer who is charged with the collection of this tax, is obliged to keep extra clerks and extra books and go to a great deal of trouble to figure out the tax on certain lines of sales, amounting to so much. It is such an unreliable tax as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] referred to. You can not put stamps on it. You can not keep a check on it. It depends very largely upon the integrity of the dealer, and sometimes there is a gross imposition on the purchaser. It is a confusing and perplexing tax, that ought to be repealed. You may say that ice cream ought to go in; but bear in mind one thing, that presents a serious question for legislators. We have passed a prohibitory law. We have denied to ourselves the right to collect $1,000,000,000 in taxes that we formerly derived from the sale of liquors. That is gone, and in consequence of its going ice cream and soft drinks have a rushing trade. Though we put the profit in their hands, we are asked to relieve them of taxes. Gentlemen ought to think twice, whether this is a matter of a little child eating an ice-cream cone on the sidewalk, as some gentlemen seem to think it is, or whether it is a matter of helping the profiteer. Have you bought any candy lately? Have you bought any ice cream lately? Have you bought any of those things that sometimes you can do without? If you have, you have observed that the price is almost twice as high as it was before. You have been told time and again that the war has practically closed; yet these gentlemen say the poor little child is paying this tax, and they want to be relieved of it, after the business has been put in their hands, by the legislation which took liquor out of the purview of taxation. There we have a loss of $1,000,000,000, and no place to raise the money. We can not raise it out of the churches. We have got to have some substance out of which to raise the nearly $10,000,000,000 that must be raised for administrative purposes next year.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman spoke of the intolerable irritation caused to small shopkeepers in the collection of this tax. I asked the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] if that has furnished one of the reasons for the repeal of this section. He said that the tax had been in force such a short time that they had no information on it. What is the gentleman's information?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My information is that certain small shopkeepers had to have new clerks, new books of accounts, and must do extra figuring to find out whether the amounts sold are taxable. We knew that this tax was going to be a nuisance when we put it on, but we put it on only because we were told that the French were obliged to adopt it and that the British Parliament was contemplating it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall only occupy the attention of the House a few minutes and then yield to my friend and colleague on the committee, Mr. LONGWORTH. What I intend to say will relate to the bill solely, for I do not care to discuss any other matters at this time, and I hope to give some reasons for the passage of the bill in a few minutes.

In the first place, I want to say that I have sat under the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] as chairman of the committee for a good many years. He was very informing to-day, and gave excellent reasons for the support of this bill. He was also entertaining, as he often is, and one of the best things about his wit is that it never leaves any sting. While I was in accord with him in the most he had to say, I can not follow him entirely. He made a statement that he thought the Republicans on this side showed less confidence in the new committee than they did in the Democratic committee when it originated and reported the bill which was passed at the last session.

Unfortunately the gentleman got the matter turned right around. This bill was originally a Democratic bill and was passed by a Democratic House. The Republicans also, every one of them, voted for it, so far as they expressed themselves at all. But while the Members of the old Congress who voted for it may have some difficulty in explaining why they changed their vote at this time, I am not at all surprised that the new Members view the bill somewhat with suspicion, knowing its Democratic origin, and the fact that many mistakes and blunders were foisted upon us by the last administration.

Let us consider this bill and see why these taxes ought to be repealed. They have been called "luxury taxes." In fact, the articles taxed are necessities, and if there is any luxury about them it is in their cost above a specified sum.

Let me call attention to the fact that this particular section which is repealed by this bill is the only one in which a certain kind of accounts is to be kept, an account in which the merchant may have a dozen different kinds of articles, upon each of which is a different rate, and perhaps different classes of a particular article upon which there may be a different rate.

So notwithstanding it has been said that there is no difficulty in keeping accounts with reference to this tax, it has been found to be an extremely onerous burden.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The bill imposes a 10 per cent rate on everything; what is the difficulty?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman misunderstood me. A dealer has to make a computation on every article. The tax is different on each article because the price is different, and a separate computation has to be made on each one. He can not make it in the way that he can in other sections of the revenue law—by simply lumping his sales.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the nub of the whole thing. Take a lady's purse, with the tax on a price above $7.50. She pays 10 per cent on all that it costs above $7.50.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Suppose the price is $8.25. The purchaser pays a tax of 10 per cent on $1.25. If the customer has it charged she must pay cash for the 10 per cent on the $1.25. That is the way it runs out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct. It is impossible to make a charge account of the tax. It must be paid in cash. This makes it difficult to carry on a credit business in these articles. That is the way it works out. On caps the tax is an uncertain amount, depending on the price, on hats it varies according to the price, on shoes above such a price the tax is a different amount, and so on it goes all down along the line. The merchant has to make a calculation on every single article and upon different classes of the same article. The result has been that the merchant has frequently been obliged to have another clerk and must charge the expense to his customers by adding it to the articles pro rata. Gentlemen think it is easy to impose taxes so it will be fair, but this is a kind of tax that can not be imposed so that it will be fair. There is always difficulty in imposing a tax equitably, and there is more difficulty in a tax of this kind. There are all sorts of luxuries that are not taxed at all in this section. There is just as much reason why they should be taxed as the ones enumerated in this section. There are some articles we know ought to be taxed, if these are to be taxed. Such are women's dresses priced above a certain amount and men's clothing costing a certain amount. Yet a woman may pay $5,000 for a dress or a man $200 for a suit of clothes without paying any tax at all. Some gentlemen say that that does not make any difference to them, they care nothing about that, but the Committee on Ways and Means was more or less influenced by the inequities in this schedule after it came back to us from the Senate. I did not vote for this tax when it was first presented with the same theory that was advanced by the Secretary of the Treasury in support of it, viz, that it was going to keep down the purchase of luxuries. I did not believe it would, and I do not believe it has to any great extent, although it probably has interfered with some sales.

I voted for it at that time because we were in the throes of war and it was absolutely necessary that we should have all the money which could be raised, either from taxes or bonds or in any other way; and, as far as I could see at that time, if we kept on with the war expenditures at the rate they were being created by the administration for another year we would be absolutely bankrupt, in spite of anything we could do. That is the reason I voted for it in the first instance.

Then this bill went over to the other body, which they say we can not mention here. In the course of its travels it came back very sadly butchered up, with very important parts of it left out. Members said that they would not vote for the bill in that form, but the answer was made to them at that time that they should not pay any attention to this; that we were going to repeal the luxury taxes; and so the word went out to the whole country, the pledge of the whole Congress at that time, that these luxury taxes named in this section were going to be repealed. In pursuance of that announcement, which everybody understood and upon which a large number of Members based their votes at that time, this bill, in practically the same form in which it is now——

Mr. LONGWORTH. In exactly the same form.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend from Ohio corrects me—in exactly the same form—was brought before this House at the last session and, without one solitary dissenting voice, everybody said these taxes should be taken out under the circumstances. They were not fairly apportioned; they were not in the form they ought to have been levied; they did not equalize burdens among the people or among business men. I could stand here, if I had the time, and show you the faults and difficulties inherent in the tax which made us extremely reluctant to pass it originally. I think there was not a member of the committee that was satisfied with it when it was introduced, and we were still less satisfied with it when it came back from the Senate as a part of the revenue bill; but we had to pass the bill before March 4 or the consequences would be very serious.

Then the repealing measure came up here, and under these circumstances this House unanimously passed this same bill, and now again the matter comes before the House, and Members say, "Why should people spend their money in that kind of way? Why should anyone buy things he does not need?" Are we going to tax everyone in this country who purchases things he does not need and might get along without? If we are, we will have to go into a very wide circle and take in ten times as many articles and matters as we have considered in this section, which we now seek to repeal. The fact of the matter is that this whole section was illogical from the beginning, It was not necessary in time of peace, and its only justification could be that it was passed in time of war, in time of stress, in time of peril, when we had to have the money. Now, in pursuance of the pledge heretofore given, we have brought in this bill for repeal, and we think it ought to pass.

I know we need the money, but we ought to collect it in a way that would be more equitable than the provisions of this section which is sought to repeal; but some will say, "Why not amend the section?" I will tell you why. Because there are not three gentlemen in the House that could agree as to just what articles are luxuries and at just what point these necessities which are included in this section became luxuries by reason of the price fixed upon them. There is not a gentleman present who is not the possessor of some article which is not a necessity and yet is not taxed; yet this section which we now propose to repeal contains nothing but necessities, and in many cases necessities, pure and simple, are taxed. As the gentleman from Washington well says, "Why should the loggers and lumberjacks of my State, who are compelled to wear flannel shirts, pay a tax on that article, which is an absolute necessity to them?" Why should a man whose work compels him to wear a pair of high boots pay a tax on those boots because they cost over $10? A hat costing more than $5 at present is a luxury under the law, but a matter of economy if the wearer has it cleaned and uses it other seasons. While I never had a pair of $10 shoes in my life, many gentlemen claim to me that it pays in the long run to buy the more expensive article in this line.

I think there is no question but that, as prices now run, if one has the money—which I have not—to buy a carpet above the price specified in this list, it will last enough longer to make an economy, instead of a luxury; but be that as it may, why should carpets, which are used most largely by people of moderate means, be taxed, while imported rugs, which I have seen sold in this city at prices running up into the thousands of dollars, be entirely free from the tax? As to an umbrella, how are you going to get a good one for less than $4? I do not buy any that costs that much, because I lose them, and a $2 one is just as good to lose as a $4 one. Why should a smoking jacket or lounging robe be taxed? It saves the use of another coat and is very much more comfortable. This particular tax is a tax on the privilege of making oneself comfortable. To be sure, we could go in our shirt sleeves; but some of us last winter could not get our apartments well enough heated for that purpose. I will admit that any man who wears silk hose ought to be taxed, but can we not allow the ladies the privilege of wearing silk hose without paying the tax? Under the law that now stands, they will have to pay or go without. There is one redeeming feature: They will have to pay in advance for them, and can not get the amount charged to their husbands, under this law. A valise or suitcase that costs in excess of $25 looks pretty high until you visit some of these places where they carry a really good article, and, in accordance with the spirit of the times, have doubled or tripled the prewar prices. I never had such an article myself, but if I wanted to get one that would last, I would have to pay it. Of course, fans ought to be taxed. I suppose the gentlemen will claim that there ought to be a tax on the privilege of keeping cool, unless you are willing to carry a palm leaf. I never had such articles as pajamas, so I am quite willing that people that do wear such articles should be taxed, and I know all my farmer friends will join with me in this, but those who wear them insist there is no more reason for them to be taxed than a nightshirt.

The fact is that when we go over this schedule we find that it is full of inequalities, which, in some instances, verge on absurdities.

It is claimed that this schedule will produce ninety to one hundred million dollars' revenue. I have never believed it would produce one-half that amount, and if there is as much difficulty in collecting it as the Bureau of Internal Revenue claims, the net receipts from it will be almost nothing. I shall have to say, however, that there is no way of determining just how much additional expense is caused to the department by reason of these provisions, as those who have to enforce it are also used in enforcing other provisions. It can, however, be seen at a glance that there is no way of simplifying this tax.

We can not provide that it shall be paid by means of stamps or through tickets or by a tax on gross sales, nor is it practical to put it upon the manufacturer. Consequently the process of keeping a record of the amount due by the party who sells the articles, and the work of the Treasury Department in seeing that he does keep a proper record and make a proper return becomes very burdensome to both.

Then the tax discriminates between different kinds of business. The man who has a hat and cap store is at a loss to understand why his business should be taxed, when next to him is a high-class grocery store, containing all kinds of luxuries, and catering to those to whom expenses are no object, with no element of necessity connected with it, and yet no tax is paid. He feels that he is treated unjustly when a dealer in women's dresses returns no tax. If luxuries are to be taxed, he wonders why, if necessities become luxuries by reason of the price, that there is no tax upon houses that cost around a million dollars—and we have plenty of them in New York and Washington. Naturally he thinks it would be better to put a tax on a man that keeps extensive grounds for his own recreation, as this seems to him to be purely a luxury. In fact, as he looks about him he observes that there is no tax where money is wasted most, and that the tax is only imposed on these articles which are in themselves necessities, with every person differing as to the point where they cease to be necessities and become luxuries.

These reasons are presented as forming good grounds for the repeal of this luxury tax; but this bill, in fact, is not a Ways and Means Committee bill. It is the bill of the conference of the Republican Members of the House, which directed the Ways and Means Committee to introduce it. The committee does not, therefore, feel that the principal responsibility of this bill rests upon it, nor, if the bill is voted down, will it feel that one of its own measures has been defeated. On the contrary, its conclusion will be that the Republican Members have either become stampeded by the cry that this is a Democratic bill or there is so little unity among the Republicans that they are unable to take a definite position and adhere to it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this debate has taken a very wide range. We have discussed the President of the United States, and we have discussed potash and lumber and various other matters. I want, as the saying is, to get down to brass tacks, and to show, if I can, that every man here, on whichever side of the aisle he happens to sit, is amply justified in voting for this bill. Perhaps I can best illustrate the reason why it was originally adopted by reading from the recommendation sent by the Treasury Department to the Committee on Ways and Means with reference to the imposition of all these luxury taxes, and to show that this, in the opinion of the Treasury Department and of the Committee on Ways and Means, is a tax which stands absolutely by itself, both as to method and as to substance. Having given reasons and suggestions for putting taxes on certain luxuries, this report goes on as follows:

It is believed, however, that the rates here suggested could be imposed without seriously injuring the producer or so reducing consumption as to impair the revenue. The rates, in short, are not beyond the maximum point of yield.

That covers every possible form of luxury tax except the taxes provided by section 904, which taxes stand by themselves, as will be illustrated by the next paragraph, which I shall read to you:

The retail sales tax, however—raises a different set of considerations. That tax is recommended not only to raise additional revenue but for the equally important purpose of discouraging wasteful consumption and unnecessary production.

Mark that particularly. The object of this tax never was so much to raise revenue, although it was expected to raise a substantial amount, as to prevent wasteful expenditure and production of these articles, which, after reaching a certain price, are not necessaries at all.

For instance, it was undesirable in time of war for women to be buying expensive dresses; it was undesirable for men to be buying expensive suits of clothes or shoes or what not, because by the unnecessary expenditure they thereby deprived themselves of a certain power to buy freely of Liberty bonds and otherwise contribute to the war cost. What was the other reason? To prevent unnecessary production; to prevent people from manufacturing at all these articles which were not real necessities. Take, for example, this beautiful suit of clothes which I have on to-day. I do not remember how much I paid for it. It was bought a long time ago—long before the war. I am not so much up to fashion as the gentleman who has just addressed us. As I recollect, it cost me about $65. Now, what is the use, in time of war, in expending as much as $65 on a suit of clothes? Moreover, why should men engaged in the manufacturing of expensive clothes and other similar luxuries produce articles of that sort when their productive capacity could be better employed in producing articles of absolute necessity for war purposes? So it was deemed at that time advisable to prevent, or at least discourage, the production of such things as these and other high-priced articles which were not necessary. This was a war tax—a war tax pure and simple. It was imposed largely to prevent not only wasteful expenditure but the production of such articles as were not necessary for war purposes. But to-day, gentlemen, that necessity has absolutely ceased. It is a wise thing to encourage production to-day of all sorts of articles, whether necessities or not. It gives people employment. It is a wise thing, also, to encourage expenditure, so as to diffuse money among the people of the United States. I will proceed a little further with this reading:

It would be superfluous, at this stage of the war, to dwell upon the fact that waste and extravagance are akin to treason.

This was to prevent waste and extravagance in time of war. To-day the necessity for that has ceased.

We pay lip homage to this truth, but we neglect its practice. We are not cutting our personal budgets sufficiently to make the excess of national production over national consumption equal to the needs of the Government. The retail sales tax distinctively labels the taxed article as luxurious and serves notice that the Government's ban is upon it.

In other words, the Government was trying to put a ban upon the purchase and the production of the articles described in section 904.

The really needy consumer—

Mark this—

The really needy consumer is amply protected by exempting from the tax those classes of articles which the poor actually buy or need to buy. Other articles must be taxed vigorously if the tax is not to be interpreted as legitimatizing extravagance.

In other words, I do not for a moment rest the necessity for the repeal of this section on the proposition that it will benefit the poor taxpayer. I have no means of knowing how many persons, what percentage of our population, is taxed under this section at all. I imagine it is insignificant; that it is an insignificant percentage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman is a little in error in his language. For instance, in the Pacific Northwest, where our great logging industry goes on, every logger pays more than $10 for his boots.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I assume that is true of a good many cases, that the poor man pays the tax under this section, but I do not rest my contention on that proposition. I rest it mainly on two grounds: First, that the expense and the trouble of collecting it is almost infinite. They have had to organize a new bureau in the Internal Revenue Department whose only function is to administer the taxes under this section. I do not for a moment agree with the chairman of this committee in his estimate that the net return from this section will amount to anything like $85,000,000 or $100,000,000. I think that when the expenses of this have been paid it will be found that a comparatively small net revenue will come to this Government from this tax.

Mr. JEFFERIS. I would like to inquire if the gentleman can give any information as to the number of employees the Revenue Department has found it necessary to employ to look after this tax and the cost thereof?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not give the gentleman that information. I do not know accurately. I do know that they have had to form a bureau for the purpose. Of course, it has been very difficult to say how many men will be necessary, because the tax has only been in operation for about a month. I think it went into effect, as I recall, on the 1st of May, less than a month ago, so it is entirely impossible to judge, but I have been informed at the departments and by revenue officials that they are only beginning to realize the enormous number of employees that it will be necessary to have all over the country even to pretend to stop the evasion of this law. Now, I think, this argument can be legitimately made in the interest of the poor taxpayer. I have no doubt the fact would develop if this law was enforced some considerable time, in view of the fact every retailer of this country will have to add to his cost of selling both by the additional accounting in the case of these particular goods and by the employment of a number of additional clerks to make these returns, that he will take it out of the customer on other articles.

He will take it out on articles of absolute necessity, and will be forced to do it in order to pay the additional cost of keeping proper books and employing additional clerks.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the gentleman to say that the tax on the better-quality and higher-priced articles—for instance, shoes—was intended as a ban upon production of a better quality of shoes, for instance?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is the country now to understand that the 2-cent tax on a 15-cent plate of ice cream is a ban upon ice cream?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No. At the very outset of my remarks I said this section 904 was intended to be an entirely different proposition than any other tax; was intended as a ban, whereas the tax on ice cream and soda water was intended to be only such as the traffic would bear.

Mr. HAUGEN. Where is the distinction? One is a revenue and the other is a ban?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman catch my reading of the Treasury recommendation?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; I did not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I commend it to the attention of the gentleman, because it is the very foundation of this whole argument. Let me say this, that the purpose of the tax referred to by the gentleman is only to get revenue, while this is mainly for the purpose of discouraging the sale and production of the article.

Mr. HAUGEN. As an illustration, one who buys a pair of silk stockings at $3 pays a 10-cent tax, and the school children buying five plates of ice cream pay 10 cents. The revenue is the same and the tax is the same.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the object of putting the tax on was entirely different.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the intention was the same.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The intention of putting the tax on ice cream and other drinks was to get revenue only, and so the tax was placed low enough that it would not discourage the business. I introduced a bill on the first day of the session, and so far as I know, no one else has, to repeal section 630, which is the tax on ice cream and soda water. [Applause.] I intend to press that bill for early passage, and I believe the Ways and Means Committee will take that bill up, together with other consumption taxes, and we will bring in a comprehensive bill before long and repeal these unjust consumption taxes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman inform the House why this great Committee on Ways and Means should report a Democratic bill word for word instead of the bill introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that I do not call this a Democratic bill. I supported it as a war measure. I saw no politics in it then, and I do not see any now.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was brought in by a Democratic Congress.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was brought in by a Democratic Congress, and I voted for it, as did the gentleman. Let me repeat that it was the exact bill that was passed unanimously by this Congress in the closing days of the session.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me say to the gentleman that we have an agricultural bill before the House that is infected with the same virus.

Mr. HAUGEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. As to the bill referred to the gentleman is mistaken. The bill went to the Senate, and the bill reported by the Agricultural Committee cut $5,000,000 out of it. That is the difference. Here you have the bill word for word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In connection with what the gentleman said in reference to the effect of these taxes on the poor man, does not the gentleman recognize where we levy taxes of this kind on a large number of articles that inevitably, while it is called a tax on luxuries that we have been reaching for in this particular case, we reach absolute necessities?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely. The name "luxury tax" in this section is a misnomer. Every article described is a necessity needed in the daily life of the people, and they are only regarded as luxuries after they get beyond a certain price. This tax has never existed in this country in time of peace and never ought to, for it is a tax to prevent production, and to-day we ought to encourage production and give employment to the people of this country.

Mr. REAVIS. If this section was a penalty rather than a revenue measure, why was it not made prohibitive?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, that question arose in other instances. The gentleman will recall that an amendment was offered by myself in committee, and the committee adopted it, to put a prohibitive tax on platinum.

There is another and almost similar instance in principle. We should have a prohibitive tax on platinum used in jewelry in time of war. But the moment the armistice was signed the necessity for that tax ceased, just as it has in this case.

Now, in regard to this bill, gentlemen, there seems to be some little misunderstanding. This exact bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Ways and Means, and I do not care whether you want to call it a Democratic bill or a Republican bill. The Committee on Ways and Means had no politics in the last session of Congress, and it ought not to have politics on such matters as this now. [Applause.] The bill was reported and passed after a few minutes of debate without a word of protest. It went over to the Senate, and the only reason why it did not pass the Senate was the fact that they undertook over there to load it up with amendments.

They put on an amendment taking off the tax on furs, and they even went to the extent of putting on an amendment to that bill, which was in the form of a resolution, conveying felicitations to the President of the United States and hoping for his safe return to this country—hardly a germane amendment to such a measure as this. But another reason, in my judgment, emphasizing the necessity of passing this bill now is that it was mutilated in the Senate in cutting out men's and women's clothing. There is no justification for taxing a man on a $10 pair of shoes and not taxing him on a $50 suit of clothes. That is another reason why we should repeal the whole business.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield, of course, to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. In answering the question asked by a gentleman as to whether or not this is a Democratic bill, I want to say that I introduced this bill, and I copied word for word the bill introduced at the last session by the gentleman from Ohio and one introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Now, if it is a Democratic bill, it was a Democratic bill when introduced then by Republican Members. Word for word, this is a copy of the bill introduced by those gentlemen.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I recall the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I introduced those bills exactly at 12 o'clock on the opening day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is it not a matter of good faith, considering the action of both Houses and the notice given to the public and the general understanding?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Entirely so, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Would the gentleman say there was no longer any reason for the practice of thrift among the American people?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would not say there is no reason for the practice of reasonable thrift. I certainly do not believe it is wise now to limit the production of any article in this country, because the production of a valuable suit of clothes or a pair or boots encourages American labor, and I want to see American labor encouraged.

Mr. PLATT. The tax was increased from 10 to 20 per cent, was it not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know whether 10 per cent would discourage it to any great extent or 20 per cent, but——

Mr. PLATT. Nearly all the complaints, as I understand, come from wholesalers and manufacturers, and not from consumers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think it is certain that the repeal of this tax will be of direct benefit to the poor people of this country, not directly, because they are not subject to the tax, but, as I have explained before, because inevitably they will have to pay higher prices for other articles in order that retailers may be able to pay the additional expense that the payment of this tax will cause them. I think there is no question about that. So that from that standpoint; from the standpoint just stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]; from the standpoint of view that this is not a proper tax in time of peace, because we ought not in time of peace to attempt to limit either large expenditures or production; from the standpoint, too, that it was the unanimous act of this House before and would now be the law except for the fact that the Senate undertook to add certain amendments to it, this bill ought to pass unanimously. I hope that amendments will not be offered, but that it will be permitted to pass at once, and every man here, on either side of this House, can amply justify his vote upon it.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Is it the proposition of the committee, of which the gentleman is a member, to give consideration to the other luxury taxes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Unquestionably. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said this morning, a number of these bills have been introduced, and they have been referred to the Treasury Department for report.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I am interested to know why this particular bill was made a special order. Does it not leave a wrong impression on the country to make this bill a special order in preference to the others?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I tried to show precisely the contrary of what the gentleman suggests. In the first place, it is a system of taxation entirely by itself. In the second place, it was admitted by this House unanimously that such taxes as this, which are unexampled in our history, which have no example anywhere except in France as a pure war tax, ought not to continue for a moment when this country was not actually in war. The opinion of the House on the subject was unanimous, and I really am surprised that so much question has been made about it to-day.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will Members be able to say to their constituents that the members of the Ways and Means Committee will take up soon the question of repealing these other luxury taxes, or will it take a long time?

Mr. FORDNEY rose.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan to answer that question.

Mr. FORDNEY. I stated this morning, and I will restate now for the benefit of those who were not present, that there are bills and requests before the Ways and Means Committee to repeal the automobile tax, the tax upon furs, the tax upon jewelry, and the tax upon soft drinks and ice cream, candy, and various articles that are covered by other sections of the law. The committee wish and intend to take up the consideration of those requests at as early a date as possible. We were requested, however, not to act upon those matters until we received some further information from the Secretary of the Treasury and from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and for that reason passed those other matters over until some other time, when the committee can meet and consider them.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Does the gentleman think it will take a long time to do that?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I do not think it will take a long time.

Mr. SIMS. Why not wait and put them all together. This can be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is the gentleman's view; but the repeal of this section 904 will repeal a tax of $100,000,000 in a total of $350,000,000 consumption taxes, and it is a pretty good step forward toward doing the thing that our party two weeks ago in conference agreed to do and directed this committee to set to work to do. We have done this work as quickly as possible, and will get to the others as quickly as we get the necessary information.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has expressed a hope that no one will introduce an amendment. Inasmuch as I have an amendment in my hand, I want to know why a proposition to repeal section 630 along with 904 would embarrass or hamper the passage of this bill, inasmuch as everybody who has spoken to-day on this bill seems to be in accord that section 630 ought to be repealed and will be repealed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will give the gentleman the positive assurance, so far as I am concerned, having originally introduced that bill, that I will press it for passage, but I do not think it ought to be tacked onto this bill, even if it could be done in a parliamentary way, which I am convinced it can not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Since the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has pressed the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] to make this statement, the gentleman from Ohio might fairly ask the gentleman from New York what he proposes as a substitute for the $21,000,000 that would be taken away from the revenue of the country?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We might repeal war-time prohibition for one thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Having lost a billion dollars in taxes by prohibition, I will ask the gentleman where we can make up that billion dollars?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do not let us make it up by imposing a tax on the innocent little children down in the tenements who want to eat ice cream in the summer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman put it on the dealer in soda water, who has the cream of the business, now that the liquor dealers have been put out of business?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not care where you put it as long as the burden does not fall on the innocent little children who need to eat ice cream as a necessity in hot weather.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman thinking about the little children or is he thinking about the dealers who are going to double the price for selling it to the little children?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not know about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman know that ice cream costs more now than formerly, and a great deal more of it is sold now than formerly?

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to the present condition of the Treasury, the number of outstanding bonds, and so forth?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not offhand. I have not seen a recent statement, particularly as to the outstanding Treasury certificates. I am prepared to admit, though, if I get the import of the gentleman's question, that it is not such as would justify the destruction of present sources of revenue except after thorough investigation and deliberation. I will say this to the gentleman from New York, that I should feel it my duty on this occasion to make a point of order against his amendment, even though I am as anxious to have it eventually passed as he. I think a number of these consumption taxes should be either repealed or amended. I will give the gentleman another instance where the tax falls heavily on the small boy—10 per cent tax on sporting goods. To my mind it is utterly indefensible that baseball bats, baseball gloves, and things of that sort should be taxed 10 per cent which has to be paid by the American boys, while American ladies who buy expensive jewelry only pay 5 per cent. All these questions are to be taken up and given careful attention by the Ways and Means Committee. But you must always keep in mind that no matter how wise it may be to abolish eventually consumption taxes, in view of the present condition of the revenues we have to go fairly slow and know just where we are going.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Everyone must admire due caution and look to the Treasury, but here is one single item where we take eighty-five to one hundred millions off the taxes of those who can pay it and let the buyers and consumers who pay other consumption taxes wait while the committee deliberates. Why should they not all go together? Why not refer the bill back to the committee and let the committee bring in a bill dealing with all of them?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee to remember that he voted to make this the only tax to be repealed in the closing days of last session.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think the gentleman knows how I voted on it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman did not vote against it.

Mr. SIMS. I never heard of it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is so attentive to matters of legislation that I am grieved and surprised to know that such a piece of important legislation could be passed in the last session without the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee knowing about it.

Mr. SIMS. I was giving attention to another and more important piece of legislation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If any other gentleman had intimated or insinuated that the gentleman had allowed anything to get by him, I would have repelled the charge with indignation. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Tennessee was recognized.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield long enough for me to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of this bill?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Does the committee intend to take up any other bill to-day?

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to finish this bill. I do not think that there will be any other bill taken up to-night.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that we have pending before the House legislation of greater importance than that under consideration to come on immediately after its passage. I yielded to the gentleman from Michigan with the understanding that this bill would most likely be passed in at least two hours. The gentleman said he would take 15 minutes in discussing the bill. It is now nearly 5 o'clock and five hours have been consumed in general debate.

We have the Agricultural bill pending of more than 90 pages, carrying about $32,000,000, which will have to be passed or the Republicans will have to stand guilty of that for which we have charged the Democrats in the past—incompetency. [Applause.] If we are going to transact business and demonstrate our competency, let us do it. We have been here for five hours, and, so far as I have observed, not more than 10 minutes has been devoted to the discussion of the merits of the bill. We have a bill carrying $32,000,000 for the benefit of 6,000,000 farmers and 6,000,000 laborers tilling the soil and a hundred million consumers of this country, with a shortage of food production and a great necessity for this legislation. Are we going to fritter away the time reducing the tax on silk stockings and cutting down the revenue that gives us $100,000,000 and putting nothing in the place of it? Gentlemen, I suggest an agreement as to the closing of general debate so that this matter may be closed to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will yield the gentleman from Michigan a minute.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to delay any other legislation. I am ready and willing to vote on this bill now, and I stated so when I first spoke. I only occupied four or five minutes in explaining the bill, and from that time on I was answering questions. As to what legislation may follow after we pass this bill I do not know, but I am anxious to close debate now.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will yield a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. I desire to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who has spent three days fighting the Agricultural appropriation bill, took a whole hour, and it looked to me almost as if it was a deliberate filibuster against the Agricultural appropriation bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield me a minute?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the rather gratuitous statement suddenly injected by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] should be answered to this extent, that the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], while it may have lasted an hour, was due to the fact that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] had assailed the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others for at least one hour previously.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the very pointed remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and I must say that I was in the act of making a similar statement when the gentleman from Iowa arose and made it much more forcibly than I could have done. I think it unfortunate that with the innumerable problems confronting the House and Congress which we have at this time a certain limited number of gentlemen persist in their efforts constantly to play politics. I was both sorry and disappointed to hear my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I admire him very much personally. He is affable, genial, and exceedingly versatile. He is just as versatile when speaking in the field of fact as in the field of fancy or in the field of fiction. It depends altogether upon the direction in which my distinguished friend gets headed as to what he may discuss during the hour when he happens to have the floor. The highest compliment, however, speaking in entire frankness, that I can truthfully pay to his remarks delivered a few moments ago is to say that he made a very poor speech.

We have pending here some extremely difficult problems vitally affecting the welfare of every class of citizenship, according to whether they are revenue problems or strictly financial problems of legislation relating to our educational and industrial or other conditions. Yet with these great questions pressing hourly upon us, questions involving not only our reconstruction situation but questions which ramify into world conditions, we find gentlemen whom the country sometimes mistakes for real leaders unconcernedly rising in their places and diverting the entire time and attention of the House with long-winded political harangues, speeches utterly filled with sophistry and buncombe, statements not seriously intended to be accepted as accurate. [Applause on Democratic side.] I hope that until Congress works out and solves at least a few of these great legislative problems which are confronting us some of our friends may be able to content themselves by suppressing this political claptrap to which we have been exposed in a measure from time to time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Not just now. I want to discuss this tax question if I can get to it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly, and that is what I was going to ask the gentleman to do.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I came in here to-day expecting, as did some other gentlemen, that we would hear some very interesting discussions of the principles of taxation as they relate to this problem, and I wish to say that during the past two years I have never thought of politics while we Democratic and Republican colleagues have been working together on the Ways and Means Committee, each member having equal voice and equal rights to offer amendments, to discuss questions, to vote on them, and never was I in any separate conference with the Democrats as to any policies of the committee. Every act of that committee was decided on in full committee and, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] truthfully said, everything coming out of that committee relating to taxes was the joint product alike of the Democratic and Republican membership upon it. I must say that I get a little weary when some gentlemen persist in interrupting the real business of the House by attempting to play what some people would say was cheap politics—raising the question of politics in every conceivable little way—was this a Democratic bill, was it introduced by a Republican or a Democrat? My God! We have more problems to solve than our entire joint wisdom can possibly solve, and I say it is discouraging, when many of us on both sides have been earnestly striving jointly to work out some of these problems, to be constantly interrupted by gentlemen whose chief mission seems to be to play politics. In my opinion, unless some of that is supressed during the next 18 months, the country will not be subjected to any greater menace from the I. W. W. and the anarchists than it will from these professional politicians. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

So far as the conduct of the war was concerned, every loyal citizen of this country was equally patriotic and to the fullest measure performed his part.

But I do not think it is fair for some gentlemen to insist that they shall have a little more than their share of credit for the commendable things which were done in the prosecution of the war and shirk entirely their part of the responsibility for the little things that did not happen to go exactly right. Now, if gentlemen insist on a full share of such credit they must be frank enough and manly enough to admit, as it was admitted during the deliberations of this House since April, 1917, their proportionate share of responsibility for legislation which might have in some respects proven irritating to this or that individual over the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When the time comes, so far as the Democratic Party is concerned, it was right and sound and wise in so many big things for which it was responsible it can well afford to admit any little mistakes that may have been made here and there by individuals in the course of the prosecution of the war; but in any event, so far as I am concerned and so far as I know, the disposition of Democrats is to welcome the closest scrutiny, notwithstanding the expressed intention of selecting a lot of partisan investigating committees to cover their work all over with partisanship, which announced intention has been written up by the newspapers for months——

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the subject under consideration?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. General debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not interrupt the gentleman by a parliamentary inquiry unless he yields.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I was about to say, so far as the Democratic Party is concerned, it will welcome the closest scrutiny of every act connected with its part of the conduct of the war. It will freely give credit to any and every citizen for what he did, but I warn my friends who have politics alone on their mind in connection with these investigations that they are very liable to overplay that policy before they have proceeded far. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, this Nation will be ready at the conclusion of the war to compare points with every other Government engaged in the World War with respect to the conduct of those nations in the prosecution of the war. This Nation stands head and shoulders above any other nation, Allies or enemy, with respect to the soundness of the financing of the war, with respect to the soundness of the tax levy, with respect to the time and manner of raising the armies and the navies, with respect to the rapidity with which our armies and our munitions and our supplies were rushed to the front lines in Europe, with respect to the losses, and with respect to the glory in proportion to the part we took and the time and expense incurred. [Applause.] These facts will come out; they will reveal what I say more clearly to the average citizen as we get further away from the war.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I regret I was diverted to this extent by this injection of politics, and I want to say in connection with this revenue measure now pending that, so far as I am concerned, I have never felt any politics and have never acted any politics when in conference with my colleagues on the committee in working and framing internal-tax statutes. There is no politics, essentially no politics, in our internal-tax laws. We have our well-defined differences as to customhouse legislation, but if my colleagues will permit, I as one Member am ready and shall be glad to continue during the next two years that close and nonpolitical cooperation in the working out of our problems related to internal taxation. Now, my genial friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], when asked by some new Member whether we could raise at the customhouse a sufficient amount of money to make up whatever deficiency might arise from the repeal of this statute referred to in the pending bill, and the repeal of such other tax provisions as might be effected later and keeping in mind, too, the estimated receipts and expenditures for next year, he hesitated very much in making what I considered a definite answer. I wish to express as my individual opinion that the sooner this House acts upon the view that the customhouse does not afford a boundless and practically untapped field of revenue to be drawn on without limit whenever we need it—the sooner, I say, the House realizes that fact and takes up the study of the far broader field of internal taxation to which we inevitably must look for the chief portion of our revenue in the future, the better it will be for the House and for the country. Every sane and intelligent person must know that only some hundreds of millions can be gotten from the customhouse at the most, and such person knows equally well that we must raise, for a few years at least, a minimum of $3,000,000,000 and upward.

Now, on this resolution now pending. I think that during the war the Committee on Ways and Means carefully followed all the investigations it could make as to the most desirable methods of taxation that might be adopted in this country even for temporary war purposes. In so doing it carefully followed the fiscal policies of each of the other important commercial countries at war, England, France, Canada, Australia, Italy, and even the enemy countries, although no lesson of value was to be learned from the latter. We found many kinds of taxes that were being utilized. Many of them were not intended as permanent peace taxes, because they were either unsound in theory or utterly unfeasible in their administration.

Some gentleman has referred to his antipathy to a consumption tax. I am frank to say that from my individual viewpoint the best test of a tax in this country—in other words, the nearest approximation to justice in taxation—is ability to pay. No tax absolutely approximates exactness in its application or in the justness of its operations, but ability to pay more nearly approximates that, in my opinion, than any other test that can be applied.

Now, while European countries were searching in every place for new revenue, for new taxes, we found none of them had adopted this so-called luxury-tax provision except France. France adopted it for the equally twofold purpose of raising revenue and discouraging useless or extravagant individual expenditures. They estimated the tax yield at $120,000,000 for the first year. They thought it was feasible of administration. They have been very much disappointed in each respect. The theory of the tax is sound. Since the war began I have been advocating the working out of a schedule of luxury taxes that could be retained as a permanent peace tax until our war expenditures, or at least the chief portion of our war debt, shall be paid. So, I repeat, the theory of this tax is absolutely sound. England in her stress for revenue undertook to model after the French "luxury" tax. The House of Commons appointed a very able commission to investigate, hold hearings, confer with business people, and draft a bill. That commission worked for many weeks. They called in the manufacturers, the wholesalers, the retailers. They called in the heads of each industry affected, and that was most of them. They had accountants, expert statisticians, experienced administrative officers from the internal-revenue department. They found this proposed schedule was absolutely filled with perplexities, many of them unforeseen, with the result that almost as fast as they could iron out one they would come in contact with two or three more. I mean in relation to putting the law into practical and efficient operation and making it apply to the intricate business conditions of the country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman had something considerable to do with the framing of this particular tax, and did he and the subcommittee engaged upon it not find just this same difficulty in getting it so worked out fairly that it would operate without undue perplexity and without imposing too large burdens in various directions?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. There is on file, I think, in our committee room now, a report of that subcommittee supporting the theory of this tax, the soundness of it, and calling attention to the many difficulties involved in working out the administrative side and in making a practical application of it to our great variety of complicated business conditions in this country. And we further stated that if it was expected to secure a feasible measure on this subject, perhaps many weeks' time would be required or, at least, should be used, in working out this schedule. That time was not permitted under the circumstances and in the hurry. It came to the House in the defective form that it was found in the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has referred to the administrative side of the question. In what respect does it differ from the collection of the 2 cents on the plate of ice cream?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am coming to that right now.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is not the expense just as great in collecting 2 cents on ice cream as a dollar on something else?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am coming to the administrative features now. I may say that the leader in the House of Commons week after week arose and answered inquiries by stating that he still intended to put through and in operation what was technically called a luxury schedule, but after working on it for months in the manner I have stated they found the difficulty of administration was so complicated that they decided that they would simply increase some of the income-tax rates and get far more revenue with measurably less expense and complaint than they would by undertaking to adopt and administer this new schedule.

Now, it is very easy to lay a tax on the manufacture of these articles, or on the wholesaler or on the retailer himself, but this, mind you, was intended to be a tax on the expenditure of individuals. It was not a tax on the manufacture of them or on the distribution by the jobber or on the sale by the retailer. It was intended to pass beyond each and all of them and fasten itself on the purchaser, while the Treasury regulations would compel the retailer to collect this tax and turn it over to the Government.

If it were only possible to levy the tax before it got to this advanced stage, the administration of it would be very different, and so would the tax. But here are between 40 and 50 classes of articles; there are estimated to be some 2,000,000 persons, firms, and corporations in the United States engaged in the business of retailing more or less of these articles. Most of those persons—all of them, in fact—would have in some stages of the year some of these articles. Their clerks, their salesmen, would be required to know the law, and the rates applicable to each of these articles when it passed a given price.

Now, as to the practical difficulty of that, of course, in the larger stores one or more clerks who are experts in this law, and with no other assignment, would be required to devote their entire time to looking after this tax proposition. Of course, the merchants realize that it would cost them many millions to employ clerical assistance for no other purpose than to run down as many of these sales as they are able while they were being made every minute throughout the day, and they would rather pay almost twice this amount, perhaps, in the form of some other tax, and the point I make and the suggestion I make is that, in view of the utter lack of time to practically work out this schedule before it came into the House in the bill last year, and in view of its considerable emasculation by the Senate, without in any sense abandoning my original views as to the soundness of this class of taxation, the committee should undertake to re-form, rewrite, or overhaul this provision and find, if possible, some other form—and I still think it possible—far more convenient and less expensive by which this class of expenditures can be reached for a substantial tax. I repeat, my suggestion is that, instead of abandoning this matter entirely and dismissing this tax and dismissing the revenue as well, we should undertake by some tax method equally sound as this in theory and far more feasible of administration, to find a suitable amount of revenue until the chief portions of our war expenditures have been taken care of.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to consume more than a few minutes. I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] and reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desires some time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I believe the gentleman from Illinois desires to speak, and I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky he be given some time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a brief statement? I want to ascertain if we can come to an agreement as to the end of general debate.

Mr. CANNON. I will wait. That will do just as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I have been out of commission for quite a time, and am still to a great extent out of commission, yet I feel impelled, since so many gentlemen have preceded me in favor of this bill, to submit a few remarks in opposition to its passage. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is an able man, and, by the way, I can truthfully say that I believe all the members of the Ways and Means Committee are able men and gentlemen and absolutely honest in their convictions. I believe the committee in asking for the repeal of this section of the revenue law is doing that which it believes is proper and for the best interests of the country, regardless of political conditions. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] gave this bill a new name. He has rechristened it. Heretofore this tax has been known as a luxury tax. That name, I presume for the purposes of the repeal, would not sound well to the country, so he renames it a consumption tax. The idea seems to be to lead the country to believe that the committee is not asking the repeal of a tax on luxuries, but is demanding the repeal of a tax on the consumer. All taxes, by whatever name they may be called, are consumption taxes. I challenge the committee to name any kind of tax that is not a tax on the consumer. The committee can not do so, and it is useless to attempt to defend the repeal of a tax on luxuries by calling it a tax on consumption. All taxes, it makes no difference by what name they may be called, are in the final analysis taxes on the consumer and consumption taxes.

Section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, proposed to be repealed, is as follows:

SEC. 904. (a) That on and after May 1, 1919, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of so much of the amount paid for any of the following articles as is in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article, when such article is sold by or for a dealer or his estate on or after such date for consumption or use—

(1) Carpets and rugs, including fiber, except imported and American rugs made principally of wool, on the amount in excess of $5 per square yard;

(2) Picture frames, on the amount in excess of $10 each;

(3) Trunks, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

(4) Valises, traveling bags, suit cases, hatboxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

(5) Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

(6) Portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

(7) Umbrellas, parasols, and sun shades, on the amount in excess of $4 each;

(8) Fans, on the amount in excess of $1 each;

(9) House or smoking coats or jackets, and bath or lounging robes, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

(10) Men's waistcoats, sold separately from suits, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

(11) Women's and misses' hats, bonnets, and hoods, on the amount in excess of $15 each;

(12) Men's and boys' hats, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

(13) Men's and boys' caps, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

(14) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' boots, shoes, pumps, and slippers, not including shoes or appliances made to order for any person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle, on the amount in excess of $10 per pair;

(15) Men's and boys' neckties and neckwear, on the amount in excess of $2 each;
(16) Men's and boys' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $1 per pair;
(17) Women's and misses' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $2 per pair;
(18) Men's shirts, on the amount in excess of $3 each;
(19) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' pajamas, nightgowns, and underwear, on the amount in excess of $5 each; and
(20) Kimonos, petticoats, and waists, on the amount in excess of $15 each.

The Ways and Means Committee, a Damon and Pythias committee so far as this bill is concerned, in its report asking that this law be repealed uses the following language:

The purpose of section 904—

The section the committee asks to be repealed—was to encourage thrift and economy and to prevent extravagance as well as to provide revenue.

Therefore, according to the statement of the committee, it proposes to repeal a law whose main purpose is to encourage thrift and economy, to prevent extravagance, and provide revenue.

If the law is repealed, therefore, the converse of this proposition will become true, and we will have a law that will discourage thrift and economy, will encourage extravagance, and reduce the revenue. There is no escape from the cold logic of this proposition.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] admits if this law is repealed the Treasury will lose $100,000,000 in revenue, but proposes to let these luxuries go untaxed and raise the revenue lost by the repeal of this section of the revenue law by means of an import tax; that is, by a tariff law, which is peculiarly a consumption tax and bears heaviest on the poorer classes. In a word, he proposes by this bill to relieve the rich, those who are able to buy, of this tax on luxuries and supply the deficiency of $100,000,000 by laying the burden on the poor by means of tariff taxes.

I wondered while the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] was asserting the deficit of $100,000,000 of revenue that will result from the repeal of this section will be supplied by increased tariff taxes what had become of my distinguished friend, Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, a gentleman for whom I have the highest regard. I wondered if that knightly warrior, who for so many years has so gallantly stood a faithful sentinel, gun in hand, on the watchtower of low tariff, had at last lowered the flag of the people and surrendered before the assaults of the legions of high protection.

I invite gentlemen to read the section of the law to be repealed, and then I ask them how they expect to go among their constituents and justify themselves before the tribunal of justice and fair taxation for a vote to repeal this law.

This bill provides among other things that the charming, fantastic, beautiful, and scantily clad sweet young creatures who daily promenade F Street in this city, and like thoroughfares in other cities, and whom all the younger Members of this House love, and all the older Members, such as Uncle JOE CANNON and myself, admire, shall pay a tax of 10 per cent on the excess of all over $10 on a pair of shoes and a like tax on the excess of all over $15 on silk skirts. Why should they not pay this tax on such luxuries? No man has, and no man can present, a valid reason why they should not pay the tax. All of us like to look at beautiful shoes and silken hose and hear the music of the swish and rustle of silken skirts, but that is not a valid reason why such luxuries should not bear their part of the burden of taxation to pay the cost of the recent horrible, disastrous war. [Applause.]

My good friend Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, wants this law repealed so the workingmen of this country will be enabled to buy shoes that cost over $10, and trunks that cost over $50, and carpets that cost over $5 per square yard, and suitcases that cost over $25, and pocketbooks that cost over $7.50 without paying a tax on the excess over those prices. Workingmen, as a rule, do not pay such prices for such articles. In the first place, they do not have the money to waste in that manner, and if they did they prefer to put it in homes rather than use it in wasteful extravagance. Where one workingman will pay $10 for a pair of shoes a thousand will pay a less price, and so with all the other articles enumerated in this section.

I never paid $10 for a pair of shoes in my life, and when I pay more I ought to pay a tax, and am willing to pay it. Nine dollars is the most I ever paid for a pair of shoes, and that was $4 too much. [Laughter.]

If a man pays over $50 for a trunk, he ought to pay a tax, and a big one at that. Most people in this country when they travel can carry their personal belongings in a cheaper trunk than a $50 trunk, and many of them in a suitcase or an old-fashioned carpetbag. Those who dance should be made to pay the fiddler, and those who insist on paying extravagant prices for articles of luxury ought to be compelled to pay the taxes. I have no trouble in carrying my personal effects in a cheaper trunk or a carpetbag. [Laughter.] I do not need a $50 trunk to carry my things around in.

People who buy articles at extravagant prices have, or ought to have, the money to pay for them. The trouble in this country is there are too many patriots, so-called, of the wrong kind. They are heartily in favor of taxation to pay the cost of war, but are in favor of some one else paying the taxes. They want some one else to do the fighting, while they do the hurrahing. I notice that the excess over $7.50 on smoking jackets is taxed 10 per cent. A man who will wear a smoking jacket should pay a big tax on the entire cost. A smoking jacket is merely a fad and not a comfort or necessity. I have never yet heard of a man wearing a chewing jacket, and fully as many men chew as smoke. A smoking jacket is a useless thing anyway, though I presume some men imagine they look quite handsome and cute and distinguished in one of about the stripes, checks, and colors of a shirt that a colored dude would wear to a Negro picnic in Georgia. A man with a smoking jacket on usually goes into what he calls a den and lights a 5-cent cigar, for which maybe he paid 50 cents and thought he was getting a great bargain because he paid a high price. He puffs away and believes he is getting a fine smoke, but he is not, because he does not know what a good smoke is.

If a man wants a good, comfortable, soul-satisfying smoke he should get a Kentucky or Missouri corncob pipe and some natural-leaf hillside tobacco and go out into the country to a log farmhouse and sit in the front yard under an old oak tree, in his shirt sleeves, with his shirt unfastened in front and his suspenders down, close by an old well of cool water with a sweep and an old, moss-covered bucket. There he can get the right kind of smoke, such as the denizens of crowded, profiteering cities never dreamed of in their philosophy, while with half-closed eyes he watches the curling, fragrant smoke drift away and mingle with the lazy, fleeting clouds while he dreams of home and heaven. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] correctly, he stated one reason for the repeal of this tax is that it is so much trouble to collect. All taxes are troublesome and costly to collect, and if that is a valid reason why this tax on luxuries should be repealed, the same reason applies with equal force to all taxes and no taxes whatever should be levied and collected. I have never observed that many persons are anxious to pay taxes. He gives as another reason why this law should be repealed that some dealers are dishonest and make false reports, and therefore because the dishonest escape by perjury the honest also should not pay the tax. This statement is a thinly veiled and glittering sophistry. It is just as reasonable, just as logical, to say that if two persons are arrested for the same kind of crime and both are equally guilty and a jury acquits one the other should be discharged without trial because the one equally guilty had escaped punishment.

This Congress should pass laws to compel those who have plenty of money and are able to pay extravagant prices for luxuries to bear their part of the burden of taxation the war has entailed. I never paid more than $2.50 for a shirt in my life, and that price shirt is good enough for any man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. Chairman, it is all moonshine about workingmen buying $10 shoes and $3 shirts. Some may occasionally pay such prices for a Sunday shirt or shoes, but it is not a habit with them to pay such prices. Those and higher prices are prices the rich—people with money—pay, and I am in favor of making the people able and willing to pay extravagant prices pay their toll of taxes.

If this bill is passed by and by it will be like the daylight-saving bill. That bill passed by a large majority, but it seems difficult to find a Member of this House now who will admit he voted for it.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who voted to repeal this luxury tax will make trouble for themselves at home. Their constituency will not approve of it and some of you when some bright man gets after you in your district about this bill, will think the day of political judgment has come. And it will, too, and you will be weighed in the balance and found wanting. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. BAER. If this provision is left in the law does the gentleman believe that 98 per cent of the people in this country will ever pay the tax on any of these things?

Mr. THOMAS. I think so. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] made the statement on the floor of this House a few minutes since that through this provision of the revenue law sought to be repealed $100,000,000 in taxes would be lost. If this law, which levies only a tax of 10 per cent on the excess above the prices named in the law, produces a revenue of $100,000,000 there must of necessity have been many millions of dollars' worth purchased at excess prices above the provisions of the law and it is fair to presume that such purchases were made by the rich, by people with money to pay extragavant prices, which must have embraced more than 2 per cent of the population. If only 2 per cent of the population as the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] seems to believe will ever pay any of this tax then the other 98 per cent will escape the tax and that will be because the 98 per cent will not purchase the articles at prices for more than enumerated in section 904, and the burden will fall on the 2 per cent who are able to pay extravagant prices for luxuries.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] have mentioned somewhat of politics in discussing this bill. I am not generally greatly interested in politics unless there is a real political subject under discussion or I am engaged in a campaign and then I try to hold up my end of the log. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] severely censures the President because he believes that $24,000,000,000 were appropriated on his advice. Mr. MOORE must have thought the advice good, as he voted for most, if not all, of these appropriations. However, the gentleman almost immediately back tracked and censured the President for not now being in Washington to give him and other Members of Congress more good advice about how to vote on other appropriations and other matters of vital interest to the country. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is "a gentleman of anagosity and general understanding throughout the neighborhood," but it seems to me his logic does not "coreander" on this proposition. [Applause and laughter.]

The President has had many and grievous burdens to bear and has without doubt acted as he believes for the best interests of the Republic regardless of political considerations, and he should at least be given credit for a conscientious discharge of public duty. Even if mistakes have been made, this administration will go down as one of the greatest in human history.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] deprecates, properly, the induction of politics into bills such as the one now under consideration, and some other gentlemen have, if I mistake not, spoken of politicians in this House. Why, gentlemen, there are no politicians in this House. All the Members are statesmen. That proposition is easy of demonstration. A statesman is a man who holds an office, and a politician is merely a fellow who is trying his best to obtain an office, and if he fails to obtain office and become a statesman he then becomes a disappointed political reformer, finds everything wrong, and endeavors with his voice to overturn all existing orders of things, and in fact seeks to turn the material and moral universe upside down. I am like Uncle JOE CANNON; I do not have an abiding faith in political reformers. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against this bill. It seeks to repeal a luxury tax, pure and simple. I shall demand the yeas and nays, so the House may be put on record, and gentlemen who desire to dodge the issue had best be looking around for pairs. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the war, which I hope has ended, was the most criminal and gigantic in all recorded human history and the most destructive of human life and property. The sons of this Republic performed a valorous part in that momentous conflict. In a single year we spent $19,000,000,000 to equip armies to carry the starry flag beyond the seas. Nineteen billion dollars is an amount whose magnitude the minds of men are helpless to grasp. A billion dollars in $1 bills laid end to end and side by side, 60 feet wide, would girdle the earth, 25,000 miles around. Bonds have been issued and enormous taxes have been levied. The people have bought the bonds and paid the taxes without complaint, except from the criminal profiteers. The public debt is now $47,000,000,000, and taxes will have to be levied on all kinds of property to pay even the interest on this enormous sum, and it would be folly, to say the least, to repeal a law taxing luxuries and lose $100,000,000 in revenues with this condition of the public debt, and more money yet to be appropriated to pay the expenses of the war.

I have gladly and cheerfully supported all measures that I believed necessary to carry the war to a successful termination and all measures necessary for the maintenance and comfort of our soldiers in the field.

America sent her sons across a wide waste of wild waters to fight for alien people, and they bravely and heroically maintained the valor of the great Republic. When the last of them shall have returned to home and friends, which I hope will be in the near future, my vote shall be only for appropriations, unless in case of some dire necessity, which stop at the water's edge. A jug of mescal and a barrel of beans will start a revolution in Mexico at any time, and there are people in Europe who will never stop fighting as long as we feed them.

Some of the people our soldier boys fought for seem disinclined to give them any credit for winning the war. That is criminal ingratitude. It is said that Thermopylæ had its messenger of defeat but that the Alamo had none. The American private soldier, the loved doughboy, had no messenger of defeat, because he was never defeated and is undefeatable.

The words of his fate came hissing
From the pit of the war each day;
Killed or wounded or missing—
Plain private—what more to say?

Our soldier boys never turned their backs to the foe, but died upon the field of honor amid the joys of conquest and smiled in death. The red trenches and tented fields of France—Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne—will forever stand before America's vision imperishable monuments of lofty patriotism and martial courage. The lone vigil is ended, the tumult has ceased, and thousands of our soldiers and marines are sleeping "the sleep that knows no waking." The death toll is staid, the draping of the willow hangs above them, and the "grass green from the soil of carnage" waves over their graves, but their valor and loyalty and devotion to duty will be enshrined forever in the hearts of their countrymen. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee very long. We are going to need more money than we will be able to get for the coming fiscal year without borrowing heavily.

I am not going to criticize as to the expenditures. We are all responsible for them. We all voted for the declaration of war. We all were for it, and we would be for it again if any nation in the world blew up our ships on the world's highway. That is what put us into the war. We did not go into the war for the purpose of protecting democracy in the Balkan States or on the Congo or anywhere else on earth outside of the United States. We kept out of the war under the leadership of our President, and we only went into the war to achieve victory when we were driven in. Our policy, as amended by our President, was that the world was to have peace without victory.

You may say that is criticizing and I will drop it right there. When Germany blew up our ships on the world's highway both sides of this House closed up like a vise and war was declared.

Now we have got to pay the piper. Our Allies whom we have financed will not pay during this or the coming generation the money they owe us. If they pay us the interest we will be wonderfully fortunate. Russia will probably never pay. Roumania had something, and so did other countries. I am not criticizing the advances at all, but I just want to say that you must look at the things we are asked to do. Take the wounded soldiers with a leg off, with an arm off, and the proposition for educational vocation. That is all right, I am glad of it, but there are many that you can not restore, and when you do restore them you have to pay them more than $7.50 a month if they have one leg off. We have got to have at this session of Congress enormous pension legislation. We have paid a $220,000,000 pension bill for soldiers before this war, and the pensions will not decrease. I do not know how much it is to be, but I believe that when the pension legislation that ought to be enacted, and will be enacted, in addition to the legislation already enacted, all put together, will be not less than $500,000,000 to $700,000,000 a year.

Then here comes the Secretary of the Interior with another alleged compensation scheme, which, if it is entered upon, will cost within the next 20 years $5,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000.

This bill picks out that one paragraph of the revenue law and seeks to repeal it, thereby taking off annually $100,000,000 in taxes. Then there is the other paragraph that we all want to take off, the tax upon soda water and ice cream that the children have to pay, 1 cent for every drink. I think that ought to go off, although I am not so clear about this tax being repealed. [Applause.] Let me ask you gentlemen a question. Do you get any letters from the automobile people and all the people who are paying taxes? I get them by the hundred. Although they do not say so in so many words, yet the tenor of their complaint is, let the boil go upon somebody else's nose. When the question is asked, Who's nose? the reply is made, Oh, let these plutocrats who made money from excess profits pay the tax. Why, good heavens, we have been taking a very large share of those earnings. The war is not over, and the expense of the war between this and the conclusion of the treaty of peace and its ratification ought to be less and less day by day and month by month, and if you are going to depend upon the excess profits and war profits you are not going to have so much, for you will collect less and less by the hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars this year under this bill and next year and next year. I am perfectly willing to take from him who hath and put it in the National Treasury. Many mickles make a muckle, and it is up to us, either by indirect taxation or direct taxation—call it consumption tax, or a tariff tax on imports, or as you choose—it is up to us to get the money. We have to have it.

Do you know what I would do if I had the power? I would not pass this bill repealing this particular clause at this time. [Applause.] Some gentleman says that we are committed to it. Not at all. I am not bound to do it, and you are not bound to it. It is a mere question of what is the best thing to do. Why would I not do it? I do not want to send a bill across to the Senate with this clause only repealed. I would like to have something put into its place when it is repealed that will make up the hundred million dollars we lose, if you can find anything to put in its place. When we come to the soda water on which the children have to pay a cent on every drink they buy, you will find that it is a very expensive tax to collect. The chairman of the Ways and Means tells us that that clause brings in $20,000,000. I do not know that I shall do it, but I have been thinking that I would move to substitute that clause for repeal instead of this clause which this bill repeals, although the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] thinks such an amendment would not be in order. I do not know whether the Senate would pass either or both of them, but we will have to run up against probably two or three revenue bills. Both sides of the House have got to cooperate in raising the money. The war was not merely a protection to us in this country, but it involved us in an expense that is as high as the skies. That is a question for both sides of the House, for we will require all of the money that we can collect at the customhouse, whether it is four or five hundred millions of dollars. I fancy it would be a difficult thing to pass a revenue bill whereby we could collect at the customhouses more than five or six hundred millions of dollars in taxes. I have not given this close attention, but I am just roughly guessing at it.

If the amendment that I speak of should be ruled out of order; that is, to strike out the section this bill provides for and to insert in its place the soda-water section, well and good, but that is the way I should like to see it passed. If that is not out of order, then I should be glad to have somebody else or if somebody else does not offer the amendment I shall to the pending bill to take in section 630. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my colleague that it was not my purpose really to actually discuss this bill. I did seek time earlier in the day, but I did not know that it was to take up so much time, with the idea of presenting another section of the revenue act; but in view of the fact that I do not desire to discuss this and it is so late in the day, I shall not ask for time.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How is the time of this debate controlled?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no agreement as to time or as to who should control the time, but gentlemen having been recognized for an hour, not having consumed the hour have reserved the balance of their time.

Mr. RUCKER. I should like to have two or three minutes to pay my respects to this bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. Everybody is anxious to go home, and what I wanted to do was to close this debate as quickly as we can and then move that the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON. If we adjourn now, the bill will be subject to amendment under the five-minute rule after general debate ceases.

Mr. FORDNEY. Can not we come to some agreement when general debate shall close?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr Chairman, I want to talk to my friends on the Republican side of the House, not that the others do not need it, but the Republicans have the power.

Now, what was the first thing in the way of taxation or in reduction of taxation that you gentlemen who have the power do as soon as you are called here in extra session? It is to relieve the rich people of this country from the existing tax burden of $85,000,000 to $100,000,000 per annum without placing the loss anywhere else, so far as this bill goes, but with the promise to hunt around and put it somewhere else some time or other in the remote future. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], intimated in his reply to my inquiries that he would put it on potash and dyestuffs by increase of tariff duties.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. No; I have only five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman voted for that in the last session.

Mr. SIMS. I say I did not, and I will show it by the RECORD.

Mr. FORDNEY. I did not intimate that.

Mr. SIMS. You referred to that when I asked you. You spoke of potash and dyestuffs. That was a very poor reply. The facts are that if you vote for this bill you will vote to take taxes off of those who are abundantly able to pay them and not hurt them at all. If you do not do anything else you will reduce the ability of the Government to pay its bills.

The Ways and Means Committee has been increased to 25. Increase it more, put it up to 30, and let those 5 extra members become a subcommittee to find somewhere to raise the amount of this loss before you take it off of anybody. When you go home you will have to answer why you began your work in the extra session of this Congress by removing the taxes from those who can pay and by so doing increase the taxes on those who are unable to pay.

I will ask my friend the gentleman from Michigan, whose anecdotes and stories have entertained me for 20 years, to be bold enough to withdraw the bill and recommit it to the Committee on Ways and Means and let it prepare another bill taking the taxes off of, at least, some of the poor people who will have to pay and put other taxes on such things as the rich will have to pay exclusively. Because when people are able to buy those things that these taxes will reach they will not be poor or distressed or needy. Now, put the burden where it belongs. No matter who voted for this bill or did not, or what caucus agreed to the bill or what caucus did not. Put some relief of the poor in to sweeten it and to make it more tolerable for those who may vote for the bill. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says, every time you get a glass of soda water you pay 1 cent for the privilege of paying for the soda water. Why not put this tax somewhere else now instead of leaving it to promises as to what the Ways and Means Committee will do hereafter? If you do not do better hereafter than you are doing now, you ought to resign from the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Practically all of these obnoxious taxes to which the gentleman refers were put in the bill on the recommendation of the Treasury Department under the administration of President Wilson.

Mr. SIMS. Why do you not put in something regardless now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am willing to follow the President in war, but I think I will break away a little on matters of taxation.

Mr. SIMS. Is this your first breakaway? [Laughter.] The gentleman is breaking away in a style not to be admired by taking burdens from the wealthy, who will not be deprived of anything they will need, and putting the burdens on those who will have to do without something they do need in order to pay it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman please, the President in his message to Congress recommended this be repealed. I read it into the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. Then you should hasten to hold meetings of the committee and cut it out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to keep the gentleman and the President in line.

Mr. SIMS. You are trying to get away from the merits of this legislation, or rather its lack of merits.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2021) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 4226) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that just as soon as possible—Monday morning, if it can be done—I would like to take up the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 2, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 2, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we worship Thee. Thou art the author of our liberty. Thy name alone guarantees the perpetuation of our free institutions. Thy thought revealed to us through Thy Word is the guide to the future prosperity and happiness of this great people. We pray Thee to give us hearts responsive to the divine will to work out God's plan for this people, that this Nation may be in God's hands as an evangel of brotherhood and justice and peace among the nations of the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE PANAMA CANAL (H. DOC. NO. 67).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting, at the request of the chargé d'affaires ad interim of the Republic of Panama, a copy of a note from the Panaman chargé d'affaires, together with a resolution (No. 25) passed by the National Assembly of Panama on February 27 last, asking the Senate of the United States not to change the name of the canal from Panama to Roosevelt, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 21).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations in the sum of $16,800 required by the Navy Department for additional employees, fiscal year 1920, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 3478. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 67. Joint resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to those who served, or gave others to the service of, the country in the Great War.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1200) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 1200) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT IN FRANCE (S. DOC. NO. 20).

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent that the address of the President at Suresnes Cemetery, in France, on Memorial Day be printed in the RECORD and also as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all to its being printed either as a public document or in the RECORD, and I would like to have the Senator suggest one or the other.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have it printed in the RECORD for the purpose of preserving it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would also like to ask separately that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is virtually an agreement between the two Houses that such printing shall be in one form or the other. If it is printed in the RECORD, it can be sent out exactly the same as if printed as a public document, and there is only that much more expense attached to it when printed in both forms. I dislike to object to the request, but I ask the Senator if he will not consent to simply allow it to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PITTMAN. I realize that the agreement or understanding with regard to having matter printed either as a public document or in the RECORD is a very good plan, but it seems to me that this should be made an exception.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the address of the President of the United States, and I shall not object; but really I think it is wrong.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to know before we proceed very much further on this question of distributing literature upon the league of nations what the rule is going to be. If there is going to be a print of this material both in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and as a Senate document, I have no objection to it at all. I do not want to make any exception, but I want to know that that rule is going to be permitted to stand with reference to other addresses, because while this is the address of the President of the United States the subject is one upon which there is a very wide difference of views. It is the subject in which I am interested and not individuals. I object for the reason that I want to have the question settled here and now. I am not objecting to the printing, but I am giving notice that I shall insist that it shall be regarded as a precedent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a matter the Chair can not settle.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I have already given notice that I intend to object to the publication of speeches as public documents without their reference to the Committee on Printing. But I realize, Mr. President, that the address of the President of the United States may be some exception, as being of more general interest to the people, and I did not feel it to be my duty to object to the printing of the address as a public document. I also understand that the remarks of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] apply to Members of this body. The general publication of matter relating to the league of nations or anything else offered here on the floor and emanating from others than the President of the United States or Members of this body will meet my objection if I am on the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection at all to the address being printed as a Senate document or in the RECORD, but I want it distinctly understood that it establishes the precedent and it will not be proper for anyone to object hereafter to printing in the same way any other important speech upon the same subject.

Mr. PITTMAN rose.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senator from Nevada, I wish to express the hope that the Senator from Idaho will not attach any condition whatever to the printing of the President's speech in whatever form it is requested. It is true that the rule ought to be so understood that both sides of this question shall have equal access to the public RECORD and the Public Printing Office. All should be shut out or all should be admitted that is worthy of a place. But I think when you come to an address of the President, in view of his position we ought not to place any limitation at all. I think we had better let the address be printed in both forms. It will not cost very much. If this practice is always indulged with reference to the President, it will not cost a great deal of money. I hope the Senator will withdraw any objection whatever.

Mr. BORAH. I have only stated, what I do not propose to withdraw, and that is that if this custom is established it must apply to everyone who wishes to have a document of importance upon this important subject published. I have no desire to discriminate against the President, but I do not intend that there shall be any discrimination against the league of nations, for I intend that literature upon both sides shall have equal opportunity whether it comes from the President of the United States or anyone else.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not imagine that the Senator from Idaho can call upon the Chair to rule upon a precedent that the Chair does not make.

Mr. BORAH. I have not asked the Chair to rule. I have simply said——

The VICE PRESIDENT. I know; but you are stating a proposition here that you say you are going to make a precedent. The Chair says that unless the precedent is made either by the Chair or by the vote of the Senate it is not a precedent. The mere objection of the Senator from Idaho does not constitute a precedent.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will permit me, it seems to me to be only a question of fairness to have the President's address printed as a public document. There will be a limited number printed for general distribution, whether it is printed as a public document or in the RECORD. I do not think there ought to be any general understanding about the matter. This comes from the President. Some addresses in opposition to the league have been brought in here and ordered printed as public documents at the request of Senators. Some of these addresses we would like to have as public documents, because we do not desire to carry the RECORD around with us. I think the address of the President ought to be printed as a public document. Senators would like to have it in that form to keep in their desks and put among their papers. If other addresses come in which Senators want to have printed as public documents, consent will be given, but to agree now to print everything as a public document that is brought in here, it seems to me, is exacting too much. It is for the convenience of Senators to have such addresses in the form of a public document.

Mr. BORAH. I am not asking the Senate to make any promises. I am making my statement for the RECORD, and I propose, if I can, to see that this is a precedent and is adhered to as a precedent hereafter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair only interfered for the purpose of making the position of the Chair clear, namely, that the Chair can not enforce this as a precedent. It will have to be enforced by the Senate if it is enforced at all.

The President's address is as follows:

[From the Washington Daily Post, May 31, 1919.]

LEAGUE OF NATIONS A COVENANT THAT MILLIONS WHO DIED IN WAR SHALL NOT HAVE DIED IN VAIN, PRESIDENT DECLARES IN HIS TRIBUTE TO THE FALLEN—WARNS THOSE WHO ARE SEEKING A RETURN TO AN OLDER ORDER THAT THEY CAN NOT SUCCEED BECAUSE "THE PEOPLE ARE IN THE SADDLE"—LOOKS FORWARD TO TIME WHEN PRESENT OPPONENTS OF LEAGUE WILL BE AS ASHAMED AS THEY WHO REGRETTED UNION OF STATES AFTER CIVIL WAR ARE NOW—FEELS HIS PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S WARNING.

"I look for the time when every man who now puts his counsel against the united service of mankind under the league of nations will be just as ashamed of it as he is now who regretted the union of the States.

"You are aware, as I am aware, that the airs of an older day are beginning to stir again; that the standards of an old order are trying to assert themselves again. There is here and there an attempt to insert into the counsel of statesmen the old reckoning of selfishness and bargaining, and national advantage, which were the roots of this war, and any man who counsels these things advocates a renewal of the sacrifice which these men have made; for if this is not the final battle for right there will be another that will be final. Let these gentlemen who suppose that it is possible for them to accomplish this return to an order of which we are ashamed and that we are ready to forget realize they can not accomplish it. The peoples of the world are awake, and the peoples of the world are in the saddle.

"I was told that there would be opposition, and I found union of action. I found the statesmen with whom I was about to deal united in the idea that we must have a league of nations; that we could not merely make a peace settlement, and then leave it to make itself effectual; but that we must conceive some common organization by which we should give our common faith that this peace would be maintained, and the conclusions at which we had arrived should be made as secure as the united counsels of all the great nations that fought against Germany could make them. We have listened to the challenge, and that is the proof that there shall never be a war like this again."—From President Wilson's Memorial Day address in France.

The text of President Wilson's Memorial Day address yesterday at Suresnes Cemetery, near Paris, follows:

"Mr. Ambassador, ladies and gentlemen, fellow countrymen, no one with a heart in his breast, no American, no lover of humanity, can stand in the presence of these graves without the most profound emotion. These men who lie here are men of unique breed. Their like has not been seen since the far days of crusades. Never before have men crossed the seas to a foreign land to fight for a cause of humanity which they did not pretend was particularly their own, but knew was the cause of humanity and of mankind. And when they came they found comrades for their courage and their devotion. They found armies of liberty already in the field—men who, though they had gone through three years of fiery trial, seemed only to be just discovering, not for a moment losing, the high temper of the great affair, men seasoned in the bloody service of liberty. Joining hands with these, the men of America gave that greatest of all gifts—the gift of life and the gift of spirit.

THEIR COURAGE AND ARDOR.

"It will always be a treasured memory on the part of those who knew and loved these men that the testimony of everybody who saw them in the field of action was their unflinching courage, their ardor to the point of audacity, their full consciousness of the high cause they had come to serve, and their constant vision of the issue. It is delightful to learn from those who saw these men fight and saw them waiting in the trenches for the summons to the fight that they had a thought of the spirit as well as a physical might, and those of us who know and love America know that they were discovering to the whole world the true spirit and devotion to their motherland. It was America who came in the person of these men and who will forever be grateful that she was so represented.

SLEEPING WITH KINDRED SPIRITS.

"And it is the more delightful to entertain these thoughts because we know that these men, though buried in a foreign land, are not buried in an alien soil. They are at home, sleeping with the spirits of those who thought the same thoughts and entertained the same aspirations. The noble women of Suresnes have given evidence of the loving sense with which they received these dead as their own, for they have cared for their graves, they have made it their interest, their loving interest, to see that there was no hour of neglect, and that constantly through all the months that have gone by the mothers at home should know that there were mothers here who remembered and honored their dead.

"You have just heard in the beautiful letter from M. Clemenceau what I believe to be the real message of France to us on a day like this, a message of genuine comradeship, a message of genuine sympathy, and I have no doubt that if our British comrades were here they would speak in the same spirit and in the same language. For the beauty of this war is that it has brought a new partnership and a new comradeship and a new understanding into the field of the effort of the Nation.

LESSON TAUGHT BY THE DEAD.

"But it would be no profit to us to eulogize these illustrious dead if we did not take to heart the lesson which they have taught us. They are dead; they have done their utmost to show their devotion to a great cause, and they have left us to see to it that that cause shall not be betrayed, whether in war or peace. It is our privilege and our high duty to consecrate ourselves afresh on a day like this to the objects for which they fought. It is not necessary that I should rehearse to you what these objects were. These men did not come across the sea merely to defeat Germany and her associated powers in the war. They came to defeat forever the things for which the Central Powers stood, the sort of power they meant to assert in the world, the arrogant, selfish domination which they meant to establish, and they came, moreover, to see to it that there should never be a war like this again. It is for us, particularly for us who are civilized, to use our proper weapons of counsel and agreement to see to it that there never is such a war again. The nation that should now fling out of this common concord of counsel would betray the human race.

"So it is our duty to take and maintain the safeguards which will see to it that the mothers of America and the mothers of France and England and Italy and Belgium and all other suffering nations should never be called upon for this sacrifice again. This can be done. It must be done, and it will be done. The things that these men left us, though they did not in their counsels conceive it, is the great instrument which we have just erected in the league of nations. The league of nations is the covenant of governments that these men shall not have died in vain. I like to think that the dust of those sons of America who were privileged to be buried in their mother country will mingle with the dust of the men who fought for the preservation of the Union, and that, as those men gave their lives in order that America might be united, these men have given their lives in order that the world might be united. Those men gave their lives in order to secure the freedom of mankind, and I look forward to an age when it will be just as impossible to regret the results of their labor as it is now impossible to regret the result of the labor of those men who fought for the union of the States. I look for the time when every man who now puts his counsel against the united service of mankind under the league of nations will be just as ashamed of it as he is who regretted the union of the States.

OLD STANDARDS SURGING FORTH.

"You are aware, as I am aware, that the airs of an older day are beginning to stir again, that the standards of an old order are trying to assert themselves again. There is here and there an attempt to insert into the counsel of statesmen the old reckoning of selfishness and bargaining, and national advantage, which were the roots of this war, and any man who counsels these things advocates a renewal of the sacrifice which these men have made; for if this is not the final battle for right there will be another that will be final. Let these gentlemen who suppose that it is possible for them to accomplish this return to an order of which we are ashamed and that we are ready to forget, realize they can not accomplish it. The peoples of the world are awake and the peoples of the world are in the saddle. Private counsels of statesmen can not now and can not hereafter determine the destinies of nations. If we are not the servants of the opinion of mankind, we are of all men the littlest, the most contemptible, the least gifted with vision. If we do not know courage, we can not accomplish our purpose, and this age is an age which looks forward, not backward; which rejects the standard of national selfishness that once governed the counsels of nations and demands that they shall give way to a new order of things in which only the questions will be, 'Is it right?' 'Is it just?' 'Is it in the interest of mankind?'

STATESMEN UNITED FOR LEAGUE.

"This is a challenge that no previous generation ever dared to give ear to. So many things have happened so fast in the last four years that I do not think many of us realize what it is that has happened. Think how impossible it would have been to get a body of responsible statesmen seriously to entertain the idea of the organization of a league of nations four years ago! And think of the change that has taken place! I was told before I came to France that there would be confusion of counsels about this thing, and I found unity of counsel. I was told that there would be opposition, and I found union of action. I found the statesmen with whom I was about to deal united in the idea that we must have a league of nations; that we could not merely make a peace settlement and then leave it to make itself effectual, but that we must conceive some common organization by which we should give our common faith that this peace would be maintained and the conclusions at which we had arrived should be made as secure as the united counsels of all the great nations that fought against Germany could make them. We have listened to the challenge and that is the proof that there shall never be a war like this again.

"Ladies and gentlemen, we all believe, I hope, that the spirits of these men are not buried with their bones. Their spirits live. I hope—I believe—that their spirits are present with us at this hour. I hope that I feel the compulsion of their presence. I hope that I realize the significance of their presence. Think, soldiers, of those comrades of yours who are gone. If they were here, what would they say? They would not remember what you are talking about to-day. They would remember America which they left with their high hope and purpose. They would remember the terrible field of battle. They would remember what they constantly recalled in times of danger, what they had come for, and how worth while it was to give their lives for it. And they would say, 'Forget all the little circumstances of the day. Be ashamed of the jealousies that divide you. We command you in the name of those who, like ourselves, have died to bring the counsels of men together, and we remind you what America said she was born for. She was born, she said, to show mankind the way to liberty. She was born to make this great gift a common gift. She was born to show men the way of experience by which they might realize this gift and maintain it, and we abjure you in the name of all the great traditions of America to make yourselves soldiers now once for all in this common cause, where we need wear no uniform except the uniform of the heart, clothing ourselves with the principles of right, and saying to men everywhere, "You are our brothers and we invite you into the comradeship of liberty and of peace."' Let us go away hearing these unspoken mandates of our dead comrades.

HIS PERSONAL CONSECRATION.

"If I may speak a personal word, I beg you to realize the compulsion that I myself feel that I am under. By the Constitution of our great country I was the Commander in Chief of these men. I advised the Congress to declare that a state of war existed. I sent these lads over here to die. Shall I—can I—ever speak a word of counsel which is inconsistent with the assurances I gave them when they came over? It is inconceivable. There is something better, if possible, that a man can give than his life, and that is his living spirit to a service that is not easy, to resist counsels that are hard to resist, to stand against purposes that are difficult to stand against, and to say, 'Here I stand, consecrated in spirit of the men who were once my comrades, and who are now gone, and who left me under eternal bonds of fidelity.'"

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram embodying a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Washington, D. C., relative to massacres in Poland, Rumania, and elsewhere, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WARREN. I have a brief telegram, signed by two distinguished citizens of my State, who have large interests in Mexico. One is an ex-governor of Wyoming and the other a capitalist, of the same State. I ask that the Secretary may read it. It is only a matter of three or four lines.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

CASPER, WYO., May 30, 1919.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Have urgent messages from our representatives in Mexico to request your influence to stop movement of Mexican troops over American soil, as many Americans held by Villa would be in danger.

B. B. BROOKS.
C. B. RICHARDSON.

Mr. WARREN presented petitions of the Jugo-Slav Republican Alliance No. 79, of Rock Springs; of the Slavonic Workingmen's Benefit Union, of Diamondville; and of Bratska Ljubezen No. 134, of Superior, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for the independence of the Jugo-Slavs and for justice and fair dealing in connection with peace deliberations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not my purpose to burden the RECORD unduly with resolutions, but I have received a great many resolutions from the organization known as the Knights of Columbus. I present only two. I ask that one of them be read, and that both be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, the first one being read, and the second was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a meeting of the Knights of Columbus of Williston Council, No. 1798, the following resolutions were passed:

"Whereas President Wilson has stated, 'No peace can last or ought to last which does not recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that national aspirations must be respected. Peoples can now be dominated and governed only by their own consent. Self-determination is not a mere farce': Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That in keeping with these words of truth we hold that the right of Ireland to self-determination can not be denied. And be it further

"Resolved, That President Wilson be asked to use his great influence at the peace conference to the end that the people of Ireland be permitted to determine for themselves the form of government under which they wish to live. And further

"Resolved, That Williston Council, No. 1798, of the Knights of Columbus respectfully petitions the Members of Congress from North Dakota to bring these resolutions to the attention of the Congress of the United States of America, to the end that such action be taken."

Dated at Williston, N. Dak.

Rev. E. P. O'NEILL,
Chairman.
THOMAS B. HOGAN,
THOMAS M. COONEY, Committee.

Resolutions adopted by Grand Forks Council, No. 1260, Knights of Columbus, Grand Forks, N. Dak., in the matter of Irish representation at the peace conference.

Whereas the Irish nation is one of the oldest organized nations; and
Whereas the English nation has subjugated the Irish nation by force of arms and without color of right or provocation; and
Whereas the wrongs and cruelties perpetrated by the German nation upon the helpless people of Belgium pales in insignificance before those perpetrated by the English nation upon the people of Ireland; and
Whereas the Irish nation has never recognized the right of the English nation to rule over her destinies; and
Whereas the lapse of time can never ripen a crime into a claim of right, and especially as in this case where the wrongs and cruelties are being continued at the present time; and
Whereas the will of the majority of all the people of any nation should be the supreme law of that nation; and
Whereas a larger proportion of the Irish people are standing to-day for Irish independence than have ever stood in any nation for any cause at any time; and
Whereas the men of Irish birth and Irish descent have given the full measure of their devotion to every land in the recent battle for the rights of humanity, and have been conspicuous in their defense of the rights of America not only in this World War but in all her wars; and
Whereas the Chief Executive of our Nation has declared for the rights of small nations in the matter of self-determination; and
Whereas there is no longer need for the claim that the subjugation of Ireland is necessary for the security of England; and
Whereas its boundaries are well defined and not in conflict with those of any other nation; and
Whereas the Irish nation has selected three delegates to the world's peace conference in Paris; and
Whereas martial law is the order of England in Ireland at the present time; and
Whereas the delegates selected by the Irish people are confined in English prisons without trial: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Knights of Columbus, 500 in number, of the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and Grand Forks, Minn., That we petition the Congress of the United States of America to use its influence to have the principles of democracy and self-determination applied not only to Belgium, Poland, and other small nations which are being considered, but also to Ireland; and be it further

Resolved, That we petition Congress to use its influence with the English Government to either release its Irish political prisoners or bring them to a speedy and just trial, that the world may judge her by her acts; and be it further

Resolved, That we petition President Wilson, that he use his best influence in having the principles of self-determination, which he so strongly advocates in behalf of other nations applied to Ireland, and that representatives of the Irish nation may be heard in the present peace conference.

Respectfully submitted.

HOWARD J. MANLEY,
Grand Knight.

Mr. GRONNA. I submit sundry resolutions with reference to war-time prohibition. I ask that one of them may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and one was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOTT, N. DAK., May 25, 1919.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was presented and read at the regular session of the Chilton Methodist Episcopal Sunday School May 25, 1919, and was adopted by a unanimous vote of all present. The resolution is sent to you as a protest in the matter mentioned, and we request that you, as our representative, do all in your power to keep the war-time prohibitory law in full effect.

Respectfully,

F. W. GRESS, Pastor.

We, the members and officers of Chilton Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, make our most vigorous protest against the repealing of the war-time prohibitory law relative to the sale of intoxicating drinks. We urgently plead with you to do all in your power, as our representative, to prevent the repeal of said law, to the contrary notwithstanding our honorable President, Woodrow Wilson, requesting repeal of same.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM L. ZIEGAHM, Superintendent.
GLADYS STONE, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Minot, N. Dak., relative to the unification of the freight and passenger service of the Soo Line and Great Northern Railway at that city, and favoring the discontinuation of such service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Chilton Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, of Mott, N. Dak., and a memorial of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School of Mott, N. Dak., remonstrating against the repeal of national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KENYON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fort Madison, Iowa, praying that Congress intervene to prevent the massacre of Jews in Poland and Roumania, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted by the Imperial County Farm Bureau, of El Centro, Calif., favoring the plan of the Secretary of the Interior for the reclamation of lands and the settlement thereon of discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McLEAN presented memorials of the congregation of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Bridgeport; of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, of Bridgeport; and of sundry citizens of Norwalk, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the repeal of national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Naugatuck Valley Association of Churches and Ministers, of Middlebury, Conn., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch, Connecticut State Board of Agriculture, of Woodstock, Conn., praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Board of Trade, Chamber of Commerce, and Manufacturers' Association, all of Derby, in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Reno, Pocahontas, and Vandalia, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the modification of war-time prohibition permitting the manufacture and sale of wine and beer, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a circular letter of May 10, 1919, on the letterhead of the League to Enforce Peace, Illinois Branch. I wish to have it printed at length. I call attention particularly to the effort of this branch of the league to procure Memorial Day speeches, asking that the Grand Army Post pass resolutions for the league of nations and advise their representatives of their action. I have received various resolutions, but not a single resolution from any Grand Army Post in my State in response to this circular letter, which I think is a prostitution of Memorial Day to improper purposes.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE,
CHICAGO, ILL., May 10, 1919.

COMMANDER GRAND ARMY POST.

DEAR COMPATRIOT: Knowing that your organization is among those that have permanent and personal interest in preserving peace, we are writing to urge you to give the projected league of nations your careful study and your valuable support.

In particular, you may soon be desirous to procure for Memorial Day a speaker who will be worthy of the occasion. Would you like to have us help you? You can do added patriotic service, we feel sure, if you secure one who will give a rousing, educational speech on the league of nations. We have more to commemorate this year than ever before; the graves of our heroes are not all in Illinois. Can there be any doubt that we are committed to some form of internationalism? And internationalism organized under a league of nations to aid in preserving peace is, in a sense, the cause for which our sons and brothers have died.

The memorial of May 30 could be nothing more fitting than a discussion of the new world order, purchased with so much suffering. If you can not secure a league of nations oration for the day, will you not at least pass resolutions similar in thought and purpose to the form inclosed? We shall be very much interested to hear from you and to help you with speakers or literature on the league, or in any other way possible. We have eloquent, forceful speakers who will come for their necessary traveling expenses.

We shall be pleased to have your personal opinion by filling out the inclosed card and returning the same to us. Let us hear from you by early mail.

Holding ourselves in readiness to assist you in any way possible, we are, very truly, yours,

THOMAS F. HOLGATE,
Chairman,
By J. E. BANGS,
Executive Secretary.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, about a week ago I called attention to the bill (S. 220) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable water," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, introduced by myself, which had been referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce instead of, as I thought, to a joint committee of the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Commerce. The Senate ordered the withdrawal of the bill from the Committee on Interstate Commerce and that it be referred to the joint committee suggested. A motion to reconsider that order was entered. I ask that that motion be taken up for action now.

Mr. SMOOT. I really did not hear what the Senator said, there was so much confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I asked for the consideration of the motion to reconsider the order by which the bill introduced by myself, relating to power sites on the public domain and dams in navigable streams, was referred to a committee to be composed of members of the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] entered the order on May 23. Would not the Senator just as leave let it go over until the Senator from Massachusetts can be in the Chamber? He is out of the Chamber now on very important business. He may be back this afternoon, and he may not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He will be here this evening.

Mr. SMOOT. He will be back this evening, I am informed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have waited patiently for a week for the consideration of the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will be here at the next session of the Senate, which I understand will be to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Let me ask what is being considered by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the Senator from Montana to defer the motion until the Senator from Massachusetts can be here.

Mr. McCORMICK. The colloquy is not audible on this side.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In view of the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will accede to the request of the Senator from Utah and let the motion go over, but I give notice that I shall ask for its consideration to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just at this point the Chair would like the attention of the Committee on Rules with reference to this very subject.

The other day the Chair ruled that a motion to discharge a committee was in order at the time of calling for reports of committees, but in accordance with the precedents of the Senate was not debatable until the hour of 1 o'clock. The ruling of the Chair, without any rule or without any precedent, was based on the theory that the object of reports of committees is to get a bill to the calendar, and that the object of a motion to discharge a committee is also to get a bill to the calendar, and therefore it was in order at that time to move to discharge a committee. But it will be seen that it leads to confusion, and the Chair respectfully requests of the Committee on Rules that there be an amendment to this effect, that at that time a motion to discharge a committee may be made if it is not to be debated, but if it is to be debated it goes to the period of time when resolutions coming over from a preceding day are in order, when it will be clearly debatable.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I offer some material on the subject of the league of nations and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration and publication as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

RATIFICATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask to have referred to the Committee on Printing a compilation relating to foreign practices in the ratification of treaties, and also extracts from the Executive Journal of the Senate with reference to proceedings in the case of amended and rejected treaties by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration.

SITES FOR MILITARY HOSPITALS (S. DOC. NO. 22).

Mr. REED. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress there was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a resolution relating to an investigation of and the selection of sites for military hospitals. The subcomittee having the matter in charge prepared a report, which in the closing hours of the session was submitted to the committee, the committee adopting the report of the subcommittee. That report did not get before the Senate at the last session. I desire now to present it, in order that it may be printed for such use as the Senate may desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. POMERENE. I introduce a bill to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (S. 1256) to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. POMERENE. I have a very brief memorandum explaining the provisions of the bill. It is only a matter of about two or three pages, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD. I think it will be of assistance to Senators who are interested in the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM.

The commission's current print of the act to regulate commerce as amended, revised to June 1, 1918, contains paragraphs placed in section 1, presumably for convenience, which were not enacted as amendments to that act and form no part of section 1. These are:

(1) The first whole paragraph on page 8, which is part of section 38 of "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat., 964); and

(2) The first whole paragraph on page 14, which is the text of "An act to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways and construing the act to regulate commerce with reference thereto," approved February 17, 1917 (39 Stat., 922).

The print also contains paragraphs inserted in their present places in section 1 which were enacted as additions to that section without indication of where they were to be placed. These are:

(3) The five complete paragraphs on page 9 and the first two paragraphs on page 10, constituting the Esch car service act, so called, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' as amended in respect of car service, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1917 (40 Stat., 101); and

(4) The remaining matter on page 10, all on page 11, and the first seven lines on page 12, constituting the priority act, so called, temporary in its nature and entitled "An act to amend the act to regulate commerce as amended, and for other purposes," approved August 10, 1917 (40 Stat., 272).

Both of these latter acts provide that section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, etc., be further amended "by adding thereto the following"; and in the absence of other provisions as to place the amendments thus made might successively be appended to the text of section 1 as it existed at the time of amendment.

Section 1 of the accompanying text ignores the placing, in fact, made in the commission print and proposes amendment of the first three paragraphs of the existing section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, meaning thereby:

(a) The paragraph on page 7 and ending with line 5, page 8, of the current print.

(b) The paragraph beginning on line 18, page 8, and ending with line 2, page 9, thus omitting that listed above under (1).

(c) The paragraph beginning on line 8 and ending on line 23, page 12, thus omitting those listed above under (3) and (4). Section 2 of the accompanying text proposes amendment of the paragraphs of the Esch car service act listed above under (3). This text retains the term "car service" used in the existing act, but enlarges its meaning.

In the attached text carats (/) indicate the omission of matter contained in the existing act, and interrupted underlining indicates the suggested new matter, except in the case of the proposed section 20 (a), the substance of which has not been enacted by Congress. The text is, in the main, that of the proposed section 20 (a) in the Rayburn bill which passed the House in 1914.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it may be read. I will say that the resolution was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee at the last session, but it was not reached on the calendar for consideration. I therefore reintroduce it, and should like to have it read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41), proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Article V of the Constitution of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows, to wit:

"ARTICLE V.

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified within six years from the date of their proposal by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, or by the electors in three-fourths thereof, as the mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the Senate will pardon me for a minute, I want to state that the resolution just read proposes to change the present constitutional provision in two respects only. It fixes a limit of six years within which a proposed amendment to the Constitution must be acted upon by the States in order to be valid, and it provides that in addition to the methods provided by the Constitution at present—to wit, the submission to legislatures or to conventions—if Congress desires to do so, it may submit the amendment to the electors of the States themselves.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, and was a member of the subcommittee which considered and favorably reported this proposed constitutional amendment during the Sixty-fifth Congress.

In my judgment, no proposed constitutional amendment could be placed before the country which is more vital, and which deals with the life of the Republic more directly, than the amendment to the Federal Constitution now proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. When we reflect that there are to-day pending before the States four proposed amendments, two of which were proposed in 1789, and that many publicists and constitutional lawyers now disagree as to how many States are now necessary for their ratification; when we reflect that in 1810 another amendment was proposed, and is still pending, and that the ablest constitutional lawyers to-day do not know whether or not that amendment has been ratified; when we reflect that the Corwin amendment, submitted March 3, 1861, ratified by three States, and left suspended there, it must appeal, at least to all lawyers, that it is our duty to say that there shall come a time when a particular submission by Congress shall no longer be in force and effect, and that a submission shall expire unless ratified by the required number of States within 10 or 14 or 20 years.

But, Mr. President, there is even a graver and a more vital reform in the proposed constitutional amendment than the time limit. Under the present situation 4,000 men pass upon our fundamental law, and fix upon the people what shall be the policy of this Republic. If we are to democratize the Republic and make this a democracy within a Republic, constitutional amendments should not be ratified by the legislatures, but should be ratified by the votes of people at a referendum, to the end that the people may know what sort of a government they are living under, and what sort of a government it is proposed that they shall live under, and to the further end that the people may directly say whether they desire the amendment.

I congratulate my friend from Connecticut upon having secured a favorable report in the last Congress. I hope the Judiciary Committee will report it favorably and that it will go through this Congress, for it is idle to talk about true liberty when we reflect that this Congress, composed of about 431 men, plus the 3,500 members of the various State legislatures, can fix upon the people and fix upon the coming generations what their fundamental law is. The people are the source of power, and their votes should pass directly upon such grave matters.

I repeat, there is no reform more vital, more necessary, more prudent, and more constructive than the very amendment which has just been introduced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,226.14 for the completion of the construction of a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock, N. Mex., on the Navajo Indian Reservation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MOSES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $65,792.53 to be paid to Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., and $26,400.30 to be paid to the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., as found due by the Court of Claims, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire and complete immediately the hospital at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1919, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $39,000 for the investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of the adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, almonds, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 for the investigation and eradication of the European corn borer, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for continuing the eradication of the sweet potato weevil, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment proposing that no limitation contained in section 7 of the legislative appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1920 shall deprive mechanics, laborers, or workmen employed at the arsenals or navy yards of the $240 increase provided therein, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. McLEAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 53), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearing as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. GRONNA submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 54), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 55), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 57), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to employ such counsel and expert assistants as may be necessary; to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (for Mr. BANKHEAD) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 56), which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game:

Whereas under the terms of the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds between the United States and Canada proclaimed December 8, 1916, the migratory bird treaty act approved July 3, 1918, and the migratory bird treaty act regulations effective July 31, 1918, the migratory wild-bird life is adequately protected in the United States and Canada; and

Whereas great numbers and many species of the migratory birds protected in the course of their annual migration pass through and from the United States and temporarily sojourn in the countries of Mexico, Central and South America, where no semblance of protection is afforded them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to propose conventions or treaties with the Republics of Mexico and of Central and South America for the protection of birds that in the course of their annual migration pass through or from the United States and temporarily sojourn in the countries of Mexico, Central and South America.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, on the 5th of February, 1919, I made some remarks in the Senate critcizing the inefficiency of the War Department in the work of supplying munitions of war, and so forth, for the proper equipment of our Army.

Maj. Gen. Henry G. Sharpe, formerly Quartermaster General of the Army, has written me that he thinks certain of my statements reflected unjustly upon himself in his conduct of the Quartermaster General's Department, and he has urged that his views might appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

To this end I request that three letters from Gen. Sharpe to myself, dated, respectively, February 26, 1919, May 13, 1919, and May 19, 1919, may be inserted in the RECORD, as suggested by him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHEASTERN DEPARTMENT,
Charleston, S. C., February 26, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN: I received your letter of the 21st instant and have deferred replying until the receipt of the official copy of your speech, which was received to-day.

In your letter you ask me to "point out directly wherein I have in any way criticized you, unless you consider that the statement of facts in the speech is a criticism."

Page 5 of your speeh gives the paragraphs which prompted my letter to you:

"The preliminary investigations made by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs in December, 1917, demonstrated unmistakably that three chiefs of bureaus had each failed as an effective administrator of his bureau."

I maintain, and a perusal of the testimony will substantiate the claim, that the evidence does not justify that assertion, so far as the Quartermaster's Department is concerned, but will show that I obeyed my orders.

2. That the investigation was not conducted on lines to ascertain if the chief of that department had been assisted or hampered in his efforts to organize the department; and if hampered in his efforts to effectively organize, a bureau chief could not justly be blamed for failure. Furthermore, the office of the Quartermaster General was carefully organized after consultation with one of the best firms of efficiency experts in New York which makes a specialty of such work, and was, after consultation with those experts, arranged to efficiently handle the work devolved upon it by law and to meet the requirements of the law then in force. The many changes made in the organization were all based upon the authority now known as the Overman law, but it must be remembered that that law was not in effect at the time of the investigation. The office had, however, a complete plan for expanding under the existing law to transact the greatly increased business consequent to entry upon war, and this plan was put into operation prior to the declaration of war, and was said to be the best, most practical, and comprehensive of any that had been suggested. The Committee on Military Affairs was not informed of this, as matters relating to the clerical force was assigned to another committee, but it is important in connection with your statement concerning administration.

Continuing, you stated: "Yet all of these were advanced to the grade of major general for the emergency."

That is not a correct statement. The facts are that I was appointed Quartermaster General, with the rank of major general, on September 12, 1916, and on October 6, 1917, the other bureau chiefs were, by act of Congress, given the rank of major general, the rank to be a permanent one for the chief of each corps while holding the office, not merely for the emergency.

Continuing, you added: "Two of them being subsequently given permanent rank as major general of the line, reaping a high reward, and for what?

I was not consulted and knew nothing of the intention to appoint me a major general of the line of the Army until I received notification from the War Department that the President had nominated me as such and asking if I accepted the appointment.

I have never asked for promotion nor permitted anyone to use influence to obtain my advancement, for I would be unwilling to hold office if under obligations to anyone for same. These statements can be substantiated by all who know me.

In my letter to you of February 13 I wrote: "The President in a personal autograph letter to me stated that it gave him a great deal of pleasure to show his confidence in me by conferring the promotion which I had earned."

Special legislation was secured from Congress to enable the appointment to be made, and those urging the legislation, and who were familiar with the facts, would not have sought or secured the same if they agreed with your statement as to the demonstrations made by the preliminary investigations conducted by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

It is my recollection that you and nearly every other member of the committee who attended the hearings stated to me of your own initiative that you were "not after me, but after the Council of National Defense," and you may recall that I stated then, and also in my testimony, that I thought, under the circumstances, the council had done well.

Then you add, "These officers had seen long service, with honorable careers; further investigation may absolve them from blame," which appears to indicate that you are doubtful that your facts are correctly established.

Was any evidence of failure of effective administration shown in the investigation in matters relating to pay, transportation, construction of training camps and cantonments (for you must remember that at that time the Cantonment Division was a part of the Quartermaster General's office, and he had to submit and explain the estimates); the supply of animals, harness, wagons (to procure the necessary wood, to build which it was necessary to have a force of men to cut the trees and to have the wood seasoned in kilns built specially for the purpose); the supply of automobiles and motor trucks, the latter subject involving the development of the Standard truck, which all qualified to speak of have declared to be one of the important achievements of the war; and attention is invited to the fact that the present organization of the Motor Transport Corps follows practically the lines which effort was made to accomplish, and is now administered by the very officers who were charged with those duties while in the Quartermaster Corps; the establishment of the Quartermaster's Training School at Jacksonville, which provided the officers and personnel to be sent abroad (several thousand officers and over 70,000 men passed through that school); the organization of the Remount Service, together with the establishment of (at that time) 22 remount depots; the organization of the ice-plant companies erected abroad; the Graves Registration Service units for abroad; the mechanical shop truck units; the immense Quartermaster's mechanical repair shops, which made possible the work of salvage and reclamation of the enormous amount of matériel in France (there are three of these shops in this country—at Baltimore, Atlanta, and San Antonio; a visit to one would show the immense plant installed); the stevedore regiments; the labor companies; the motor-truck companies; the motor-car companies; the wagon companies; the pack-train companies; the motor supply companies; the supply companies; over 100 bakery companies, with their personnel and complete equipment, which companies produced the bread so well received in France; the establishment of 27 schools for bakers and cooks, which provided the bakers needed in this country and in France, Russia, and Italy, as well as the mess sergeants and trained cooks for the new organizations created in the National Army and made it possible to handle the drafts, subsequent to the first, by using the personnel then in the service; and the arrangements for providing cooks and supplying hot meals to the first draft upon reporting at the cantonments?

The foregoing organizations and activities were hardly touched upon in the preliminary investigation, but reports from those who have been abroad show that they were in successful operation over there, and the records of the War Department will show that the foundations for them were laid here in this country, and it is a fact that many of these foundations were planned in the office of the Quartermaster General, based upon study of the war in France, many months before our country declared war; and a further fact that all the foundations referred to were constructed within six months after we entered the war, foundations upon which all the building has been erected, and that the officers of the Quartermaster Department are entitled to the credit of preparing those foundations.

More faithful, loyal, devoted, and unselfish service, rendered under trying conditions, can not be found. It is for these officers I appeal to your sense of fairness and justice, for I am convinced that after reading the above you will realize that you did not state the facts concerning the matters I have referred to.

Yours, very truly,

HENRY G. SHARPE,
Major General, United States Army,
Formerly Quartermaster General.

Senator JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Washington, D. C.

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHEASTERN DEPARTMENT,
Charleston, S. C., May 13, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your letter of March 5, in which you acknowledge receipt of my letter of February 26, and also to the statement that you made to me when I met you here in Charleston, I feel quite sure that you have no intention of being unfair, and therefore I am inclosing another copy of my letter and asking if you will not be good enough to have the same inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that my reply to you can be given somewhat the same publicity that your speech was given, although, of course, the same publicity can not be given it as your speech, because that was printed and distributed as a public document.

Further, may I ask that you kindly send me a copy of the RECORD in which you make the publication? I am troubling you in this manner because I am not furnished a copy of the RECORD.

Yours, sincerely,

HENRY G. SHARPE.

Senator JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHEASTERN DEPARTMENT,
Charleston, S. C., May 19, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to yours of May 16, I assume, of course, that you intend to be fair and not deny any opportunity to present a statement setting forth the facts from the opposite side the views which you have expressed.

I am only asking that you, therefore, will request permission to publish my reply to you in the RECORD. I know that such course has always been adopted in the Senate, and I am asking now only that you request authority to publish. I would say frankly that if later on you see that you would like to correct your statements that that can be done later, and would be deeply appreciated by me. I am only asking that you publish my letter to you.

Yours, sincerely,

HENRY G. SHARPE.

Senator JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

REPRESENTATIVES OF IRELAND AT PARIS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is a resolution on the table I offered, coming over from Thursday last. I ask that Senate resolution 48, urging an American peace commission to secure a hearing for the representatives of the Irish republic be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 3478. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. J. Res. 67. Joint resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to those who served, or gave others to the service of, the country in the Great War was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, was the President of the Senate about to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the resolution that has been debated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair understands that the unfinished business is the resolution of the Senator from California. That comes down at 2 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then, in pursuance of the notice that was given at the last session of the Senate, I should like to present some remarks on the league of nations.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think there is anything on the calendar to proceed with under Rule VIII, consequently it would seem to me desirable to take up the unfinished business. I understand from my conversation with the Senator from California that he will not press his resolution to a vote to-day, but will consent to have it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; but I do not want it to lose its place on the calendar; and I ask, therefore, in accordance with what has been suggested by the Senator from Virginia, that by unanimous consent it be laid before the Senate now, and then——

Mr. SWANSON. It may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SWANSON. Without losing its place.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But remaining the unfinished business.

Mr. SWANSON. There is no objection to that course. It may remain the unfinished business until disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes the Committee on Rules would get rid of the order for Calendar Monday or provide for its enforcement, or do something with it. The Chair does not know what to do about it.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senator from California submitted a request for unanimous consent that the unfinished business be now laid before the Senate, and that it retain its place as the unfinished business, but that it be not disposed of to-day, going over until to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is correct, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays the unfinished business before the Senate.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 12, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of California on May 20, 1919, as follows:

Whereas the peace treaty has been completed and has been delivered to the representatives of Germany; and

Whereas a synopsis only of the treaty has been given publicity in the United States, and our people are entitled to know its full contents, and to what, if any, engagements they may have been committed; and

Whereas it is reported in the press that the entire treaty has been cabled to the State Department and is now in the possession of the State Department: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested forthwith to transmit to the Senate the full text of the treaty of peace completed at the Paris conference and delivered to the representatives of Germany.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I am constrained to ask, in the first instance, the courtesy of my colleagues that I may not be interrupted during the course of the remarks that I shall address to the league of nations, because I wish, if I can, to maintain their continuity; and because, too, with interruptions my remarks might reach interminable length.

I have been unable to discuss within any reasonable limits all of the questions that are presented by this league. I have been unable in what I shall present to-day to take up such important propositions as the amendment relating to withdrawal, which constitutes no amendment at all, or the system relating to mandatories or various other provisions of this document; and I have been unable, too, to present at all the interrelated matters of the league and the treaty. I have attempted to discuss the outstanding, plain propositions which seem to me to present a case upon which any of us who are opposed to this document may with absolute confidence go to our people and go to all of the people of the United States; and in speaking upon this instrument I want to insist that no man who is a Member of this body, upon whom in the final analysis rests the obligation to decide the future destiny of his country, shall be deterred from speaking in frank and in open fashion by any fear of personal consequences or political expediency, by any threat from any person, no matter who that person may be; but that Senators of the United States, conscious that upon them rests this great and this solemn duty, shall speak in absolute fearlessness and with the utmost frankness and characterize the acts and the facts that are pertinent to the issue just exactly as their judgments and their consciences may require. This is a time for plain speaking. The man who blinks the facts now does a distinct disservice to his country.

Mr. President, the covenant of the league of nations transcends in importance perhaps any document which has ever been presented to this country. It not only violently wrenches the Nation from its traditional policy, deals with its economic resources, embarks it upon a precarious and a perilous departure, but commandeers, apparently, for all time its blood and its bone. For every sentence of such a momentous document there should be sound reason, and for every clause, rational and logical explanation and demonstration. Indeed, the President himself, after the completion in secrecy of the document, cabled in triumph its adoption with the statement that there was "good and sufficient reason for every portion of it." And yet to this day neither the President has shown us reasons for a single article or clause, nor has any one of the Americans presumably interested in its composition disclosed to the American people anything at all in respect to this document. We are compelled, therefore, from the words of the instrument itself, often ambiguous and obscure, to determine what this document, born in secrecy, denied exposition, and presented to us with a cynical indifference to our right of knowledge, may mean, and what some of its particular provisions portend to the Republic.

The circumstances surrounding its creation are anything but reassuring. It was to be the apotheosis of idealism; it was to represent the triumph of right, the overpowering direction of the conscience of mankind; it was to sound the knell for all time of selfish national ambition and aggression, of the tyranny of the strong over the weak; it was to realize the hopes, and the aspirations, and the prayers of peoples; it would throttle forever the cunning, greed, and avarice of diplomacy, and curb the grasping selfishness of power. The phrases in which its virtues were sung were almost as high-sounding and alluring and enticing as the phrases of a century ago, in which the world was to enter upon a new era under the Quadruple and the Holy Alliance. And long before we saw a line of this secret document a tremendous propaganda, financed with hundreds of thousands of dollars, obtained from clubs and organizations enthusiastic indorsements. Our people were taught to chant "promote peace and prevent war." The formula "promote peace and prevent war" swept over all the land, and its necessary corollary, before there was any league of nations at all, was the indorsement of the fantastic thing which feared the light in its creation and has denied to those most affected by it the slightest knowledge of the circumstances, events, and details of its composition. I received, just as other Senators did, innumerable resolutions before any one of us had the slightest conception of what the league of nations was, and the resolutions, in like tenor, have continued from that time to the present. Before publication of it various trainloads of distinguished gentlemen were going about the country holding meetings and conventions in different localities advocating an undisclosed document dealing with the future of the Republic.

Of course, when the document ultimately was given publicity, those who had in advance so hysterically and enthusiastically embraced it continued their advocacy. And while most of them grudgingly admitted what the President denied, that it required amendment, nevertheless, whether it had been amended or not, whether the most treasured policies of the Republic had been touched or destroyed, would not have altered the hectic hysteria of the league of nations men. That they have created a tremendous sentiment in this country by the repetition of their formula, "Promote peace and prevent war," is perhaps so. They rush upon the platform and demand of their auditors, "Don't you want to prevent war?" and there is immediate unanimity in the response, "Of course we want to prevent war." Thereupon the advocates say, "Inasmuch as you are against war and desire to prevent it, you must favor the league of nations." And the ordinary man, accepting the statement, subscribes to the resolutions to "promote peace and prevent war." There is another group, too, among them some very excellent people, who have hysterically embraced this document. They are those who conscientiously abhor war and are in general opposed to it. They found themselves during the last two years suppressed and repressed by espionage bills and by the mass consciousness aroused in the Nation in favor of the war. To voice their sentiments then meant jail, and they were compelled either by a regard for the wishes of their fellows or by personal fear to suppress expression of what had been their lifelong thought. With the league of nations and its formula, "Promote peace and prevent war," these people found once more the possibility of expression, and the two years of suppression under the law but made them perhaps more earnest and more vociferous in their newly acquired right to speak upon one subject. There are many other circumstances which contributed to the first hysteria and perhaps to the present sentiment in favor of this league. The awful tragedy of the world, the sorrow, the grief, and the anguish of those whose dear ones had made the supreme sacrifice, the fearful waste and welter, of necessity turned the thoughts of all men and of all women to a prevention of another world tragedy and cataclysm. Those of us who have spent a part of our lives in humanitarian endeavor were resolved after the experience of this great conflict to take, as far as human agency could, some forward step to preclude another. To all of these people—and I number myself among them—the idea of a league or confederation or union of the nations of the earth in behalf of the right, for the protection of the weak against the strong, to preclude the successful culmination of national cunning and cupidity, and to prevent future conflicts of God's creatures possessed a charm and an allurement, a hope and an inspiration, which we would have gone far to realize and consummate. The various phases of our disillusionment I will not dwell upon. Each milestone of the peace conference successively marks them. The beautiful phrases of altruism and idealism are found, as often has been the case in the last few years, but mere words. They were never translated into deeds. And, ultimately, with the presentation of the covenant came the shattering of all our fond hopes.

Of all the singular and astonishing intellectual distortions induced by the advocacy of the league of nations, not the least remarkable is the reproach to patriotism and the denunciation of those who think first of our Republic. It is rare, indeed, that any speech is made in favor of the league which does not bitterly condemn Americans who think of their own country first. We who would protect and preserve our own Nation, who loyally and patriotically would hesitate to involve its sons and its future generations in perpetual and continuous warfare, are designated as "little," "selfish," and "provincial" Americans—even men without international human sympathy and bereft of world vision. For the first time in our history the jealous guarding of our own, the love of our traditions and our institutions, the passion for our land and our liberty, have become grievous sins. We are told that our past affords no precedents; that our history contains no lessons; that all of those who have passed before, whose names we revere, spoke but empty words, and that their counsels give no guide. This strange, psychological phenomenon, apparently accompanying war, is an unnatural distortion of human intelligence which time alone will heal. May it be cured before the injury it threatens is done to the Nation.

There is yet another contributing cause to the present hysteria. We have learned in the last two years a new thing in our national life—national propaganda. We have been picking our pockets to poison our minds. Millions upon millions of dollars we have spent from the Public Treasury, and from taxation wrung from an overburdened people, to publish, not only in America but throughout the world, panegyrics upon those in power. The propaganda has been devoted, not as you would imagine it would be devoted in a country boasting of its democracy, for dissemination of the truth, but the propaganda, paid for by the people themselves, has been devoted to deceiving the people and to glorifying those who by a people's grace have been raised to high position. The heavy hand of a war-time Government has been held upon the press until in the East the liberty of the press has passed into history; upon the people themselves the clutch has been maintained so that only that which the administration desired spoken should be expressed. National propaganda, for the first time in our history suppressing current events, has manufactured public opinion, and that opinion has been made but the echo of what the national propaganda has decreed. This deadening and perverting mind process has had its evil effects and has been one of the powerful agencies for preventing people from knowing the facts or the possibilities of the league of nations.

I wish that I could adequately picture the situation at Paris in the peace conference. The great British Empire is there represented not alone by the ablest and most brilliant officials of the home Government but by the most astute and talented statesmen of England, all for Britain, and all with an eye single to Britain's power and greatness. For France, her grand old premier and her most famous citizens stand there ever alive to France's interest, demanding France's rights, and fighting for France's aggrandizement. Italy, from her various parties, has sent her best, skilled and learned in statecraft, Italians all, for Italy and Italy's future. Japan's cunning and illustrious sons fight Japan's battles for Japan's expansion and Japan's increase in territory and wealth. Every small nation on earth and every one that hopes to be a small nation have sent of their very best and very highest, each intent upon his own nation, its progress and its happiness, its future and its prosperity. There is just one nation unrepresented, perhaps included in a nebulous vision of internationalism, but not otherwise, and that is the United States of America. The position originally assumed by our country of idealism and altruism struck a responsive chord in the generous hearts of Americans, but, unfortunately, we have seen our idealism abandoned, our altruism forgotten. We have observed with astonishment and indignation our country inextricably bound in the sordid, cunning, secret, and crafty designs of European and Asiatic governments. We would wish, if we could not stem the tide of greed and avarice, selfishness and sordidness, and stop the secret plotting and plunder, at least, to be no part of it; to be ourselves again, with our ideals, untarnished, to be just Americans.

We fought a righteous war and won. With our might and our treasure we determined to destroy a ruthless militarism, and it is done. In the peace we would make it impossible for this monster ever again to threaten the world.

The victory for the United States means neither territory nor reparations. It should mean the triumph of our loud-trumpeted ideals for civilization, for the rights of small nations, for self-determination, for democracy. It means for England, France, Italy, and Japan huge territories, vast numbers of people, immense national gain. The burden must be borne of protecting and safeguarding these enormous allied gains. The question is, and the league of nations squarely presents it, Who shall bear the burden? Shall the burden rest upon the gainers, those who made a mock of self-determination, of the rights of weak people, of all our high-sounding idealism, or shall the burden, at the command of one who was party to the mockery, be thrust upon the only nonprofiting Nation, the United States? The sole reason, whispered in fear or ominously hissed to create fear in the rest of us, why the United States should become the world's guarantor and underwrite the rape of China and the partition of hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory and the transfer of millions of human beings to England, France, Italy, and Japan, is that by doing so the possibility of future wars will be minimized, and there may be a greater sense of security in the possession by England, France, Italy, and Japan of their newly acquired peoples and territories.

But this argument in its last analysis means that United States power and treasure and blood will do for England, France, Italy, and Japan what otherwise they would be compelled to do for themselves. It means not the end of discontent or the cessation of war, for peoples held in cruel subjection like the Koreans or Chinese will ever be striving for their liberty and the self-determination for which we talked so much and did so little. It means that the great democracy of the world—our country—must not only continue a party to the denial of these people's rights whenever they are asserted, but to our diplomatic denial we will add denial economically and by force of arms, too.

On the 11th day of November, America, as no nation on earth ever had been before, was respected, revered, and beloved. After six months of meddling and muddling in European and Asiatic controversies and contests over territory, the end of the peace conference finds Italy detesting us, France secretly despising us, England using us, and Japan bluffing us. They are all willing and anxious that we should have our league of nations, and willing and anxious because of the same spirit which has ruled them in the peace conference. The one going solvent concern nationally is about to enter into partnership with certain national bankrupts. We give of our assets, both moral and material, and assume a part of their liabilities. We do not need them as partners. They require us. They yield to us nothing; they can yield to us nothing. We give to them everything. We can protect our borders for centuries to come, just as we have in the century past. The Lord has given us our geographical isolation, and the Lord has denied just that thing to the different races of Europe. And, while our internationalists in behalf of the league of nations prate of the fact that we can not remain longer isolated, they forget that the geography of the situation remains immutable. Isolation otherwise, except to refrain from European entanglements or to indulge in European controversies and wars, has never existed, and, of course, never will exist. But when distinguished gentlemen say that we can no longer remain in a position of splendid isolation and play our own part in the world, they forget all the events of the past century. We are in constant touch with all the world. We can, whenever we think it in consonance with humanity, go wherever we will and do whatever duty demands. Our position has been, and ought to be, the commanding one in all the world. And it is unnecessary, in order that we preserve this position and maintain ourselves, in order that we may succor the weak or rescue humanity, to tie ourselves irrevocably to the bankrupt nations of the earth or to enter into a confederation for the protection of their boundaries and the preservation of their territories.

We have been told by the President that we must now by this league of nations make the supreme sacrifice and throw in our fortunes with the rest of the world. Why? The very query evokes from league enthusiasts immediate and angry retort, and, while they will not enlighten us, they hint darkly at our motives and deny even our good faith. Occasionally we hear that we have at last entered upon a world career, that we have become a part of world politics, and that we can not now either withdraw from the course into which the war drew us or desert the world which so needs us. In the language of a famous editor of the West, "All of this is partly true," but it by no means establishes that we must surrender our cherished position or our loved ideals by becoming a party to the sordid quarrels and the diplomatic duplicity of Europe and Asia. The United States will play her proud part in the world in the future as she has done in the past—a part prouder because based upon American principles and American ideals. It did not require secret treaties and stealthy bartering of unwilling peoples to make our Nation play her part in the war; it does not require the guaranty of secret treaties and bargaining and bartering of unwilling peoples to have the Nation play its world part after the war. Throwing in our fortune with the fortunes of the rest of the world means, with our altruistic brethren, throwing our fortunes to the rest of the world, that the rest of the world may do with our donation as it sees fit. Gladly will we do what duty commands and humanity and civilization may require, but that duty can be better done, our obligations to humanity and civilization better fulfilled, in the high position of the world's greatest democracy than in the subordinate position of the least consequential of a quintuple alliance, or as one of many bound irrevocably to the guaranty of the many's power and territories.

THE UNAMERICAN ARTICLE 10 OF THE COVENANT.

Organizations to prevent war are as old as civilization. I wish that every American would take the time to read the history of the many attempts which have been made, but one of which in reality reached a riper stage than mere negotiation. I will not, therefore, deal with the earlier attempts to prevent by unity of action future wars, but, because this present covenant bears such a sinister resemblance to the one definite project succeeding the Napoleonic world wars, I turn at once to the Quadruple and the Holy Alliance. The world in 1814–15 was quite as weary of war as the world to-day. There were then some altruistic and idealistic statesmen, possibly, just as, possibly, there are some to-day. And there were very, very many statesmen who saw alone the aggrandizement of their own nations, just as to-day there are very, very many such statesmen. It was May 30, 1814, that the treaty of Paris was signed and the boundaries of the various nations settled. It was then "the big four"—Russia, Prussia, Austria, and England—who remade the map of Europe, just as now it is another "big four" engaged in that task.

The original treaty of Paris was incomplete, so the congress of Vienna was called, where it was hoped that international authority might be established by which questions perilous to the world's peace could be decided. The time was quite as propitious as the present. On November 20, 1815, "the big four" completed their Quadruple Alliance. By article 6 of this alliance it was provided that in order "to consolidate the intimate relations which unite the four sovereigns for the world's happiness" it was necessary to hold periodic meetings either of monarchs or of ministers to concert measures "for the repose and prosperity of the peoples." The four great powers then were to constitute an international court for the settlement of all questions which threatened the existing order as fixed by the treaties concluded at Vienna and Paris. On September 28, 1815, Alexander I, the Czar of Russia, who was as prolific in idealistic speeches and nebulous altruistic generalities as some of our modern statesmen, proclaimed the Holy Alliance, and asked the other powers to join. Nearly every State in Europe became a member of this Holy Alliance. Great Britain indorsed it by a letter from the regent. The Holy Alliance agreed—

> To take for their sole guide the precepts of that holy religion, namely, the precepts of justice, Christian charity, and peace, as being the only means of consolidating human institutions and remedying their imperfections. The monarchs engage to regard themselves toward their subjects and armies as fathers of families, and to lead them in the same spirit of fraternity with which they are animated and protect general peace and justice.

The sole principle of force, it was agreed, should be that of doing each other reciprocal service. Indeed, the language of the Holy Alliance, and even of the proclamations and the speeches preceding it, are quite as ethereal and celestial as the language which has been applied to the league of nations. At Aix-la-Chapelle, November 15, 1818, the "big five"—France having now been admitted—agreed that—

> Neither in their mutual relations nor in those which bind them to their interests ever to depart from the principle of intimate union which has hitherto presided over all their common relations and interest—a union rendered more strong and indissoluble by the bond of Christian fraternity which the sovereigns have formed among themselves. And that this union, which is the more real and durable, inasmuch as it depends on no separate interest or temporary combination, can only have for its object the maintenance of general peace founded on a religious respect for engagements contained in the treaties and for the whole of the rights resulting therefrom.

The protocol provided as well for particular meetings of the sovereigns themselves, or their ministers or plenipotentiaries, to treat of their own interests and the interests of other States of Europe. Observe now our league of nations. Its preamble is—

> In order to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war—> and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealing of organized peoples with one another.

And so forth—

A preamble of like character with that of the Quadruple Alliance, not as lofty in purpose or of such broad Christianity as the Holy Alliance, but with the same underlying principle in reference to existing treaties.

There was no such provision in any of the engagements of the European countries in the Quadruple or Holy Alliance, or in the subsequent congresses, at Troppau, 1820; Laibach, 1821; or Verona, 1822, as that specifically set forth in article 10 of the present covenant. And, inasmuch as article 10 is perhaps the most astonishing thing ever attempted to be fastened upon a world, and certainly the most outrageous ever attempted upon America, I quote it:

ART. 10. Territorial integrity: The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

A century ago we had the Quadruple Alliance, and subsequently one made with France in addition, for the maintenance of existing treaties and the preservation of the peace of the world. To-day we have a league composed substantially of five nations pledged to the maintenance of existing treaties, and in addition pledged to the preservation as against external aggression of the territorial integrity and existing political independence of its members. The league of nations comes to us after its principal members have been gorged with territory, with their boundaries and their limits increased beyond the wildest dreams, and with other immense tracts of the world's surface yet to be distributed among them. After these extraordinary accessions of territory, when each of the four nations possesses lands far greater than ever before, the one going solvent national concern on earth undertakes by article 10 to guarantee forever these extraordinary territorial limits. It is answered by the advocates of the league that we guarantee these boundaries only against external aggression. But this was the very question that arose in the Quadruple Alliance a century ago. Castlereagh, England's representative, then recognized the possibilities of the future, and as the historian, Philips, remarks—

It was but a short step from interfering with the external relations of a State to interfering with those of its internal relations which might be supposed to exercise an external effect; and from the first the British Government had realized the danger to national liberties involved in any such claim.

Great Britain's attitude then was justified by subsequent events. It seems unspeakable that America, with the story before it of what was undertaken a century ago, under a provision merely guaranteeing treaties, should now enter into engagements by which she puts her mighty power in the hands of foreign diplomats whose spirit has not changed by the passing of a century for the maintenance for all time of their territories. It is obvious why the British statesmanship just subsequent to the Napoleonic wars and the British statesmanship of to-day are quite at variance. To-day, with the tremendous accessions of lands by England, she can very well insist upon the guaranty of boundaries.

A hundred years ago the guaranty rested most onerously upon England, the guaranty not alone to preserve boundaries fixed by treaties, but what was read into the particular provision then—to destroy internal revolution which might have an external effect. To-day the guaranty, infinitely stronger than in the treaties succeeding the Napoleonic wars, rests upon the United States, and that guaranty once given by our Nation must in the good faith upon which we pride ourselves be carried out to the limit. Now, what happened in the guaranty of preservation of existing treaties made just after the Napoleonic wars, the sort of guaranty immeasurably strengthened to which we bind ourselves? Metternich feared revolution just as the four bankrupt nations with which we have allied ourselves fear it, and he evolved from the engagement of the Allies to respect existing treaties his famous doctrine of intervention. England saw herself thus trapped, and the possibility of having her soldiers sent into every country in Europe, and perhaps abroad, to quell internal disturbances, and would not ultimately subscribe to the doctrine enunciated and agreed to by other nations. That doctrine, which became the law of the alliance, was that internal revolution might constitute or result in external injury or aggression, and therefore was not only within the jurisdiction of the alliance but that, under its terms, it became the bounden duty of the members to quell every internal disturbance and destroy every possible revolution. Under Metternich's leadership, the Congress of Troppau was held. England and France declined to engage in Metternich's enterprises. Revolution had broken out in south Italy. The people were striving for freedom. They forced their king to proclaim a constitution and asked a liberal government. Under the terms of the Quadruple Alliance for the protection of treaties an Austrian expedition invaded Naples, defeated the people, and put back upon the throne with absolute power the recalcitrant sovereign Ferdinand. In Piedmont in 1821 the story was repeated, and revolution was ended in Italy and freedom for the moment died. In 1822 Ferdinand VII of Spain, the most worthless of rulers, was expelled by his people, who adopted a constitution and endeavored to have a government founded upon liberty. The great powers under the formula and definition of Metternich sent a hundred thousand French troops into Spain, who whipped the ill-disciplined people and restored the dissolute monarch. And all this was done under a clause not a tithe as strong as that under which we are asked to bind ourselves in the league of nations.

After the powers had restored absolutism in Spain and again set up worthless Ferdinand upon the throne, they deemed it advisable to restore to Spain her American colonies, which had successfully revolted. England protested strongly against this course, but under the league of nations, as it then existed to preserve existing treaties, the great powers made ready to give back to Spain by force of arms the American colonies of Spain, which had revolted and become free. And then they were stopped, and stopped forever by an American message, the Monroe doctrine. It was America, an American President, who ended for all time the infamous Metternich doctrine, which had grown out of the nineteenth century league of nations designed to "promote peace and prevent war," and to guarantee existing treaties. Now, to-day this American doctrine having played its important rôle is delivered into the custody of the same sinister spirit which it exorcised from the world a century ago.

In the construction of article 10 it will require neither astute lawyer nor cunning diplomat to apply external aggression to any form of internal revolution, which it was feared might be communicated to neighboring States. It was exactly upon this theory that internal revolution was held by Metternich and his associates to be within the jurisdiction of the Quadruple Alliance of a century ago under its obligation to preserve treaties. At the conference of Troppeau, in 1820, the assembled powers solemnly declared:

The powers have exercised an incontestable right in commonly concerting measures of safety against the States in which an overturn of the government effected by revolt can only be considered as a dangerous example which must have for a result an attitude hostile against all constitutions and legitimate governments. The exercise of this right of necessity becomes still more urgent when those in that situation sought to communicate to neighboring States the evil in which they themselves were plunged and to propagate revolt and confusion among them. There is in this attitude and this conduct an evident rupture of the pact which guarantees to all the governments of Europe besides the inviolability of their territory the enjoyment of peaceful relations which exclude all reciprocal encroachment on their rights.

How often of late have we heard language conveying the same thought from those who are advocating the league of nations. If any people with a perfect case for freedom should rebel, the advocates of the league of nations would enthusiastically rush in, because this is exactly the design of the league of nations. To-morrow it may be Ireland, aided in small part from the outside, demanding that of which we have made a mockery—self-determination. Under our guaranty we must prevent it. And parenthetically, Mr. President, I may remark that Ireland, it seems to me, is in the position of a litigant with a perfect case who can get no hearing. In a year hence stricken and cruelly despoiled Korea, or possibly even passive, humble, robbed, and weak China. And, whether it would be the one or the other subject peoples rebelling, the purpose of the league of nations, under article 10, is to use the great wealth, power, and blood of the great democracy of the earth to retain revolting peoples, without regard to the righteousness of their cause, within the governments and the powers from which they would be free. I wish that there were time to insert in full the various pronunciamentos of the allies in the last century, when, under the pretense of preserving peace with the sword, they destroyed freedom. If their various proclamations were recited to-day, and no indication given of the time of their issuance and the specific matters to which they relate, they would readily be ascribed to modern utterances of the advocates of the league of nations, and would be taken as a part of the discussions at Paris. At Laibach, in 1821, the proclamation of the allied monarchs said of themselves:

In the future, as in the past, they will always have the purpose of preserving the independence and rights of each State as they are recognized and defined by existing treaties.

It was under this clause that the incipient revolutions in Italy against discredited and disreputable monarchs, all internal and domestic in character, were cruelly destroyed by the force of the great powers.

In the light of historical precedent and with the solemn determination faithfully to observe every international obligation we may assume, read and analyze this remarkable document. It goes far beyond that which the world, with the exception of one power, in the last century construed as requiring the guarantee of nations to preserve inviolate against any attack, external or internal, territorial limits and existing governments. In its preamble the league of nations provides:

The high contracting parties, in order to promote international cooperation, to achieve international peace and security * * * by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another, agree to this covenant.

And then, in article 10, the members of the league for themselves "undertake to respect," and, far beyond undertaking to respect, they agree to "preserve," as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. And if this were not enough to involve us in any dispute or controversy, external or internal, which might affect the territorial integrity and existing political independence of members of the league, article 10 takes cognizance not only of any such external aggression but specifically takes cognizance, too, of any threat or danger of such aggression. It does not need precedent or the construction put upon the maintenance of existing treaties by the quadruple alliance to enable us to understand that "danger" of such aggression may be any kind of revolution, rebellion, internal or external controversy, or difficulty of any character. It is unthinkable that any American wrote article 10. It is unthinkable that any American can subscribe to article 10. Those who penned this provision knew exactly what they meant and exactly what they intended. With scrupulous care the provision was designed to preserve for all time existing governments and the territorial integrity of existing governments. How best could this guaranty, in the light of world events and in the kaleidoscopic changes of the past few years, be accomplished? The shrewd nationalist of Europe or the able diplomat of the Orient, taking unto his country the immense new territories acquired by the peace, at once would realize that the only substantial guaranty in the world of the stability of his country and of the preservation of its enormous gains in territory and people, would be the great, free, giant democracy, the United States. And this league of nations is written around the one central idea that the great democracy of the United States shall guarantee, maintain, and preserve the British Empire's boundaries, with its seething millions of discontented peoples; the increased territories of France; the vastly extended boundaries of Italy, throbbing with revolution; and the rape of China by Japan.

American fathers and American mothers want peace, and they want a league of nations which will give them peace. Ask any American mother in Kansas or Illinois or California if she is for peace. She will say "Yes" with all her heart. Ask her if she is willing that her son and her grandsons shall go to the Balkans, to China, to Korea, to Siberia, to Arabia, to the Dalmatian coast, to Poland to compel peace. She will answer just as promptly "No."

This league of nations, with the men who really wrote it, was meant to obtain peace only in so far as peace maintained forever inviolate their territories and their subject peoples; and it was meant that this kind of peace should be obtained by the exercise of the power and the force of the United States.

How can any man of liberal views agree to article 10? When I speak of men of liberal views I mean those whose hearts throb in unison with humanity; those who believe government's obligation is first to men and women and children. The section freezes the world into immutability. It arrogates to those of us who are here to-day a knowledge superior to that of all those who shall come hereafter. It makes the present generation decide the fate of all future generations. It takes no heed of new world events, of ever-changing advances and progress. It assumes to-day to be the end, and that the men of to-day may write the history of to-morrow. It assumes to put the world in a strait-jacket, wherein there can be no movement for betterment or progress or humanity. But beyond and above all this, the maintenance of the static condition can be accomplished by the blood of just one nation, and that is ours. Are ye ready, Americans, to pledge your sons and your sons' sons to maintain and preserve for all time the present governments of the little nations we are setting up in Europe and the present governments and boundaries of the British and the Japanese Empires?

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

When the President returned from Europe with the original draft of the league of nations, a study of the draft disclosed that the Monroe doctrine had been deliberately scrapped. A very ominous statement was first made by the President that the covenant would not be amended, and all of those who cheerfully had accepted the covenant before ever they had seen it united in a universal cry that amendment was unnecessary. They all agreed, of course, that the Monroe doctrine was not mentioned, but they said it was unnecessary to mention the Monroe doctrine, because the covenant extended the doctrine to the world, as well as to the American Hemisphere. The fact is they gave little heed to the Monroe doctrine and cared less about it. The country, however, soon gave unmistakable evidence that it was unwilling to abandon this traditional policy of the Republic. At first the endeavor was made to soothe the people with bland, urbane, and specious arguments about the extension of the Monroe doctrine to the world, but this was so obviously specious and so plainly in violation of the very essence of the doctrine that the explanation failed to satisfy. The Monroe doctrine being peculiarly a doctrine of our own, designed and adapted for our self-defense and preservation, could not in the very nature of things be applicable to the world, and a league of nations which took it from its proper sphere of necessity destroyed it. The advocates of the league of nations knowing this fact, and being unable to convince our people that a world-wide application, without mention of the doctrine or reservation concerning it, preserved it, finally concluded to amend the covenant in some sort of fashion to overcome the widespread American objection. And what an amendment was presented:

ART. 21. Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine for securing the maintenance of peace.

If an American, with the purpose in view of protecting the Monroe doctrine, wrote this article, his affection for it was tepid, and his allegiance feeble. If the purpose of the man who wrote this so-called protection of the Monroe doctrine was to place that doctrine specifically within the jurisdiction of the league of nations, he succeeded admirably. The amendment, in fact, is "a fraud, a delusion, and a snare." It does not protect the Monroe doctrine. It could not have been written with any other purpose than the destruction of the Monroe doctrine. It is silly to contend that men who wanted to protect the Monroe doctrine and preserve it could not have said so in simple language. It was unnecessary to describe it, as it is not a "treaty of arbitration" or a "regional understanding." It was a misnomer, as any American knows, and it is neither of these things "for securing the maintenance of peace." The amendment was written either by an American who had no sympathy with the Monroe doctrine or by some one, not American, who was perfectly competent to write ambiguous phrases which will place the Monroe doctrine for all time under the league of nations.

What is meant by the language, "Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine for securing the maintenance of peace"? The language certainly does not mean what the Nation demanded—that the Monroe doctrine should be excepted from the league of nations, should be preserved by the United States for America, and that it should be administered by the United States and the United States alone. The amendment simply says "The validity of regional understandings for securing the maintenance of peace" shall not be affected. In other words, if the Monroe doctrine is to be administered, it will be within the jurisdiction of the league of nations to administer it. The amendment of the Monroe doctrine is like nearly everything that has come to us concerning the league of nations. It is pretended that it does one thing when it is intended it shall do another. It is not frank, nor fair, nor open, nor honest. Where plain language might express, without equivocation or ambiguity or evasion, the plain language is not employed. If there had been a real desire upon the part of the peace conference or the American delegates there to safeguard the Monroe doctrine and to remove it from the league of nations, leaving it for administration by the United States alone, this would have been done. But, instead of doing this, ambiguous and inaccurate phraseology is employed, the very purpose of which, apparently, is to deliver finally this great American policy into the power of European nations. When the amendment was announced at Paris, the semiofficial announcement of the covenant stated:

Concerning the Monroe doctrine, article 21 makes it clear that the covenant is not intended to abrogate or weaken any other agreements so long as they are consistent with its own terms for the assurance of peace. And in so far as the Monroe doctrine tends to the same end, whatever validity it possesses can not be affected by the covenant.

It is obvious that the amendment, therefore, was intended to subject the doctrine to the interpretation of other powers, and the instant this is done the doctrine is destroyed. The amendment is not an amendment safeguarding the Monroe doctrine, but is an attempted amendment to the doctrine itself.

The construction of the Monroe doctrine amendment by the British has been given in the commentaries issued to their people by the British delegates. Unfortunately, the commentary of our only American delegate when he presented the amended covenant was, "Article 21 is new." In this, as in all matters affecting the vital interests of the Republic, Americans must content themselves with the absolute secrecy of their representative and his refusal to enlighten them. The British, perhaps feeling a sense of some responsibility to their people, have in a series of commentaries endeavored to expound the various provisions of the league. Their interpretation of the Monroe doctrine amendment is thus stated:

Article 21 makes it clear that the covenant is not intended to abrogate or weaken any other agreements, so long as they are consistent with its own terms into which members of the league may have entered or may hereafter enter for the assurance of peace. Such agreements would include special treaties for compulsory arbitration and military conventions that are genuinely defensive.

The Monroe doctrine and similar understandings are put in the same category. They have shown themselves in history to be not instruments of national ambition but guaranties of peace. The origin of the Monroe doctrine is well known. It was proclaimed in 1823 to prevent America from becoming a theater for intrigues of European absolutism. At first a principle of American foreign policy, it has become an international understanding, and it is not illegitimate for the people of the United States to say that the covenant should recognize that fact.

In its essence it is consistent with the spirit of the covenant; and, indeed, the principles of the league, as expressed in article 10, represent the extension to the whole world of the principles of the doctrine; while should any dispute as to the meaning of the latter ever arise between the American and European powers, the league is there to settle it.

This declaration of the British is pregnant with meaning. It holds the treaties now existing, such as that between Japan and England, substantially an offensive and defensive alliance, and any which may hereafter be entered into, will continue in full force and effect, notwithstanding the league of nations; and, what is no less important, that should any dispute arise concerning the Monroe doctrine, the league will settle that dispute. To Americans it has repeatedly been declared by league advocates that the amendment fully protected the Monroe doctrine and left the determination of its applicability and its administration to the United States. To the British public it is solemnly and officially announced that the amendment does no such thing, but brings the Monroe doctrine in case of dispute to the league of nations, where it will be submitted to the tender mercies of England, Japan, France, and Italy. Of course, the Monroe doctrine will never be mentioned unless a "dispute" should arise between the United States and foreign powers. To say that then, the only time when we need it, it must be submitted to foreign powers for decision and determination, is to deny the essence of the doctrine and remove it from the very sphere from which it derives its vitality—America.

The British interpretation of this amendment is given added importance and controlling force by the voting strength of the various members of the league. The United States, the richest and most powerful Nation on earth, has one vote. Great Britain has six. Not only has Britain written the league, safeguarded her augmented territories for all time, and with true British farsightedness commandeered our wealth and men for her protection and preservation, but she has in the same spirit given herself a preponderance of voting power to guard against any future contingency. In this league, heralded by its sponsors as a triumph of American idealism, England has the following votes: 1, the British Empire; 2, Canada; 3, Australia; 4, South Africa; 5, New Zealand; 6, India. The moderation of the English statesman in not taking more votes—for, apparently, they could have added, as they chose, votes for any part of the Empire, great or small—ought to be fully appreciated by our people. England had but to ask and the request was granted; Japan but to demand, and we hastened to assent. And so, with England six votes, the United States one, we may be perfectly certain that the English interpretation of the amendment relating to the Monroe doctrine will receive careful and courteous consideration.

QUESTIONS LIKE IMMIGRATION.

Of late the advocates of the league have been advancing some curious reasons for our acceptance of it. Many of them now suggest that the league is so fragile, so weak, of so little compelling force that "it will do no harm" to accept it, and then we can look for improvement in the future. But if there are within it the germs which will ripen into evils, it ought not to be accepted upon any such theory. And this document has within it not only the germs of world evil, but, what is infinitely worse possibly, the germs of our own destruction. The great fundamental question which every American father and mother should answer is: Shall American boys police the world? Shall American blood uphold, maintain, and preserve Old World governments and the territorial integrity of the nations which have immensely increased their boundaries? Once we adopt this league we are bound indefinitely to send American troops into Europe, Asia, and Africa, to sacrifice American blood in quarrels which never have concerned us and never can concern us, and to do all this at the behest and command of foreign nations. It is no answer to say that we may refuse, because no honest man will enter into an agreement with the mental reservation that he will break it, and no decent nation will solemnly sign a guarantee upon the assumption it will violate its plighted word. I iterate and reiterate we pledge ourselves by this document to place our sons and our sons' sons under European or Asiatic command in European and Asiatic disputes, controversies, and wars. The advocate of the league of nations who denies this is either woefully ignorant or, what is worse, endeavors to deceive his people.

Another common expression at present is, "Half a loaf is better than none." But half a loaf poisoned is worse than none at all, and this half loaf, as some of its protagonists describe it that has been given us, is poisoned in its very creation by wrong, injustice, duplicity, and broken faith. It was neither fair nor just nor humane, when the world wanted peace, to delay that peace until the territorial acquisitions, like those of Japan, should be for all time guaranteed. When the peoples of every country, staggering under the terrible effects of war, were longing and praying for its end by the treaty, were begging and pleading that they might resume as best they could their normal lives, it was the worst sort of duplicity to intertwine and intermingle with the treaty of peace a document for the maintenance of existing governments and newly acquired boundaries. Some day some one must answer to the soldiers who have been kept abroad, to those who will be sent abroad, to the mothers and the fathers at home, for seven months of intermeddling that an English document guaranteeing the British and Japanese Empires and the Kingdom of Italy might be fastened upon the American people.

The sordid bargaining, selfish interest, and secret diplomacy which produced the league of nations is best illustrated in the decision of the peace conference relating to China and Japan. At one time during the deliberations the President issued a statement concerning Italy's demands, in substance denouncing secret treaties. During all these wretched months of secret intrigue it was the one clear note which struck a responsive chord with many of us. Some of us immediately indorsed his stand on secret treaties, assuming, of course, that when he took that stand in the doubtful case of Italy he would take it in the clear and unambiguous case of Japan. But, hardly had his words ceased to ring in denunciation of secret treaties when he accepted, without demur or objection, the worst of all the secret treaties presented, that between England, France, and Italy on the one hand and Japan upon the other.

We were not a party to the secret treaties, it is true, when they were made, but in the settlement of the peace we have become a party to them. Of our own choice, after the war is over, we join in the crime against China. It is concerning the secret treaties in their relation to the league that I speak. In disposing of Chinese territory we were dealing not with an enemy but with an ally. We were despoiling not Germany, our enemy, but China, our friend. And we who know something of the oriental character can understand the fate of China and how Japan bided her time at the peace conference until the exact moment for success came, and then demanded and successfully demanded. Just as Japan did with her secret treaties and China, just so will she do with her secret treaties and what she calls race discrimination. When the time seems to her propitious—and it will not be long—she will bring to the league of nations our yet unsettled dispute over our alien land law and her pending controversy respecting immigration and her assertion of race discrimination by us. And when this is done the league will take charge of these momentous questions and will decide them.

Glance for an instant at the jurisdiction of the league.

The preamble recites its purpose:

To promote international cooperation and to secure international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized people with one another.

The council of the league may deal—with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world. (Art. 4.)

The assembly may deal—

With any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world. (Art. 3.)

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. (Art. 11.)

It is also declared to be the fundamental right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb either the peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends. (Art. 11.)

The members of the league agree that if there should arise between them any dispute likely to lead to a rupture they will submit the matter either to arbitration or to inquiry by the council. (Art. 12.)

If there should arise between members of the league any dispute likely to lead to a rupture which is not submitted to arbitration as above the members of the league agree that they will submit the matter to the council. (Art. 15.)

From the quotations made it is, of course, obvious that any question likely to lead to a rupture is a matter clearly within the jurisdiction of the league and may be passed upon by it. With the Japanese question as it affects the Pacific coast I am reasonably familiar. I recall in 1913, while I was governor of California, the law pending before our legislature for the protection of our agricultural lands. I remember vividly when we were doing that which was clearly our right to do, the matter became of such international importance that the President sent to California the Secretary of State, who, there for a week endeavored to convince our legislature that it should not pass its alien land law. This law scrupulously observed existing treaties, was not discriminatory in character, and was designed solely as a measure of protection for the fairest lands in all this Nation, and the law was designed to do for California what Japanese law was already doing for Japan. My correspondence upon the subject was illuminating, not only upon the position which then was taken by the administration, but that which was assumed by the Japanese. It is sufficient for me to say that the controversy soon became of more than local importance and assumed international proportions. If the league of nations had been in existence then the question would have been taken from the people of the State of California, who alone were entitled to deal with it, and would have been decided not by those whose right it was to decide and who were most interested, but by foreign nations. Of course, under the provisions of the league which I have cited, any such problem as our alien land law would at once become a subject for the league's determination, and any such question as immigration would likewise be within the league's jurisdiction. It is asserted, however, that the following amendment to article 15 of the league—

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement—would make it impossible for the league to act upon immigration and kindred problems. I deny that this is so. It has never been determined by international law that immigration problems are solely within the jurisdiction of one party, nor has international law ever definitely decided that what the Japanese term as "race discrimination" is solely a problem of domestic jurisdiction. On the one hand, it is asserted by the Japanese that alien land laws, restriction of immigration, and the like, are discriminatory in character, and hence international. On our part, we might assert the reverse. In any event, the matter would come before the council for decision, and we are thus in the position of submitting to the council or the league problems of the gravest moment to us.

Remember that there is in existence an offensive and defensive alliance between Japan and Great Britain, and that when the question of Shantung recently was up Britain very frankly said this treaty alliance still existed. As a Californian, I am not ready to submit any race problems we may have to the jurisdiction of the council of the league of nations or to the league itself.

I am unwilling that either body should pass upon possibly the gravest question that confronts us. I will not leave to foreign powers whether it is a domestic or an international problem. That is for us, and for us alone, to decide. You gentlemen from the South would resent the suggestion that a race problem of yours should be decided by nations bound to the race affected by secret treaties. You ought to be in full sympathy with me when I decline, so far as I am able, to submit to a determination of any sort, jurisdictional or otherwise, by foreign nations joined together by secret treaties, the great problem which confronts us.

Moreover, the peculiar phraseology employed leaves doubtful the intention of the particular reservation. The dispute must be found to arise "out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction" of one of the parties. No domestic question has ever been determined by international law. If the matter is one purely domestic, international law does not and could not deal with it at all. The language employed in the asserted exception of domestic questions is like the language employed in so many instances in the covenant, loose, inapt, and apparently intentionally uncertain and ambiguous. And yet, if it be claimed that this particular amendment excludes the consideration of purely domestic questions, what will be said of the very next sentence in article 15? Immediately after the amendment occurs:

The council may in any case under this article refer the dispute to the assembly. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute provided such request be made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute to the council.

Thus, even though you assert an exception of domestic questions is embraced in article 15, yet, nevertheless, the council may refer the very excepted case to the assembly, and it is the right of either party to require such reference to the assembly. When you recall that the assembly at Paris voted 11 for the Japanese position and 6 against, our California land law and immigration question would, upon reference to the league assembly, receive short shrift.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from California asked not to be interrupted, but I am going to ask if he can give the names of the nations as they cast their votes. He gave the numbers merely. I desire to know if he knows how the respective nations voted?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; I am unable to answer that.

Mr. REED. I have been hunting that information, but have been unable to find it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I can not state it. I have only the numerical results.

But for another reason it is absolutely clear that questions like immigration, those arising from the alien land law of California and similar matters, will be within the jurisdiction of the league and will be determinable under the very language of the covenant. We have observed that any war or "threat of war" is a matter of concern to the league, and that if there should arise between members of the league any dispute likely to lead to a rupture the league will take cognizance of the dispute and jurisdiction of the matter. A question of immigration might in the first instance, where a single individual or a number sought admission to the nation, be held as purely a domestic concern; but if the country offended presented to the league that this question, originally of domestic concern, threatened peace and constituted "a dispute likely to lead to a rupture," the very purposes for which the league is formed, according to its advocates, would of necessity require the "threat of war" or the "dispute likely to lead to a rupture" to be brought before the league and there determined. The important question then becomes whether or not the matter constitutes a "threat of war" or "a dispute likely to lead to a rupture," and to say that the league, because the initial argument arose over a domestic question, would not take jurisdiction and cognizance of the impending threat of war and the possibility of rupture of friendly relations of nations would be to deny to the league exactly what its advocates contend it possesses and to take from it any possibility of prevention of war. When a domestic question ripens into a threat of war it comes within the league. Any question, domestic or otherwise, under the covenant which threatens war or constitutes a dispute likely to lead to a rupture, of necessity, if the league is to have the slightest vitality, must come within the league and be decided by it. It seems, therefore, first, that under the amendment domestic questions are not excepted; and, secondly, that any question, domestic or otherwise, which disturbs the peace or is likely to lead to a rupture between friendly nations shall be decided by the league. Californians, therefore, if they are interested in Japanese immigration, if they believe in the California alien land law; Americans, if they are jealous of their right to determine who shall come to our shores and under what circumstances, and who insist Americans must alone decide their domestic problems dealing with other nationals, can not support the present league of nations.

WE COMMIT A WRONG BY THE PEACE TREATY, AS IN THE CASE OF CHINA, AND THEN, BY THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS, UNDERWRITE THE WRONG FOR ALL TIME.

Within the limits of argument here I can show only briefly that the league of nations, a part of the peace conference, is tainted and poisoned at its source with exactly the same duplicity and wrong which have ever characterized Old World diplomacy. Open covenants openly arrived at are now a byword and a joke. Their mention brings but a cynical smile. Utterances of the President concerning self-determination, the protection of the weak from the strong, against special covenants, understandings, or alliances were no less fervid than his statements regarding open covenants. I do not quote them humorously, I beg you to believe. I quote them in all seriousness, and then you may take them and set them side by side with what has transpired at Paris. They are too tragic, in my opinion, to be at all humorous.

June 8, 1918, the President said:

It will be our wish and purpose that the processes of peace, when they are begun, shall be absolutely open, and that they shall involve and permit henceforth no secret understandings of any kind. The day of conquest and aggrandizement is gone by; so is also the day of secret covenants entered into in the interest of particular governments and likely at some unlooked-for moment to upset the peace of the world.

May 26, 1917, he cabled Russia:

No people must be forced under sovereignty under which it does not wish to live. No territory must change hands except for the purpose of securing those who inhabit it a fair chance of life and liberty. No indemnities must be insisted on except those that constitute payments for manifest wrongs done. No readjustments of power must be made except such as will tend to secure the future peace of the world and the future welfare and happiness of its peoples.

September 27, 1918, this:

Special alliances and economic rivalries and hostilities have been the prolific source in the modern world of the plans and passions that produce war. It would be an insincere as well as an insecure peace that did not exclude them in definite and binding terms.

The second of his four factors of world peace, July 4, 1918, was:

II. The settlement of every question, whether of territory, of sovereignty, of economic arrangement, or of political relationship, upon the basis of the free acceptance of that settlement by the people immediately concerned, and not upon the basis of the material interest or advantage of any other nation or people which may desire a different settlement for the sake of its own exterior influence or mastery.

September 27, 1918:

Second, no special or separate interest of any single nation or any group of nations can be made the basis of any part of the settlement which is not consistent with the common interest of all.

Third, there can be no league or alliances or special covenants and understandings within the general and common family of the league of nations.

Instances of like utterances might be multiplied. I add just one more, of February 11, 1918:

Peoples are not to be handed about from one sovereignty to another by international conference or an understanding between rivals and antagonists. National aspirations must be respected; peoples may now be dominated and governed only by their own consent. Self-determination is not a mere phrase. It is an imperative principle of action, which statesmen will henceforth ignore at their peril. We can not have general peace for the asking or by the mere arrangement of a peace conference. It can not be pieced together out of the individual understandings of the powerful States.

Read these utterances in the light of the Shantung decision. Time permits me to discuss but one instance, perhaps the most glaring.

To the Japanese Empire, with only 60,000,000 of people, we turned over shamefully and unjustly and cruelly 40,000,000 of Chinese. To the autocracy of the Orient we delivered 40,000,000 republicans of China. We made the Orient "safe for democracy" by dismembering its only democracy and handing the parts to the strongest autocracy on earth. The blackest page in all our history was written when our name was signed to the treaty delivering Shantung to Japan. It makes a mockery of our pretensions, and if the Senate permits it to stand it stamps us forever with its infamy. The delivery of China's fairest province unto Japan with its 40,000,000 people violated not only every word that had been spoken by us concerning the peace but it violated every principle of fairness, justice, and honor. Its justification by the thick and thin administration papers—and I presume as well by those very good people who advocate this league without knowing anything about it—is that the league of nations may ultimately right the wrong. But remember that with Shantung given to Japan, its people transferred to the Japanese Empire, under the league of nations, we—we, mind you, the 96 men sitting in the Senate—guarantee for all time by this league of nations, if we adopt it, Japan's territorial integrity and political independence. We have not only committed the crime, in the first instance, but we have guaranteed the crime for all time. We give by the peace treaty Shantung to Japan and by the league of nations, part of the same document, we guarantee Shantung to Japan, and guarantee it with our treasure and our blood.

We first rob China and enslave 40,000,000; and at the very time of the wrong we underwrite the robbery and guarantee by our arms and money it shall never be righted. This is the league of nations.

There is another experience that recently we have had with the peace conference.

In April dispatches came to this country that some sort of secret engagement had been entered into by the President with France and England. The story was repeatedly published. April 25 this statement was given out by Mr. Tumulty, the President's secretary, at the White House:

In view of the fact that certain newspapers of wide circulation throughout the country had intimated that the President had entered into secret alliance or treaty with some of the great powers, I conveyed this information to the President and am to-day in receipt of a cablegram from him giving a positive and unqualified denial to this story.

Within a very few days thereafter the French Government officially published that there had been an agreement between France and England and the United States for the protection of France. After this official publication by the French Government, and notwithstanding the original denial, the following telegram from the President was published by Secretary Tumulty on May 10:

Happily there is no mystery or privacy about what I have promised the Government here—

The President cabled—

I have promised to propose to the Senate a supplement in which we shall agree, subject to the approval of the council of the league of nations, to come immediately to the assistance of France in case of unprovoked attack by Germany, thus merely hastening the action to which we should be bound by the covenant of the league of nations.

"Happily there is neither mystery nor privacy" about the document, except in the United States of America. Nobody here has seen it. Nobody knows what it contains. It is impossible to comment upon it, and it is a singular fact that an engagement of this sort has been entered into by the United States, apparently the first of its kind in our history. When you remember that England frankly says her treaties are yet in existence, her offensive and defensive alliance with Japan yet controlling, and then you observe the United States of America making some sort of engagement, the knowledge of which for the present we are denied, you may have, unless you willfully blind yourselves, some conception of what the league of nations is intended to do.

Do you realize the full meaning of the alliance with France? In his explanation the President has given us his first and only construction of the league. He says that an alliance now to come immediately to the assistance of France in case of unprovoked attack by Germany is "merely hastening the action to which we should be bound by the covenant of the league of nations." By the league of nations, then, as understood by the President, the armed force of the United States must protect France in case of attack. By the league of nations, then, the armed force of the United States must protect any country a member of the league when attacked. If under the covenant we are thus committed to France, we are in like manner committed by it to Jugo-Slavia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Italy, Japan, England, and the Hedjaz of Arabia. The President by his one utterance in explanation of the covenant has made clear what the document itself plainly says, but what its advocates have occasionally denied, that under article 10 the United States is bound to send its troops and employ its power and treasure at the behest of every nation on earth. This is the definite obligation we assume; this is the so-called league of nations.

It is not a league of nations to prevent war. It is a league of armed nations in a gigantic war trust. In its very creation it has been stripped of every idealistic purpose it ever had. It contains within itself the germs of many wars, and worse than that it rivets, as in the Shantung decision, the chains of tyranny upon millions of people and cements for all time unjust and wicked annexations. It is a great world economic trust, wherein a few men sitting in secret may control the economic destinies of peoples. It is not a league of peoples, nor does it anywhere concern itself with peoples whose past wrongs and future rights were so eloquently portrayed by the President. It is a trust of existing present power. It will never prevent war; it will sanctify power in a new, a terrible, and sinister sense.

If the professions which have been uttered respecting peoples were sincere, if self-determination were honestly intended, if war were sought to be prevented rather than territorial gains safeguarded, this covenant would at some point have touched and recognized peoples. Instead of coming closer to those most concerned, the men and women for whom governments should exist, the league goes a step further from them. The representatives of ruling powers sit far away in secret. Not even is the Congress a part, nor does it have the right of knowledge or any check except that which our fundamental law may interpose—a frail and uncertain barrier in these days of Constitution scoffers. The President will appoint as America's member at the league his personal representative, when he himself does not attend. The attitude of the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber is that he may do with us as he wills, and presumably his representative may do likewise, and a gentle inquiry as to what is intended for our people is treated as treasonable, but above all as partisan. There is control neither by Congress nor the people. Geneva in secret will render its decrees and the only province of our people will be their execution. There is to be a plebiscite or referendum in Schleswig, the Saar Valley, and other places in due time. If those who wrote this document really wanted to prevent war, they would have permitted the men and women who must bear the burdens of war to determine by their votes whether or not there should be war. Of course, unless all the nations of the world agreed, this could not be done. It would manifestly be unjust for one nation to be compelled to resort to a referendum as to war while its antagonist, without a vote, proceeded to aggression. But here in a league are, or ultimately will be, all the nations of the earth. If every nation agreed to a referendum to its people before a declaration of war, peoples instead of rulers, humanity instead of power, would decide whether wars should be fought, and only in the rarest instances would there ever be war, and then only in the clearest cases. Such wars would be people's wars. Upon what theory do the gentlemen at Paris prate of self-determination, the rights of peoples, recognize the referendum in matters of intimate concern to peoples in small and isolated communities and deny the right when the decision means the very life of human beings? The answer is this is not a league to promote peace, but to protect power. Those who advocate it dare not amend it so that the issue of war shall be made by the men and women who must fight and die for it.

In a word, Mr. President, this league means that American boys shall police the world; that all the tottering nations of the earth shall be upheld by our blood and our bone; that Europe, Asia, and Africa may draw upon us in their every dispute and quarrel; that our Nation will be at the mercy of European and Japanese diplomats who never had and never will have any sympathy with our aspirations or our ideals; that we with our glorious past shall guarantee the territorial integrity of every country on earth and the bondage of every suffering people in anguish begging for freedom; that we destroy our Monroe doctrine and submit controversies on the American Hemisphere to determination by foreign powers. It means that I must abandon the lessons of my youth, which until this moment have been the creed of my manhood, of American ideals, American principles, and American patriotism; that I must deny the Americanism I taught my children, and that under God's blessing I hope to teach my grandchildren. It means the halting and betrayal of New World liberalism, the triumph of cynical Old World diplomacy, the humiliation and end of American idealism.

Certain partisan gentlemen, Mr. President, have of late been making the issue partisanly. For one, I make the issue with them. It is not one political party or the other. The issue is the Republic, the Republic that Washington gave us, that Lincoln saved for us, whose traditions and ideals have been so gloriously upheld by our valiant sons abroad. The issue is America. And I am an American. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). rapped for order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	McNary	Sheppard
Ball	Harrison	Moses	Sherman
Borah	Henderson	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Johnson, Calif.	New	Smoot
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Newberry	Spencer
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Stanley
Cummins	Kellogg	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Swanson
Edge	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Elkins	King	Phelan	Underwood
Fall	Kirby	Phipps	Wadsworth
Fernald	La Follette	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
France	McCormick	Pomerene	Warren
Gay	McCumber	Ransdell	Watson
Hale	McKellar	Reed	Wolcott

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He is attending the funeral of the late Robert Bacon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], is detained from the Chamber on account of illness.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on official business.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is detained by illness.

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. What is the request, Mr. President?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 18) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

Mr. KENYON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment.

Mr. KING. I object to that. I should like to hear the bill read.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator from Utah object to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill and its being read for amendment, as is the usual practice? The bill in that case will be read in full.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Education and Labor was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "in," to strike out the word "occupations" and to insert the word "industry," so as to read:

That in order to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 1, line 5, after the word "otherwise," to insert "and who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some of us have had no opportunity to examine this bill. It is a very important bill and, as I understand, goes into the States and provides that individuals who may be injured in private employment shall become charges upon the Federal Government. I repeat, I have had no opportunity to read the bill, but the request I was about to submit was that the amendments be not agreed to, that attention be called to them, but that action upon the amendments be deferred until there can be an opportunity afforded Senators to familiarize themselves with this important measure.

Mr. KENYON. That is perfectly agreeable. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the amendments are quite unimportant; they do not touch on the real merits of the bill but relate only to its method of administration. However, I am perfectly willing that the course suggested shall be pursued. I shall undertake to explain the bill very fully as soon as the reading is finished, and I very much hope the Senator will then ask any questions he may be inclined to ask in regard to it.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether it is his purpose to press this bill to a vote to-day?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have a vote on it to-day. I do not think anyone will be opposed to it when he understands it. The bill was reported out of the committee at the last session but failed in the closing days for reasons which the Senator knows. It has been again unanimously reported this session from the committee.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not ask for a vote upon this measure to-day, for, as I have stated, none of us has had an opportunity to examine the bill, except members of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. I will proceed after the reading of the bill has been concluded to explain it as I understand it, and to invite any questions but shall not ask for a vote on the bill to-day. I shall, however, do so in the immediate future.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 7, page 1, the entire clause reading as follows:

That in order to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment there is hereby appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the purpose of cooperating with them in the maintenance of vocational rehabilitation of such disabled persons, and in returning vocationally rehabilitated persons to civil employment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $750,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter, the sum of $1,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the dates just read in the bill are erroneous. The first date should be June 30, 1920; the second date should be June 30, 1921; and the third date should be June 30, 1922. I will move those amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to making the amendments suggested by the Senator from Iowa at the present time?

Mr. KENYON. I think there can be no objection to the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none, and the amendments will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Have the amendments which I have suggested been agreed to, I will ask the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

Said sums shall be allotted to the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population in the United States, not including Territories, outlying possessions, and the District of Columbia, according to the last preceding United States census: Provided, That the allotment of funds to any State shall not be less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year. And there is hereby appropriated the following sums, or so much thereof as may be needed, which shall be used for the purpose of providing the minimum allotment to the States provided for in this section, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $66,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $46,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter, the sum of $34,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the same error appears in those dates. I move to amend by changing the date "1919," in line 15, on page 2, to "1920"; by changing the date "1920," in line 16, to "1921"; and by changing the date "1921," in line 17, to "1922."

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Education and Labor was, in section 2, on page 4, line 25, after the word "appropriations," to insert "In any State the legislature of which does not meet in 1919 or 1920 if the governor of that State shall accept the provisions of this act, such State shall be entitled to the benefits of this act until the legislature of such State meets in due course and has been in session 60 days," so as to read:

All moneys expended under the provisions of this act from appropriations provided by section 1 shall be upon the condition (1) that for each dollar of Federal money expended there shall be expended in the State under the supervision and control of the State board at least an equal amount for the same purpose: Provided, That no portion of the appropriation made by this act shall be used by any institution for handicapped persons except for the special training of such individuals entitled to the benefits of this act as shall be determined by the Federal board; (2) that the State board shall annually submit to the Federal board for approval plans showing (a) the kinds of vocational rehabilitation and schemes of placement for which it is proposed the appropriation shall be used; (b) the plan of administration and supervision; (c) courses of study; (d) methods of instruction; (e) qualification of teachers, supervisors, directors, and other necessary administrative officers or employees; (f) plans for the training of teachers, supervisors, and directors; (3) that the State board shall make an annual report to the Federal board on or before September 1 of each year on the work done in the State and on the receipts and expenditures of money under the provisions of this act; (4) that no portion of any moneys appropriated by this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, preservation, erection, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any lands; (5) that all courses for vocational rehabilitation given under the supervision and control of the State board and all courses for vocational rehabilitation maintained shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Federal board shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States disabled while in the performance of his duty.

SEC. 2. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations provided by section 1 any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, (1) accept the provisions of this act; (2) empower and direct the board designated or created as the State board for vocational education to cooperate in the administration of the provisions of the vocational education act, approved February 23, 1917, to cooperate as herein provided with the Federal Board for Vocational Education in the administration of the provisions of this act; (3) in those States where a State workmen's compensation board, or other State board, department, or agency exists, charged with the administration of the State workmen's compensation or liability laws, the legislature shall provide that a plan of cooperation be formulated between such State board, department, or agency, and the State board charged with the administration of this act, such plan to be effective when approved by the governor of the State; (4) provide for the supervision and support of the courses of vocational rehabilitation to be provided by the State board in carrying out the provisions of this act; (5) appoint as custodian for said appropriations its State treasurer, who shall receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursement of all money paid to the State from said appropriations. In any State the legislature of which does not meet in 1919 or 1920, if the governor of that State shall accept the provisions of this act, such State shall be entitled to the benefits of this act until the legislature of such State meets in due course and has been in session 60 days.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The Legislature of Missouri met in 1919 and has adjourned. Under the proposed committee amendment which has just been read it would be impossible for Missouri to avail herself of the provisions of this measure.

Mr. KENYON. Does the legislature meet in 1920?

Mr. SPENCER. It does not. If we should change the first line on page 5 so that it would read "the legislature of which does not meet between the date of the passage of this act and December 31, 1920," that would cover every other State as well as Missouri.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, we could change "1919" to "1920" and "1920" to "1921." That would take care of every State, would it not?

Mr. SPENCER. That would not take care of the matter for the year 1920, because the legislature does not meet until 1921, and it would be impossible for Missouri to avail herself of it in 1920.

Mr. KENYON. I will suggest later, I will say to the Senator, an amendment to the amendment suggested by the committee. I will ask that the amendment be passed over for the present.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I be permitted to say in this connection that Vermont stands as does Missouri? We have had our session of the legislature for 1919, and it will not convene again, unless in special session, until 1921.

Mr. KENYON. We will cover that by a change in the proposed amendment. I ask that it be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Education and Labor was, in section 3, page 5, line 11, after the word "act," to strike out "and," and in line 13, after the word "employment," to insert "and to cooperate, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, with such public and private agencies as it may deem advisable," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall have power to cooperate with State boards in carrying out the purposes and provisions of this act, and is hereby authorized to make and establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry into effect the provisions of this act; to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their return to civil employment and to cooperate, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, with such public and private agencies as it may deem advisable. It shall be the duty of said board (1) to examine plans submitted by the State boards and approve the same if believed to be feasible and found to be in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act; (2) to ascertain annually whether the several States are using or are prepared to use the money received by them in accordance with the provisions of this act; (3) to certify on or before the 1st day of January of each year to the Secretary of the Treasury each State which has accepted the provisions of this act and complied therewith, together with the amount which each State is entitled to receive under the provisions of this act; (4) to deduct from the next succeeding allotment to any State whenever any portion of the fund annually allotted has not been expended for the purpose provided for in this act a sum equal to such unexpended portion; (5) to withhold the allotment of moneys to any State whenever it shall be determined that moneys allotted are not being expended for the purposes and conditions of this act; (6) to require the replacement by withholding subsequent allotments of any portion of the moneys received by the custodian of any State under this act that by any action or contingency is diminished or lost: Provided, That if any allotment is withheld from any State, the State board of such State may appeal to the Congress of the United States, and if the Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury.

The reading of the bill was concluded, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certification of the Federal board as provided in this act, shall pay quarterly to the custodian of each State appointed as herein provided the moneys to which it is entitled under the provisions of this act. The money so received by the custodian for any State shall be paid out on the requisition of the State board as reimbursement for services already rendered or expenditures already incurred and approved by said State board. The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall make an annual report to the Congress on or before December 1 on the administration of this act and shall include in such report the reports made by the State boards on the administration of this act by each State and the expenditure of the money allotted to each State.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby appropriated to the Federal Board for Vocational Education the sum of $200,000 annually for the purpose of making studies, investigations, and reports regarding the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their placements in suitable or gainful occupations, and for the administrative expenses of said board incident to performing the duties imposed by this act, including salaries of such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as the board may deem necessary, actual traveling and other necessary expenses incurred by the members of the board and by its employees, under its orders, including attendance at meetings of educational associations and other organizations, rent and equipment of offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference, law books, and periodicals, stationery, typewriters and exchange thereof, miscellaneous supplies, postage on foreign mail, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses.

SEC. 6. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education is hereby authorized and empowered to receive such gifts and donations from either public or private sources as may be offered unconditionally. All moneys received as gifts or donations shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and shall constitute a permanent fund, to be called the "Special fund for vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons," to be used under the direction of the said board to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation in special cases including the payment of necessary expenses of persons undergoing training. A full report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted, together with the names of the donors and the respective amounts contributed by each, and all disbursements therefrom shall be submitted annually to Congress by said board.

Mr. SPENCER. I move an amendment to the committee amendment on line 1, page 5——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to offer an amendment which comes from the committee?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. On page 7, at the conclusion of section 5, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 24, after the word "expenses," it is proposed to insert:

A full report shall be submitted annually to Congress showing all the expense incurred under this section and specifying the names of the parties and the amounts expended by them for any traveling and other expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry? This bill has just been reported and I have had no opportunity to examine its provisions or even read it. Is there any limitation upon the number of employees, the compensation to be paid them, or the amount to be paid in the aggregate for salaries and compensation?

Mr. KENYON. As to salaries paid by the board there is not.

Mr. KING. And there is no limitation upon the number of employees that the board may secure and the number of persons they may send into the various States to execute the terms of this bill?

Mr. KENYON. It is exactly the same as the present law with reference to vocational education. There was an appropriation in that instance of $200,000 to cover the work of the board. There is no limit placed in the law upon the number of employees or the salaries, or anything of that kind.

Mr. KING. But, as I understand, this bill provides an additional $200,000.

Mr. KENYON. It does.

Mr. KING. So that would give to this board $400,000 annually for the compensation of employees?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; and the work of the board, which is extensive. I will say to the Senator that a motion will be made to cut down that appropriation, as I understand.

Mr. KING. It seems to me, if the Senator will pardon me, that he or some other member of the committee ought to prepare an amendment which would limit the compensation to be paid the board and all Federal employees serving under them—an amendment, perhaps, which would classify the employees and provide the compensation to be paid to those serving in each class, because I think the policy which has been pursued, at least for a number of years, of making lump-sum appropriations and fixing no limit to the number of employees or the amount to be paid them is not only unwise but positively vicious, and is unfair to those employees of the United States whose compensation is fixed by law. The application of this unjust policy has resulted in thousands of new employees receiving much larger salaries than tens of thousands of persons doing just as important work who have been in the service of the Government for many years.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator in regard to the lump-sum appropriations. I do not know that it is feasible in a matter of this kind to fix the salaries. If it can be done, I shall be very glad to see it done. Some men are dear at $1,000 a year, while others might be cheap at $10,000 a year. It is a pretty difficult thing to do, but——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, if this bill is going over without a vote until to-morrow, I should like to suggest to the Senator that he consider the advisability of adopting some amendment providing that no salary shall be paid to any employee of the board exceeding a certain amount. I have made some investigation of late in connection with some of the salaries being paid to-day in bureaus which have been created, and they range all the way from $5,000 up to $15,000 a year, the latter sum being twice as much as a Senator of the United States is paid; and I know that the men who are holding the places could not command any such salaries as those in any other walk of life. They are being paid those amounts to-day by the Government of the United States; and I think we ought to limit the amount of salary that can be paid to any employee of this board.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator, and we will do that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Just a moment, Mr. President. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] started to offer an amendment and I interrupted him.

Mr. SPENCER. Has the Senator's amendment been acted upon?

Mr. KENYON. It has not been acted upon.

Mr. SPENCER. May the Secretary read the amendment which I send to the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in line 1 of page 5, the words "in 1919 or" and to insert in lieu thereof "between the date of the passage of this act and December 31."

Mr. KENYON. I think that will improve the committee amendment, Mr. President. If there be no objection, I shall be glad to have it adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Now, Mr. President, I should like to explain this bill for a few moments; and I am very anxious to have questions, so that it may be thoroughly understood.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not quite clear, from the reading of this bill, whether or not this work will be under the control of the same board that will have control of the crippled or disabled soldiers.

Mr. KENYON. Exactly the same board; and the same board that has charge of vocational education, and the same machinery that is now set up all over the country. It is merely extending that work to men hurt in industry and otherwise.

Mr. POMERENE. I am glad to know that, because I did not see any reason why there should be a duplication.

Mr. KENYON. No; there is no duplication.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. PAGE addressed the Chair.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator with reference to the proviso on page 6:

That if any allotment is withheld from any State, the State board of such State may appeal to the Congress of the United States, and if the Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid it shall be covered into the Treasury.

I should like to ask the Senator the purpose of that proviso, and what it means.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I answer that question?

Mr. KENYON. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. PAGE. That follows almost identically the language of the general bill for vocational education. We provide that the States shall formulate a method of handling this fund. If they fail to handle it according to law, or according to the judgment of the board that passes upon these matters, the fund is withheld and is paid back into the Treasury; but a proviso is made that the matter may be taken up by a board appointed by Congress and reheard.

Mr. LENROOT. That was the point I was getting at. It seems to me that under the language of this proviso, while it contemplates that the money shall be covered back into the Treasury if Congress does not direct it to be paid, the money never would find its way to the Treasury, because there is no time limitation within which Congress may act. If the appeal is made, it hangs the money up there for all time.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, that is true; it keeps it from the State.

Mr. LENROOT. It keeps it from the Federal Treasury as well. We segregate it. There certainly should be a limitation.

Mr. KENYON. It probably never gets out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. LENROOT. If it never gets out of the Federal Treasury, I see no reason at all for the proviso.

Mr. PAGE. It may get out of the Federal Treasury upon application of the State from which the fund is withheld. If the State has not properly managed the expenditure of this fund, the money is covered into the Treasury, and it remains there until the State by some initiative on its part sees fit to bring up the matter and have it adjusted by Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. How does it get out of the Treasury unless it is paid over? And, then, if it never gets out, how and why is it to be returned?

Mr. KENYON. It may be that the language should be changed and a limit of time placed as to when Congress shall act.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the only point.

Mr. KENYON. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say in regard to this matter that if the Senator will read the bill carefully he will find that in very many of its provisions it follows identically the language of the vocational education bill, and there was not a single provision in that bill that was not thoroughly thrashed out. I think that if the Senator will fully examine that matter he will find that the safeguards which he suggests have been carefully provided for.

Mr. LENROOT. I should just like to say that if the money never gets out of the Treasury there is no necessity for this language. If the money does get out of the Treasury, it ought not to be held up for all time to come through mere failure of Congress to act.

Mr. PAGE. No; it is a failure on the part of the State.

Mr. LENROOT. But suppose they do appeal, but Congress takes no action?

Mr. PAGE. Congress is bound to take action if they appeal.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; the Senator certainly does not mean that. There have been many appeals made to Congress—proper appeals—upon which Congress has never taken any action.

Mr. PAGE. But there is a provision made in this bill or in the old vocational-education bill that I think fully takes care of the very suggestion that the Senator has offered.

Mr. LENROOT. If it was in the old bill, it ought to be in this.

Mr. KENYON. If it does not take care of that matter, it can be remedied very easily.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; but I think it has been done in this bill, because I have taken especial pains in looking over this bill to recall the bill for vocational education, and I find that in almost every respect they run along parallel lines. That bill was handled with a great deal of care, and pretty much every feature that could be thrashed out was properly attended to.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will at once see that if an appeal is made to Congress and Congress does not act, it holds this money in the air.

Mr. PAGE. The presumption is that the State, if any money has been withheld from it, will ask that it be returned. I do not think there has ever been any trouble so far about the withholding of funds.

Mr. KENYON. We will certainly have a provision here that will get it out of the air if it is in the air. Public money does not stay in the air very long, or the Treasury either.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the view of the Senator from Iowa? Of course, the object of the bill is to have the States meet dollar for dollar. The State of New Jersey has been appropriating for two or three years a certain sum for this purpose, rehabilitation. How retroactive can this be?

Mr. KENYON. It is not retroactive at all.

Mr. EDGE. But if the money was appropriated at the last session of the legislature, so as to be available during the current year, then it would come under the scope of this bill, would it not?

Mr. KENYON. When would it become available under your State law?

Mr. EDGE. The 1st of July; from July next.

Mr. KENYON. That would depend upon when this bill is passed.

Mr. EDGE. Yes; it would. This bill, however, specifies that it is to apply to the year 1919, so, then, why would it not?

Mr. KENYON. The fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. PAGE. That has been changed to 1920 now.

Mr. EDGE. In other words, Mr. President, as to the States that have been rather enterprising and are already doing this work, it does not seem to be any more than correct and proper that they should participate in the benefits of the bill. We have already appropriated one hundred and some thousand dollars in the State of New Jersey for this specific purpose; and if the bill does not contemplate an appropriation during the current year—I can well understand that it would not go back beyond that—it would seem to me that it should be amended so that it does.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the current fiscal year is nearly over. This bill will not come into play until the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. EDGE. That is coincident with the fiscal year of New Jersey.

Mr. KENYON. Then it would coordinate with the law of New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. And it would apply to the appropriations made by the last legislature?

Mr. KENYON. I think so; yes.

Now, Mr. President, I realize that the Senate has done perhaps all the work it wants to do for the day. It generally seems to be true that where we listen to one speech on a hot day, that is about all the work the Senate can do. This, however, is a bill of very great importance, and, if the Senators are interested in it, I think it will be helpful if we can have a free discussion here and perfect frankness in asking and answering questions; and, while I do not guarantee that they can all be answered, we can discuss it pro and con.

The purpose of this bill is to take care, by vocational training, of men hurt in industry, and I want to be perfectly frank and say that the bill even goes beyond that. It will provide vocational training for men hurt, whether in industry or otherwise, if the hurt amounts to disability. I want to be perfectly frank in saying that it would go to this extent: If a "bum" fell off of a railroad train where he was beating his way and lost his arm, under this bill he could have vocational training. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] smiles at that, and it does seem pretty radical, but I will try and convince him of its justice.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the appropriation of Federal money for the purpose of caring for the "bum"—using the Senator's word—might be justified upon the theory that he is to be regarded as a part of interstate commerce, or at least an inevitable concomitant of the same.

But, as I am advised, there are plans on foot, and this bill is a part of this general plan, to relieve, in part at least, the States of their duty of providing for the education of those within their borders.

There is a campaign being conducted in the country to secure Federal appropriations for the purpose of educating the children of the land; this plan contemplates the establishment of a department of education, the creation of hundreds and thousands of new positions, and the assumption by the United States of responsibilities that the Constitution clearly imposes upon the States.

This bill seems to be symptomatic of the general plan. The States are supposed to be mere appendages to the Federal Government, not sovereignties possessing sovereign powers and charged with sovereign responsibilities. The theory seems to be that the Federal Government should increase the taxes laid upon the people of the States, collect under drastic revenue laws millions from the people, and then permit to filter back to them such portion as is not wasted or consumed by myriads of employees and oppressive bureaucratic administration methods.

The people of the States are being taxed to put money into the Federal Treasury only to have it returned—for local and State purposes—less a large part of the same, which, as I have said, is lost in the process of transferring it from the pockets of the people to the Federal Treasury and from the Treasury back to the people.

I am now speaking generally and not specifically with reference to the bill before us.

However, this bill, if I understand its terms, will result in taking money from the people by Federal taxation in order that Federal functionaries may return it to the people for expenditure for local purposes.

If the United States can collect taxes to furnish vocational education to the injured or sick, it would seem that there is scarcely any limit to its power. It would be authorized in this view to take over the entire educational system of the States. Where would the limit be placed upon the authority of the Federal Government? And if there be no limit, then our Republic is at an end.

If the Federal Government is subject to no limitations, if it may assume control of the domestic and internal affairs of the States, then the States will soon cease to function and will suffer complete atrophy.

My experience is that many of the measures presented in Congress, which call for appropriations, an increase in the personnel of bureaus and departments, the creation of new bureaus or departments, the extension of the activities of the United States into the States, and the assertion of authority within the States and in relation to the domestic concerns of the people, are prepared and urged by Federal employees.

There are too many who are too eager to increase their authority and enlarge the field of their activities.

I believe the policy should be to strengthen, not weaken, the States; to develop and maintain a feeling among the people in favor of local self-government—a resolute, abiding faith in their capacity to govern themselves and to work out the problems, intricate and difficult though they may be, that must come to a strong and virile people.

Let us preach the gospel of self-reliance—the faith that burned in the hearts of the pioneers who laid the foundations of the mighty Commonwealths composing this Union. Let us not chloroform the States by Federal decoctions or render the people anemic and bloodless by transferring from their shoulders to the Federal Government the burdens, duties, and responsibilities which rest upon them, and the faithful performance of which makes them a mighty people.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the Senator has not studied this bill or he would not make that statement. We are not trying to take over education in the States. It is entirely Federal stimulation, while the work is really carried on by the States. I believe the Senator from Utah is probably the only person in this Chamber who is opposed to this kind of legislation, and before we get through with this bill I am sure he is going to stand up here and be for it, because it is a great humane measure, and it is not hurting the Constitution or infringing upon it at all, not nearly as much as many things the Senator from Utah has been voting for in the last few months.

We have established the principle of Federal stimulation of education in the vocational education bill. If Senators will study what has been done in this country under that bill, they will know that it was one of the wisest pieces of legislation that we have ever passed. Over 165,000 persons are now availing themselves of the privileges of that law, and the Board of Vocational Training believes there will be double that number in this year. That was merely a proposition of stimulation. Congress did not take over education in the States. Congress merely matched, dollar for dollar, what the States might do in the way of vocational training, and every State in the Union has gone ahead with its educational board, called that in most cases, but in some cases a vocational training board for cooperation with Congress in that great measure. Now, that machinery is in existence to-day all over this country. This does not require the setting up of any new machinery.

We have gone ahead, too, as to the boys hurt in the war. Nobody has objected to giving them a chance for vocational training, and this board got into touch with something like 53,000 boys in France who had been injured. They have studied their cases. The registration has run up to something like 90,000, but out of those there are about 12,000 cases with which this board are undertaking to go ahead. They actually now have in training something like 3,200 soldiers. There are 4,000 who can not be trained because of some question that has arisen between the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Board of Vocational Training as to the construction of the act. That will be ironed out, I think, in another bill that will be presented here in a few days.

Nobody raises his voice against that work for the soldiers. It is a splendid thing. We go a step further now and say that that great work—making a man who is injured and may become a burden on society a part of the potential force of society—shall be extended through the application of the same principle, stimulation to the States, on plans made by them and approved by this board before any money can be certified to the States, so as to give a chance to every man injured in occupation to enter into some line of work by which he can make a living and cease to be a burden upon society, but be a potential benefit.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will not the Senator say, by way of anticipation, if his committee does not contemplate or if he does not contemplate legislation looking to a general Federal subsidy of all education?

Mr. KENYON. Whether the committee contemplates that?

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I could not speak for the committee. There is a bill now introduced, as the Senator knows, along that line. There have been no hearings on that bill as yet. There were some at the last session.

Mr. McCORMICK. The measure before the Senate would be a small enterprise by comparison with the other, would it not?

Mr. KENYON. Absolutely.

It is hard to get at the statistics of men injured in industry in this country, but it is safe to say that to-day in this Nation there are in the neighborhood of 200,000 men permanently crippled in occupation. I use that term instead of "industry" because "industry" probably would not include farming operations, and the accidents in farming operations are very heavy. Investigation has shown that in Austria the accidents on farms are equal to the accidents in industry. That is not true in this country; but it is perfectly safe to say that 15,000 men in this country yearly are injured in such a way that their power to labor is impaired more than 50 per cent. Of course, there are hundreds of thousands of men injured in small way, resulting in a week's to a month's loss of time; but I speak now of those who lose an arm or a leg or eyes or are injured in some functional respect that retards their work to a measurable degree. There are 15,000 of those men a year. Not all of them, of course, will want vocational training, but a large number will, and it is the purpose of this bill to give them the chance.

As I said to the Senator from Utah, the bill goes even further, and covers the case to which I referred of a man "bumming" his way on a freight train. He falls off, his arm is cut off, and he is thrown on the scrap heap. Why? If you can take that man to an agency and teach him some useful occupation, you not only save the man but you do a great thing for society. You take him off the scrap heap and have him earn his own way in the world.

So we have gone far in this bill. There is no question about that. At the inception of it it was not the unanimous thought of the committee that we should go that far. Everyone, I think, was in favor of taking the men in industry or the men in occupation and putting them under the act; but when you came to take the drunken man, run over by an automobile on the street and losing his legs, or something of that kind, the committee hesitated. That is a fair question of division for men to differ about and debate about.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does this bill limit the aid which is granted to those who have received injuries as the result of accidents or does it extend to those whose ability to earn a living has been impaired by reason of some organic disease or some progressive ailment?

Mr. KENYON. Any disability. That will cover sickness; that will cover an occupational disease that makes it impossible for the man to earn a living.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand, if a person, say, 50 or 60 years of age should become deaf or, through heart disease or some other ailment, should be prevented from pursuing his usual vocation, this board would take charge of that man and try to give him vocational training in something else in which possibly he might succeed and might be enabled to earn a livelihood?

Mr. KENYON. Why not?

Mr. KING. I am merely asking whether it would go that far.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; if the man is disabled in occupation and is without sufficient means to provide for his own rehabilitation, and the State board are of the opinion, under plans that have been approved by the Federal board, that they can teach that man, even though he be 70 years of age. You can learn something after you are 70 years of age. We have Senators here far beyond that age.

If he can become a useful, working member of society, I say yes; I say they could take charge of such a man, and why not?

Mr. KING. The Senator assumes, of course, that the States are unwilling to discharge a duty which rests upon them, and would not make appropriations to take care of those who might need care and aid.

Mr. KENYON. No; I do not assume that at all. Men who can not make a living and who have nothing become a burden upon society in one way or the other. Somebody has to take care of them. Whether it be the State or whether it be the Nation, it eventually comes out of the people who pay the taxes. This merely stimulates the State to do that work.

The States do not all do that work now. Here are workmen's compensation acts. You would assume that every State in the Union would look after that matter for itself. It is true that there are 38 States of the Union that have their compensation acts. There are 10 States that have no compensation acts. They will have to have compensation acts, in order really to get the benefit of this law.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will allow me, it is the experience in all countries that needed and desirable legislation is not obtained within a day or a year. It is a matter of experience, education, and, in many instances, legitimate, enthusiastic propaganda, in order to effectuate reforms and obtain the adoption of measures conducive to liberty or to social improvement. The Senator referred to employees' compensation acts. It is only within a comparatively short time that this subject received attention at the hands of the people and of legislators. The justice of providing compensation for those injured in industrial and other employments appealed so strongly to the people when the matter was brought to their attention that the States immediately began the enactment of compensation statutes. And it will only be a short time, in my opinion, when every State in the Union will have a humane and rational employees' compensation act. For many years I have strongly advocated workmen's compensation acts, and I shall rejoice when they shall find a place in the statutes of all States of the Union.

If I have correctly followed the Senator, I would say that if there is any difference between us with respect to the question under consideration it would be as to the government or sovereignty which attempted legislation looking to the rehabilitation of the injured members of society. It must be borne in mind that this is a dual form of government. The United States is different from Germany or France or many other nations of the world. Our Federal Government is a Republic composed of republics. The Federal Government is a government of limited and enumerated powers. It deals with national and international questions. Domestic problems, the questions of local self-government are committed to the sovereign States. The line of demarcation separating the States and their functions and powers from the Federal Government is clear and unmistakable. I believe that it is the duty of every State to provide for the welfare and well-being of the inhabitants thereof. The States are sovereign and omnipotent with respect to domestic and local matters. The question of education is a domestic question. The police powers of the State are multitudinous, and the States should exercise those powers, and the abdication by the States of their functions will destroy this Republic. The perpetuity of this Nation depends upon the preservation of the States. It is as important that the States should maintain their vitality and exercise their sovereign powers as that the Federal Government should maintain its vitality and exercise the powers delegated to it. There has always been a struggle between the centrifugal and centripetal forces in governments. There is a constant effort to centralize and consolidate authority and power in the hands of a few or in a central or overshadowing sovereignty. The highest fruits of liberty have been enjoyed under governments in which the domestic and local questions and problems were committed to the people themselves in their local spheres. It is apparent that these forces to which I have referred find expression in this Republic. Every student of our Nation and its constitutional development must be impressed with the fact that the centralizing tendencies and purposes are stronger now than ever before. There is an increasing disposition to look to Washington and to the Federal Government for laws, for regulations, for administration. We augment the powers of the officials and the departments and the bureaus and multiply the number of departments and bureaus and officials. Officials and bureaus are constantly suggesting and urging the adoption of measures extending their powers and jurisdiction, and the demands which they make clearly call for a diminution of the powers and authority of the States.

Of course, there are imperfections and weaknesses in State administration. The enactment of legislation to secure needed reforms bringing about improved industrial and social conditions can not be accomplished by the waving of some magic wand; but history shows that those reforms that came as the result of thought and effort and education are the most enduring and the most beneficent. The idea that all evils must be cured by legislation is erroneous. A proper foundation must be laid for legislation. That foundation is the result of experience, of education, and in many instances of experiments. Many of the officials in the Federal Government see the wisdom and propriety of reforms within the States, but are not willing for the States to work out in their own way the desired results. Thereupon they engage in a more or less extensive propaganda and oftentimes project the Federal Government into matters that are purely local and domestic and pertain to the functions of the States alone. Unfortunately the States too often fail to comprehend the principle involved; the proposition of appropriating money to aid in some State activity is alluring, and soon a sentiment is developed within the States which leads to a more or less powerful demand for Federal aid and Federal intervention. This course weakens the vitality and the moral fiber of the States; it tends to their devitalization and to their demoralization. In the end policies of this kind, if persisted in, would lead to their degradation and destruction. During the last session of Congress we appropriated $200,000,000 to construct highways within the States. The building of State highways is a State function. I have received communications urging that the States be relieved of the burden of maintaining roads and highways, and that the entire burden of building the roads and maintaining them be assumed by the Federal Government. I have received also communications urging that the Federal Government take over the schools and educate the children within the States. It would seem that many of the people of the States have so little regard for the dignity and sovereignty and prerogatives of the States within which they live that they would be willing to have them submerged and destroyed and their responsibilities and functions assumed and taken over by the Federal Government. The measure which is now up for consideration is new to me as it is to most of the Senators. We had no opportunity to read it nor to analyze its provisions; but from the hasty glance which I have been permitted to bestow upon it since the Senator from Iowa called it to our attention a few moments ago, I have been apprehensive that it might result in its operations in a further aggrandizement of the parent Government and result in a further loss of vigor and authority upon the part of the States and would be regarded as a precedent for legislation clearly destructive of the States.

Of course, all will concede that anything that will ameliorate the condition of the wounded, those who have suffered the loss of limbs, whatever will minister to their comfort and happiness and aid them in reestablishing themselves as vital factors in the social and industrial life of the communities in which they live, not only is commendable but must receive the genuine approval of all humane and right-minded persons. But the whole question is not answered when it is said that the Federal Government is going into the States to engage in the work of vocational rehabilitation. The question we meet at the threshhold is, Whose primary duty is it to provide for the vocational training of those who have been injured? Is it the duty of the State or, under our form of government, is it the duty of the National Government? I believe that the States, under our form of government, are charged with this duty and with the responsibility of educating the children within their borders, of looking after the social welfare and the industrial welfare of their inhabitants. The functions of the Federal Government are different. The States did not, in their grant of powers to the Federal Government, confer upon it the duty to go into the States and exercise the police powers of the States. The States ought to care for those who are injured, provide for their welfare and education, and equip them, so far as possible, for the assumption of the responsibilities of citizenship, and prepare them to enter some gainful occupation, so that they may care for themselves and their families. Legislation of that character by the States I most heartily approve of, and no State should fail in enacting suitable legislation for a purpose so humane and so beneficent. As stated a moment ago, however, legislation is not the child of a moment. It is only within the past few years that there has been any agitation looking to the rehabilitation of injured members of society. It is only within the past few years we have heard the words "vocational rehabilitation." However, as I have been advised, some States have most excellent statutes providing for the training of men and women who have been injured. The matter is receiving earnest consideration at the hands of State legislators and educators within the States. The people are awakening to the necessity of dealing with the question of aiding those who have by reason of disease or injuries been unfitted for some gainful pursuit; and as the subject has received attention remedies have been provided, and the entire subject is receiving intelligent and earnest consideration at the hands of the States. In many States—while it is not perhaps exactly parallel, but it illustrates the point that I am attempting to make—as soon as the attention of the people was called to the blind, the deaf, and the dumb provisions were made to care for these unfortunates, and in nearly every State, if not all of the States of the Union, there can be found schools for the blind and the deaf and the dumb, and everything that science and that a broad humanitarian spirit can suggest is being done to aid them and to equip them for service and responsibility in the social and industrial and political organism. And I have no doubt but that every State in the Union will be perfectly willing to meet this question and to make ample and full provision for the vocational training of those who belong to the class referred to in the bill which is before us for consideration.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is probably aware of the fact that under the vocational education act many States have gone far beyond the amount of money the Government appropriates, although that is a dollar-for-dollar proposition. The stimulation by the Federal Government—the leadership of the Federal Government—has been an incentive to them just as it will be in this matter.

For instance, referring to the Senator's illustration of education, does he not feel that a high rate of illiteracy in any State of the Union is a question of concern to the citizens of all the other States? I will not mention any State, but there is one State with perhaps a rate of illiteracy of 48 or 50 per cent. In my own State the rate is very low, but the illiteracy of that particular State or of any other State is a matter of concern to my State. These are not entirely State questions; they are national questions.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Is it not a fact that the duty of citizenship and the obligation of citizenship is dual; that we have citizens of the United States who are necessarily under the Constitution citizens of a particular State?

Mr. KENYON. And we now have citizens of the world.

Mr. FALL. We will have citizens of the world a little later; but the point to which I wish to direct the Senator's attention is that the United States Government itself makes citizens of the United States of foreigners. The States can not interfere with it, and they have nothing to do with it. One of those foreigners made a citizen under the law of Congress can go into any State in the Union and must necessarily be there regarded as a citizen of the United States. Generally he must have all the rights of a citizen of the United States under that State. Therefore, should it not be a part of the high duty of the National Government to assist in taking care of this great national asset, the citizen of the United States, although he may at the same time be a resident and citizen of a State?

Mr. KENYON. I have no quarrel with the view of the Senator from New Mexico, and I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will gradually come to that opinion as the years go by.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa looks at me in a way which seems to indicate that he expects some observation from me. I merely want to remark, without reference to the bill under discussion, that the tendency in this Republic seems to be toward a strong central government. There seems to be an irresistible tide in the direction of the establishment of a mighty and puissant Federal Government. In every part of the land there are those that are seeking to augment the powers and the authority and the activities of the Federal Government and its bureaus and department officials. People seem to be willing to barter away the liberties which they enjoy and to sell for a mess of pottage the inheritance which the fathers have bequeathed to them. The States are becoming mere shadows. The power of the Federal Government is being invoked to direct the local concerns and the private affairs and the questions that are purely intrastate in character. The States are being debauched by Federal appropriations. The golden stream flowing from the Federal Treasury acts as an acid to eat away the devotion which the people should feel toward the States in which they live. We are being seduced by Federal aid and the States are clamoring for crumbs that fall from the table of this rich and powerful Dives, the National Government, which sits enthroned in this Capital City of the Nation. It is rather paradoxical, when we see the vigor with which we attacked bureaucracy and consolidated government as they found expression in Prussia and yet encourage the adoption of policies in this country that, if persisted in for an indefinite period, must result in evils dangerous and destructive. We denounced the autocracy of Prussia. We claimed that the Prussian system consolidated and centralized the power in the hands of a powerful government; that it built up a military machine, controlled the social organism, laid its powerful hand upon all of the activities of the people, and sought to impose its Kultur upon people beyond its territorial limits. We insisted that, in order that democracy and local self-government and freedom might exist, this autocracy should be destroyed. When we denounced Germany we spoke of our States and local self-government and the rights of the individuals. We called attention to the States and to our form of government and to the immense authority which the States possess for the good of the people and of the vast powers reserved by the people themselves.

We spoke of the splendid, wholesome rivalry between States and accounted for the progress of this Nation because of the differentiations, the broad field for development, and progress left to the States and to the counties and municipalities and individuals within the States. We gloried in the individualism of this Nation, and contrasted it with the tyrannous state socialism and autocracy of other nations of the earth. But, as I have stated, there seems to be a rising tide in our land which beats with mighty force against the pillars and bulwarks that have protected this Nation in the past. There are those who seek the overthrow of States which our Supreme Court have declared should be indestructible. They would reduce the States and the people to a protoplasmic mass and superimpose upon us all the powerful hand of a mighty imperialistic government.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will carry his argument still further, it will apply to this league of nations that he is advocating, will it not?

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not want to be brought into a discussion of the league of nations to-day.

Mr. KENYON. Not to state how I feel about it, the Senator is assuming that we are going to strike down the States and all the splendid rivalries between the States to support his argument against this bill; but the Senator knows that the same argument is made against the league of nations, that it will strike down rivalry between nations that are splendidly developed. However, I do not want to get into a discussion of the league of nations at this time.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, if I believed that the league of nations would develop into an internationalism which would destroy nationalism, destroy the proud position of this Republic, take away the patriotic impulses of the American people and the spirit which has made them great and brought this Nation to its splendid proportions, then I would not be for the league of nations.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator think that is just as liable to happen as the passage of a bill to help men in industry to vocational training will destroy the States and the splendid rivalry of the States? The Senator is really not deeply concerned about that, is he; and really does not fear it very much, does he?

Mr. KING. I did not mean to assert that the bill which the Senator is now championing with his splendid ability would accomplish the evils of which I speak. I merely mentioned the tendency of the times and referred to the bill which the Senator is now defending as a possible symptom of the age and of the spirit of which I have been speaking. The bill in and of itself has meritorious features; the object of it is certainly worthy; and I would go as far as the Senator or anyone else in demanding that my State and every State should make the fullest provisions for educational and rehabilitation work. I think every State ought to make liberal appropriations to take care of those who are injured and see that they have a fair opportunity in the race of life, and I have no doubt that the States, filled as they are with humane, Christian, patriotic people, will enact all needed legislation to accomplish this praiseworthy object.

Mr. KENYON. They have not done so as yet. I will say this bill is a splendid symptom of the times. I like the symptom and accept his designation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Utah expressed the hope that his own State, as well as other States, will take a very deep interest in this subject and provide for the rehabilitation of the men who are injured in industrial pursuits, and so forth. I am in entire accord with that view, but it seems to me that I will go a step further than he will go. My belief is that a bill of this kind will encourage the States to do the very thing which he says he wants them to do.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand the object of the bill, it provides for the rehabilitation of soldiers wounded in this war.

Mr. KENYON. No; I will state to the Senator it does not, and that statement shows that the Senator has not read the bill. That is already provided for in the bill we passed that was approved a year ago in June. This takes the principle further, to give vocational training to men injured in occupations and otherwise, practically giving, as I said here when the Senator was out, and I want to be frank about it, an opportunity for vocational training to any man injured, so that it amounts to such a disability that he can not pursue his present occupation.

Mr. KING. The Senator will pardon me. It goes further than that. It provides not only for those who are injured, but those who may become sick and by reason of any ailment are disqualified from following their former profession or occupation, if they had one.

Mr. KENYON. If such sickness is such as to amount to disability, that is true.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It involves the principle more or less, and it is a step toward the federalization of our system of instruction in the various States. In the State of New Jersey we have builded, through the taxation of our citizens and assisted by the taxation of the railroads and other corporations, a great school system. It is second to none in any section of the country. We are justly proud of that system. I do not think that beyond the ambition of certain of the educators there is a desire to inflict upon the State of New Jersey Federal control or direction. The minute you impose upon the States of the Union direction from Washington you are going to break down the great system of public instruction in this country.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator read the bill?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have read the bill.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator assumes Federal direction. There is no Federal direction.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It leads toward that, because following it up is the Smith educational bill, involving the creation of a bureau or department of public instruction which will supersede, supervise, direct, and control the systems of instruction in the States.

Mr. KENYON. But the Smith educational bill has nothing to do with this bill. It has no connection with this bill further than the name of the author.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As it is written it is practically the same verbiage and along the same plan. It appropriates a certain sum of money to the States and apportions it, and it is only reasonable to assume that appropriating that money it will direct the policy of education in those States, and you can not get away from it.

My object in rising was to point out to the Senate what I believe is the unfair system of apportionment, a system that will compel the taxpayers of the larger States, and the larger States are the industrial States, to pay to the poorer States, the States in the South and the Far West, a larger sum of money than those States themselves pay through internal-revenue taxes. Upon the apportionment of $100,000,000 of the Smith educational bill, reduced to a million dollars in this bill, I base my argument against the unfair apportionment.

For instance, taking the State of Iowa, the Senator's own State, under this appropriation of $1,000,000 it will pay $4,590 in internal-revenue taxes toward the $1,000,000 appropriation, but it will receive $35,050 from the apportionment. The State of Alabama will pay $5,130 and will receive $23,290; while the State of New Jersey, spending $15,000,000 a year on its own school system, establishing an educational system long before the Federal Government undertook it, will pay $27,810 and receive $27,060 in return.

If you are going to adopt the principle that the richer States are to pay for education in the poorer States and redistribute the public funds in that way, I am opposed to that system. I believe that when you are trying to rehabilitate the industrial workers you should appropriate more money to the industrial States than to the western and the farming States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not believe I have heard an appropriation bill or a tax bill under discussion before the Senate for the last two or three years that I have not heard practically that same argument from the Senator from New Jersey—that it is an unfair distribution of public funds, that we are putting it into the South, and that the great industrial centers of New Jersey and New York are paying more than their share. Iowa is now included in his list. It has been heretofore confined to the Southern States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to have the Senator point out wherein I have protested before upon this question of apportionment of appropriations.

Mr. KENYON. I can find it in the RECORD, I am certain.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to have it pointed out.

Mr. KENYON. These same figures about what is paid in his State through internal-revenue taxes and all that have also been mentioned. Of course, you have more money in New Jersey than certain States in the South have. You have there a great industrial center, and you have to pay more taxes. Perhaps New Jersey does pay more taxes than Iowa, though New Jersey could not live if it were not for Iowa and some of the Western States and some of the Southern States. We have gotten to the point, I hope, in this country where the welfare of the Southern States is as important to us as the welfare of the Northern States. We are one country. I am growing rather tired, when anything comes up here of this nature, of always being confronted with the proposition that New York and New Jersey are paying all the taxes in the country, and consequently we must have some different method of distribution of funds. Let us get over the idea that we are anything but one country.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I agree with the Senator that when it comes to the question of any great public improvement, like the irrigation of the lands of the West or the deepening of the Mississippi River, or anything that affects the progress and prosperity of any section of the country, it is perfectly right that we should not consider selfishly the contributions made by the individual States to those projects. But this adopts a new policy. The States have always cared for their own public instruction, and now you are reaching over and taking money from the taxpayers of those States, through taxes, and reapplying it to other districts of the South and West. It may be a good policy, but it is a new policy never heretofore adopted. I think we should hesitate before we impose upon States in the North, in which those industrial centers are found, an increased burden of taxation to be expended through a public department. We should be absolutely certain that it is a wise policy and a wise plan. I believe that the taxpayers of those States, who pay the bills, should first be consulted as to whether this policy should be adopted, and, notwithstanding the reflection which the Senator casts upon me in protesting against the payment by my State of excessive taxes and a redistribution in this manner, I still protest that a policy of this character is unwise when it interferes with the instruction which has heretofore been carried on and maintained and controlled by my State.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, we can all agree with the Senator that we should be perfectly certain it is a wise policy before we go ahead with it. But it is perfectly apparent that he does not understand the bill when he says it is an attempt to control education in the State of New Jersey. It is not at all. New Jersey need not have anything to do with this bill unless she wants to. Of course, there would be a general appropriation that comes out of the Treasury, but the little part that New Jersey would have to pay of the $1,000,000 a year, the whole appropriation being that sum, would be infinitesimal. No State will be compelled to act under this law, no State is compelled to take its benefits. New Jersey is not hurt one particle.

Whether it is a wise policy is a fair subject for argument. Whether it is a wise policy for the Federal Government to have any interest in the poor devil, whether he is in New Jersey or Alabama or Iowa, who has lost a leg or an arm or both legs or both arms, and has a family dependent on him, and does not know where he is going to turn—whether that is anything we should have anything to do with or not is for each one of us to settle for himself.

I say that the Federal Government is just as much interested in these questions of maintaining a vigorous citizenship in the States as are the States themselves. As the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has said, we grant citizenship. It applies to all the States, and it is a fiction that is raised here so often, as I have suggested, that some particular States in the Union are paying more than their share of taxes, and especially do we always hear it about the Southern States. I thank God I have reached the condition of mind where I care as much for the welfare of the Southern States as I do for the Northern States, and the Northern States are just as much interested in the vital problems of the Southern States as they are themselves. You can not hurt one part of the country without hurting the whole country. The people who accumulate great riches in the great States and then wrap the cloak of arrogance about them and say, "'You can not take this; you are taking it from our State and giving it to another State," can not longer assume that attitude. No; you have the wealth, and you have to pay your fair proportion of the taxes; you have got to help in the redemption work of the whole Nation. If you do not want to do it, we will make you do it by law. You might as well understand it first as last. The boys who went out from various States went not to fight for these States but for the Nation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Is it not a fact that in those great industrial centers where they show greater returns in the way of taxes their wealth arises very largely from building up business from other States and other sections? That is true of a great many industrial centers. They are not merely supported by their own States, but they are supported largely by what they get from other States.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, if it were not for Florida they could not have grapefruit up in New York for breakfast, and if it were not for Iowa they would starve.

I have tried, in a mild way, to explain this bill. I have said to the Senate that it covers men hurt in occupations, farming, and everything else. It covers the man who may be run over by an automobile. They may never avail themselves of this vocational training. They do not have to do it. It is entirely optional with them, and a large number of them probably will not do so.

The appropriations covered are not large. After the year 1922 it will be $1,000,000 a year for the Federal Government. The States can only secure anything under this act by a certificate of the Board of Vocational Training that they have approved the plans which the State has for its vocational training for men hurt in industry. These plans are submitted to the Federal board. If satisfactory to the Federal board, it then certifies to the Treasury, and the payments are made dollar for dollar.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator leaves the subject which he is discussing, I should like to have him explain why the amendment on page 1 of the bill, beginning in line 5, was adopted by the committee. The amendment reads:

> And who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation.

It seems to me, with those words in the law, a person who has been injured or in any way disabled would have to acknowledge to the whole world that he is next thing to a pauper, and I doubt the wisdom of putting in those words.

Mr. KENYON. I do, too.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I do not think it will make any difference, as far as the number of disabled persons is concerned who will take advantage of the act, with the single exception that I am fearful there are some persons who may be disabled and who before they would make this statement of proof that they are without sufficient funds to provide for their own rehabilitation would go without it. Really I would very much prefer to see that amendment disagreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator it was suggested in committee by some member that a person who was very wealthy might ask for this training. I do not think it would occur once in a thousand years, but on that account the amendment was put in there. I agree with the Senator from Utah that it ought to go out. I have no right to bind anybody on it, however.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to, because many sensitive persons receiving an injury or suffering a disability when asked, before they can receive the benefits of this law, "Have you not any friends, or can you not get the money, or are you not able to pay for this yourself," I am fearful would never take advantage of it who ought to take advantage of it.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator. There is a good deal of danger in that provision.

There is an amendment on page 5 which has been inserted by the committee:

And to cooperate, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, with such public and private agencies as it may deem advisable.

It was thought that many institutions, such as the Knights of Columbus, Elks, Young Men's Christian Association, and other institutions, would raise funds for scholarships, and the board desires permission to cooperate with them.

It is an interesting fact to know that there are now over 4,000 maimed soldiers of the war waiting for their vocational training who can not get it because of a dispute, or rather a difference, in construction of the law on the part of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal Board for Vocational Training, a man being entitled to vocational training only where he is entitled to compensation under the terms of the war-risk insurance act. A man may have lost an arm and still be able to go back to his old job and not be entitled to compensation, so he could not have vocational training. Then the War Risk Insurance Bureau has to investigate all the questions involved, his family, and his own life, to get at the question of whether he is entitled to compensation. He can not have the training vocationally until he is entitled to compensation.

The Elks, to their everlasting credit and possibly to the shame of the Government, have raised a fund of over $200,000 that is being used to be loaned to these boys who are trying to secure vocational training. They give their notes; I have some of them here. They pay them as they get their allotments and their compensation. Those 4,000 boys to-day are waiting for this vocational training.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think if the able and earnest Senator from Utah had reflected a little more upon the matter he would have recognized that this bill is not a departure from the Federal policy of the Government. Ever since our Nation was formed it has deemed it wise to aid States in the matter of education. Early in our history it gave extensive grants of land to States, and upon the demand of every State in the Union it gave great grants of land for the purpose of aiding the cause of education. My recollection is that the State of Utah has been particularly favored in that respect.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is referring to the remarks of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; of the junior Senator from Utah. Utah was particularly favored in that respect, its grant transcending, my recollection is, the grant made to any of the neighboring States.

I am quite unable to distinguish in principle between a grant of land to a State in aid of education, land which might be sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, and taking money out of the Treasury of the United States and donating it to the State in aid of education. Indeed, if I am not quite in error, that course has been pursued in a number of cases and grants of money have been made to many States in aid of education in order to equalize the benefits that accrued to other States that secured great grants of land.

I see the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is in the Chamber now, and I will say for his benefit that I was advancing the idea that the principle of this bill is not new in the field of national education; that from its commencement the National Government has aided the States in education by making grants of land; and that very extensive grants of land were made to aid education in Utah—exceedingly large grants, as my recollection is—and I said that I could not distinguish in principle between a grant of land for education—land that might be sold and the proceeds covered into the General Treasury—and taking money out of the Treasury in aid of the cause of education.

Moreover, my recollection is also that, in order to equalize the beneficence of the Federal Government among all of the States, grants of money were made out of the General Treasury to many of the States, so that I believe there is no real departure from the settled policy of the Government in the principle of this bill, and I think the Senator will so feel upon reflection.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am not going to take any more of the time of the Senate. I will be very glad to answer any questions which I can with regard to this bill, if Senators are interested in any of its provisions. I have a very firm belief not only in the justice but in the wisdom of this kind of legislation, not merely from the humane standpoint, the human salvage that is involved in it, but from the standpoint of those who look at the mere dollars-and-cents proposition, the economic side of it.

The average earning of the people engaged in labor in this country is about $548 a year—I do not mean per family, but per person. While, as I have indicated, there are over 15,000 with these serious injuries, there certainly will be 100,000 people, at a conservative estimate, injured in this country every year, and there are over 200,000 of injured now in the country. The reports from the State of Pennsylvania show for one year something like 800,000 are kept away from work for a day or more by injuries. Some of those injuries were very slight. On the railroads throughout this country for the last five years there have been 931,000 men injured. I do not mean seriously injured, but injured so that they were kept from their work possibly over a month. So there is a great army of injured people in this country.

If we show an interest, and stimulate the States to take an interest, in rehabilitating these men, they are also going to take an interest in the question of more safety around those men to prevent those injuries. If you take it merely from the economic standpoint, 100,000 men a year, with $548 as the average earnings—and those were the figures before the war; the amount is greater now—if you could take that many men away from the scrap heap and put them back into industry with an earning capacity, you would have an economic saving of over $50,000,000 a year. So those can deal in these figures who want to sit down calmly and figure out what saving a bill of this kind would involve.

But to my mind there is the greater, broader question. The man on his back in the hospital with a family has his compensation from the State that is carrying him on for a few weeks. The clouds are about him all the time as to what his family is going to do and what he is going to do for them in the future. If you have something of this kind where you can meet him, as the boys from the Army are now being met in the hospitals, and say to the man who is injured and has no future, "We have something for you; the Federal Government and the State government are cooperating to help you; they are not throwing you aside and forgetting you; you are still a part of society," I tell you the clouds will roll away, for dependency makes despondency, and if you can remove that fear from a man's mind, you will have made a better citizen out of him, a better father, and a better husband. So, outside of all economic questions, it is a great humanitarian measure.

I know men are not expected to advocate humanitarian measures very often in this Chamber, and the men who do are considered altruistic and idealistic, and I perhaps would hesitate about it if the measure could not be backed up with a sound saving in economic loss of from fifty million to a hundred million dollars a year.

The men who worked in the factories making the things for the boys to use at the front and were injured are entitled to the same consideration as the men at the front. They were essential to the winning of the war. This bill is to do for the man in overalls what we have done for the boys in the khaki uniforms.

Mr. POMERENE rose.

Mr. KENYON. I am through, I will say to the Senator, although I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. POMERENE. I had expected that the Senator from Iowa would reply to and make a suggestion to the Senator from New Jersey. While it may be true that the richer industrial States will furnish a larger proportion of this money than will the agricultural States, yet, at the same time, it must be borne in mind that the accidents which occur in the mechanical and mining industries are very much in excess of those which occur in the agricultural industries. Therefore, while the industrial States will be paying a larger sum perhaps than some of the agricultural States, at the same time they will be caring for a greater portion of these unfortunates who are to be found in those industrial States.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, you can not have any rule of distribution that will be exactly fair; and I can sympathize to some extent with the viewpoint a man from New Jersey may take on the proposition; but I did not intend by anything I said to reflect in any way upon the opinion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I merely wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that I understand his observations were made entirely on the bill and its merits, but I felt that there was some reflection in his feeling that my position was one of antagonism to a proper development in the other States of the Union. I was president of the State Board of Education of New Jersey for six years. Three years I spent in an effort to reorganize it, which was finally accomplished. We established vocational education long before the Federal Government assisted the States in any way; and I feel that any interference or anything that would in any way tend to retard the splendid progress and advancement which we have made in New Jersey would be criticized by the constituency I represent.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator understands, does he not, that New Jersey need not participate in the benefits of this law at all but can go right on in its own way?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that; but I also understand that a large portion of the appropriation made under this bill will be taken from the taxpayers of the State which I, in part, represent, and which the Senator from Iowa does not represent.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator enlighten us as to how much of this million dollars will be paid by New Jersey?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand, the State of New Jersey would pay $28,000, and would receive about $27,000 in return. The Senator from Iowa has made the magnificent offer that New Jersey need not avail itself of this appropriation. I hardly believe, however, that if New Jersey paid that amount, it would not want it back; but it does not want any Federal direction or control of its public-instruction system.

Mr. KENYON. Nor does it have under this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I withhold the motion.

Mr. KENYON. The resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was laid aside. I do not want the bill which has been under consideration to supplant that resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. It was laid aside temporarily, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to give notice that, as soon as that resolution has been disposed of, I shall move again to take up the bill which has been under consideration and endeavor to keep it before the Senate until it has been disposed of.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is very much interested in this bill. He was called to Atlanta on account of the illness of Mrs. Smith. I should like the Senator from Iowa to get into communication with him and ascertain whether it will be satisfactory to him for the measure to be taken up in his absence. He has been for some years chairman of the committee which reported the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that to-morrow the unfinished business will be the same as the unfinished business to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. I suggest that the Senator from Iowa communicate with the secretary of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KENYON. I will do that, but I am sure that the Senator from Georgia would not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Iowa could in that way find out what the purposes of the Senator from Georgia are. He might want to be here.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not feel that the Senator from Georgia would object to the passage of the bill? It is his measure; it was introduced by him.

Mr. SWANSON. No; but the Senator from Iowa might need his assistance to secure its passage.

Mr. KENYON. I think that that might be so, and I should like to have his presence.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, my recollection is that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] moved to proceed to the consideration of the vocational bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that it was taken up and considered by unanimous consent. I asked that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The unfinished business was temporarily laid aside in justice to the Senator from California.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any question about it, I move that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. It was clearly understood that the bill of the Senator from Iowa was to be taken up by unanimous consent and that the unfinished business was to be temporarily laid aside, the resolution of the Senator from California being the unfinished business.

Mr. KENYON. That was the understanding.

Mr. SMOOT. So that there may be no question about it, I move that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution No. 12, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of California May 20, 1919, requesting the full text of the treaty of peace with Germany.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the last session of Congress I offered a resolution in regard to Mexico. The Committee on Foreign Relations reported the resolution, and it was adopted, but under that resolution the information which was sought has not been fully obtained. I understand that the State Department is making provision to furnish certain information. At the beginning of this session I submitted another resolution, substantially in the same language as the one which was passed at the last session. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I invited the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. LODGE] to it, and told him that at the earliest opportunity I should ask that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the resolution, and that I would ask for its immediate passage. He assented to that, because the resolution called for substantially the same information that was called for in the former resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. It simply asks for information?

Mr. KING. Yes; for information. I move that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 8. If that shall be done, then I will ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). The Secretary will read the resolution as requested.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 8) relative to claims of citizens of the United States against the Republic of Mexico, as follows:

Whereas claims aggregating millions of dollars in compensation for damages to property and for personal outrages and destruction of life suffered by American citizens in the Republic of Mexico have been filed with the Department of State for presentation to the Government of Mexico; and

Whereas some years have already intervened between the commission of such damages and outrages, and no progress is apparently being made toward the liquidation, settlement, and payment of such claims: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate whether or not said claims have been presented to the Government of Mexico, and what steps and measures are being taken to prosecute such claims and to liquidate and settle the same, and if said claims have not been presented, then to report to the Senate what steps and measures are contemplated to be taken with respect thereto and when the department will proceed with the same; also to report to the Senate the number of citizens of the United States who have been killed in Mexico since Porfirio Diaz retired from the Presidency of Mexico, together with the number of nationals of other countries who have been killed in Mexico, as far as the Secretary of State is advised; also to report to the Senate the amount of claims filed with the Secretary for damages suffered by citizens of the United States in Mexico and any information which the Secretary has as to the confiscation of property of citizens of the United States and as to the damage suffered by the citizens of the United States in Mexico.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I have had no opportunity to consult all of the members of the Foreign Relations Committee, although I am sure, if I had done so, all would have assented to the mode of procedure which I have just suggested, I shall not ask at this time for the discharge of the committee or for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah withdraws his motion.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator is not going to call up the resolution at this time; but I wish to direct attention to its phraseology. If I understood it correctly, it is a joint resolution directing that the information be given to the Senate alone. I think the Senator only intended it as a simple Senate resolution.

Mr. KING. As a Senate resolution. The verbiage will be corrected.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 3, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 2, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, to be, to think, to act on our own initiative is life—a precious boon yet a stupendous responsibility.

Give us the courage, the grace, that we may meet the high ideals revealed in the prophets and Thy son Jesus Christ, that we may render unto our fellow men and unto Thee the duties laid upon us, that a clear conscience may be ours day by day as we march on in the King's highway and a sense of the life eternal. In the spirit of Him who taught us the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 31, 1919, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. Members present who have not yet taken the oath of office will present themselves and be sworn in.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. QUIN, of Mississippi, has not been sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will present themselves and be sworn in.

Mr. QUIN and Mr. GALLIVAN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the House kindly gave me permission to address the House immediately after the reading of the Journal this morning. I find that the Agricultural appropriation bill is not yet through and that there are other appropriation bills pending, so I have decided to wait until the Army appropriation bill shall come before the House and I will take the time then. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday afternoon late I submitted a few remarks on the luxury-tax bill, so called. I have been sick ever since. I was sick before. I do not know whether that made me more sick or not. Anyway, I have not had a chance to correct that speech, and I desire now to have five days in which to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks five days in which to revise the remarks he made Saturday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAMMOTH CAVE NATIONAL PARK, KY.

Mr. THOMAS. I introduced a bill last week to create a national park at Mammoth Cave, Ky. The clerk, it seems, referred that bill to the Committee on Appropriations. At the last session of Congress the same bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee decided that it ought to go to the Committee on the Public Lands. I now ask that the reference be changed to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that a change of reference be made of the bill indicated from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on the Public Lands. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is a matter that should have a little consideration. So far as the membership of the House knows, the Committee on the Public Lands has not been consulted in the matter, nor the Speaker, nor the parliamentary clerk who first referred the bill to the other committee; and, personally, while I have no objection to the transfer, yet I think the matter had better come up to-morrow, so that for the time being I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming temporarily objects.

Mr. THOMAS. I would just say that I referred it to the Committee on the Public Lands because it was sent there at the last session of Congress. That was the only reason.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I think there will be no objection, and I hope he will defer his request until to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. I will wait then until to-morrow.

LOAN OF TENTS TO CITY OF DAWSON, GA.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, at the request of my colleague, Representative CRISP, who is unavoidably absent to-day, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 79.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution named, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 79) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Dawson, Ga., tents and cots for use of Confederate veterans in their State convention, June 17 and 18, 1919.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the city of Dawson, Ga., for the use of Confederate veterans in their State convention, to be held at Dawson on June 17 and 18, 1919, 50 tents and 200 cots: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered to said city designated, at such time prior to the holding of said encampment as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the mayor of said city: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering said tents and cots, shall take from the mayor of said city a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE MINORITY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 57.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, from date of their appointment, not earlier than May 1, 1919, until otherwise provided by law, for the services of a clerk, an assistant clerk, and a messenger, compensation at the rate of $2,500, $1,500, and $1,000 per annum, respectively, the said clerks and messenger to be appointed by and to be under the direction and control of the minority floor leader.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 2, strike out the word "their," and in line 4 strike out the words "a clerk, an," and in line 5 strike out the words "and a messenger, compensation at the rate of $2,500, $1,500, and $1,000 per annum, respectively, the said clerks and messenger to be," and at the end of the resolution strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words: "additional compensation of $300 per annum, payable monthly," so that as amended the resolution will read:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, from the date of appointment, not earlier than May 1, 1919, until otherwise provided by law, for the services of assistant clerk, appointed by and to be under the direction and control of the minority floor leader, additional compensation of $300 per annum, payable monthly."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is made to conform to the resolution which was presented some time ago for the majority leader, and it is to equalize matters between the two forces. It is the same matter I asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] about when the former resolution was introduced.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXPERT AND OTHER ASSISTANTS FOR COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I also ask for the present consideration of another privileged resolution, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois sends up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 63.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is authorized to sit during the sessions and recesses of the present Congress; to employ such expert, clerical, and stenographic services, and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise, as to it may seem fit, in connection with the consideration and preparation of bills for the revision of the present tariff law and of other revenue legislation; to purchase such books and to have such printing and binding done as it shall require, in addition to requiring the attendance of the committee stenographers; to employ additional stenographers; and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the committee. All the expenses of the committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 2, after the word "authorized," strike out the words "to sit during the sessions and recesses of the present Congress."

Page 1, line 4, after the word "services," strike out the words "and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "require," strike out the comma and insert a semicolon and the word "and."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "stenographers," strike out the semicolon and insert a comma.

Page 1, line 10, after the word "employ," insert the word "such."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "stenographers," strike out the semicolon and insert a comma.

Page 1, line 12, after the word "all," insert the word "of," and after the word "the," insert the word "said."

So that the resolution as amended will read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is authorized to employ such expert, clerical, and stenographic services as to it may seem fit, in connection with the consideration and preparation of bills for the revision of the present tariff law and of other revenue legislation; to purchase such books and to have such printing and binding done as it shall require; and in addition to requiring the attendance of the committee stenographers, to employ such additional stenographers, and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the committee. All of the said expenses of the committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. KITCHIN. I should like to ask the gentleman if this is the usual resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. The usual resolution that has passed in sessions of Congress when tariff and other revenue legislation has been considered?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; it conforms almost, if not quite, identically to the Underwood resolution, but that was passed by unanimous consent from the floor, and in some way did not come to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. KITCHIN. I wanted to know if it was the usual resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. There were items in the resolution that we struck out, believing them not to be within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts, and that the resolution would, therefore, be subject to a point of order. Otherwise the resolution is quite similar.

Mr. KITCHIN. The usual resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think it ought to pass; that is, provided that side of the House are really sincere in their statement that they are going to consider the tariff at this session; and I believe that is true, that they are really sincere in the statement that they are going to present a tariff bill for the consideration of the House at this session.

Mr. IRELAND. I am absolutely surprised that the sincerity of the Republican Party could ever be questioned in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, the gentleman from Illinois does not know the Republicans on that side as well as I do. He has not been here as long as I have. [Laughter.]

Mr. IRELAND. I confess the gentleman has the advantage of me in that respect.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think this resolution ought to pass, if it is the usual resolution.

Mr. WINGO. What limit is there on this expenditure for special experts and assistants?

Mr. IRELAND. We asked the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to come before the Committee on Accounts, which he did, and there was no statement made as to that, and there has not been in the past. He informed the committee that he expected to save a great deal by obtaining information through Government agents in the Treasury Department, the New York Customhouse, and so forth.

Mr. WINGO. There is no limitation? That is left to the discretion of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. IRELAND. No; we talked that over, and it was left to the discretion of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. It may not be wise to limit them. I suspect that they will need considerable expert information and assistance. [Laughter.]

Mr. IRELAND. I believe it will be better to leave the resolution as it is in that respect.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. IRELAND. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. As I understand the resolution as amended, does it prevent the Committee on Ways and Means from sitting and making these investigations during the recess of Congress?

Mr. IRELAND. The Committee on Accounts has nothing whatsoever to do with that. That is outside of their jurisdiction.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that at the proper time I will ask unanimous consent that the committee be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House for the purpose of holding hearings.

Mr. GARRETT. I notice that this resolution authorizes the purchase of such books as the committee may deem necessary. Did the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee disclose to the Committee on Accounts the character of the books that he had in mind to purchase?

Mr. IRELAND. No; not the nature and character of the books; and he was not insistent on that being left in the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not insistent on its going out.

Mr. IRELAND. He might want to purchase an almanac or something.

Mr. GARRETT. Or Prof. Taussig's book.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, similar language has been in resolutions passed in previous sessions. I know of no books which the committee may need, except such as relate to the keeping of the records of the committee; but I do not see any harm in leaving that language in the resolution. If the gentleman wishes to strike it out, well and good.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not ask that it be stricken out.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. I think the House ought to understand that this resolution is bad practice, and for one I certainly would have objected to the passage of it if it had not the precedent set by the Democrats some time ago. Therefore I think our side of the House are somewhat estopped from objecting, because we permitted this resolution to pass in a former Congress when the Democrats were going to make up a tariff bill. The resolution does not place any limitation on this expenditure, but everybody knows that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is not going to abuse the power given in this resolution. That is one reason why I support it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know whether I feel like leaving this unlimited discretion with this Committee on Accounts or not, because in the closing hours of the last Congress, about 3 o'clock a. m., the acting chairman of this committee at that time brought in a resolution to pay an extra thousand dollars to a man who has been drawing $3,600 a year, or $300 a month, as the clerk of a certain committee that had not done any work whatever. When I requested time to oppose that resolution, the gag rule was applied by the acting chairman of this particular committee, and I could not open my mouth against it.

Mr. KNUTSON. All this happened in the last Congress; it could not happen in this one.

Mr. BLANTON. The resolution was passed by a close vote, Republicans furnishing the majority vote after a roll call had been ordered. If the Republicans had been inclined to save that thousand dollars they could have saved it by voting against it. Therefore I do not know that we ought to leave this in the discretion of this committee unless we can be assured by the chairman of this committee that such items as $1,000 of the people's money will not again be voted to a man as extra pay who had been drawing $3,600 a year and whose committee had done no work. I do not care how much work he did for another committee, he could not earn more than $3,600 when the salary of the clerk of a committee is only $2,500 and not $3,600.

Mr. CANDLER. What committee was that?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will get the RECORD he will find that I requested time from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], the then acting chairman of the committee, but the gag rule was applied to me.

Mr. CANDLER. I asked the gentleman what committee this was.

Mr. BLANTON. The RECORD will disclose the committee; it had not sat at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The regular order.

Mr. CANDLER. What committee was it?

Mr. BLANTON. I have forgotten what committee it was.

Mr. CANDLER. It was not the Committee on Ways and Means, was it?

Mr. BLANTON. It was the Committee on Accounts, with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] as chairman of the committee, and I could not get time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, and the regular order is called for.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CHARWOMEN FOR CAPITOL BUILDING.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask the further indulgence of the House for one more resolution, which I present.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 90.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $103 for the services of 15 charwomen necessarily employed under the direction of the superintendent of the Capitol Building in the House wing of the Capitol.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is for work done during the recess in cleaning up the Capitol.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1200. An act making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and for other purposes.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What has become of the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair should have stated that there is no business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. KITCHIN. Should there not be a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not necessary, as there is no business on the calendar.

The motion of Mr. HAUGEN was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe when the House adjourned there was a motion pending to strike out $100,000 in the item.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONGWORTH: Page 51, line 11, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000."

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 51, lines 6 to 11, inclusive, strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, first, on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] to perfect the paragraph by striking out the figures "$100,000" and inserting "$50,000" in lieu thereof.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair is in error, because the committee at the time it rose was dividing upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. If the committee erroneously voted on the wrong motion, you can not switch now and take up the motion having preference. The committee proceeded to divide on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, and the rule is that when the House returns to the committee it takes up the vote upon which it was engaged when it rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that if a mistake was made as to precedence of the motion to amend that it is now in order to correct the mistake. The vote will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the RECORD will show that the motion was offered to reduce the item by $50,000 and that was voted upon. No point of order was raised.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no vote taken on it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if I recall correctly, the vote was had erroneously upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], which was to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Which vote should have been taken after the vote on the motion to perfect the paragraph. The result, however, was never announced, because the committee found itself without a quorum. It seems to me that vacates this whole proceeding, and that the Chair is correct, and the vote should now be taken upon the motion to perfect the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The committee found itself in the original position it was in before any vote was taken.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the RECORD disclose that the vote was taken upon the amendment to reduce the amount by $50,000?

The CHAIRMAN. No; there was no vote taken.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, may the paragraph be reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] to strike out, on line 11, page 51, the figures "$100,000" and insert "$50,000" in lieu thereof.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the paragraph.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

For investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes, of raw materials grown or produced in the United States, in cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary, including repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to a building on the Arlington Experimental Farm, $100,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What became of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union found itself without a quorum. That leaves the whole question open as if it never had been acted upon. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out "$100,000" and to insert "$50,000."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LONGWORTH) there were—ayes 78, noes 78.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. LEVER to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 62, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups by the utilization of new agricultural sources, $12,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 51, strike out lines 12, 13, 14, and 15.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, in the committee report we find very little reference to this item. It represents evidently a transfer of funds in order to get it into a regular appropriation bill from some previous special item. I have read the testimony before the committee taken last year. Evidently a Dr. Alsberg seems to be interested in the matter. In addition to changing the amount I find that the present chairman of the committee referred to this item as part of it being new.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not take another off his feet with a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAKER. A point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. There is nothing before the House. The Clerk has not reported any amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. TREADWAY. It seems to me that some consideration should be given to the retention of an item for the "utilization of new agricultural sources." That is a peculiar phrase to me. Agriculture has been going on for hundreds of years, but evidently some one in the Department of Agriculture has discovered something which he considers a new agricultural source. I would like an explanation of that. Further than that, up in the part of the country where I reside they have been manufacturing a very good kind of sirup, known as maple sirup, for a long time, without any sort of assistance from the Agricultural Department about new agricultural products. It seems to me that this must be an effort to continue a very learned gentleman, as I have do doubt Dr. Alsberg is, in the position, because he says progress has been made satisfactory to him. He or some appointee of his has been drawing the salary. Whether or not the progress in the development of this new agricultural product is satisfactory to the Congress of the United States is not stated. I think the matter ought to be looked into.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, a part of this is a transfer of $5,000 from the food-production act. The work is not new; it has been carried on for a number of years. We add $5,000 to it in the expectation, and according to the representation made by Dr. Alsberg, that this work may be finished. We expect that an appropriation for this purpose will not be necessary hereafter. Notwithstanding the splendid maple sirup made in the gentleman's State, there are still questions open in respect to the skill in boiling and various items that enter into the production and manufacture of sirup.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TREADWAY) there were—ayes 41, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, on page 51, line 15, I move to strike out the figures "$12,000" and substitute in place thereof "$5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York——

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this time, at least, the amendment has not been reported by the Clerk?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 15, strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MAGEE. If I can get additional time I will yield.

Mr. CANNON. I did not understand the gentleman had the floor. Oh, no.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, the provision provides—

For the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups by the utilization of new agricultural sources, $12,000.

I am in favor of any provision in this act that will be of real benefit to the American farmer. I was born and brought up on a farm myself, and I do not believe that the farmers are in favor of expending public funds, particularly at this time, for the purposes mentioned in this paragraph.

I am for drastic retrenchment in public expenditures wherever possible without detriment to the public interest. I appreciate that this is a small item, but an aggregation of small items soon makes a large amount, and there are many items now remaining in the bill through the solid Democratic vote in the House, aided by a few of my Republican colleagues, which, in my judgment, contain little or no merit and should have been struck out. For instance, the appropriation for investigation and experiment in the utilization of vegetable dyes is, in my judgment, practically a waste of public funds.

I think it is high time, in the matter of public expenditures, that we should get down to earth and stay there. We have billions of dollars of public debts to pay. It is not probable that anyone will propose another popular loan, but the debts must be paid. As stated in an editorial in the New York Sun on May 29—

It is a hard, cold fact that there are some eight to ten billions of dollars of unpaid bills and of bills still running on—bills which are a heritage from the war now half a year old—to be cleaned up by this new Congress. * * *

It is hopeless to think that these billions and billions of dollars of bills can be cleared off the slate without heavy taxes. There is nothing else left now. But even heavy taxes can not clean them up unless present and future expenditures are cut to the bone. This Government can not go on spending the way it has been and still is spending and meet the current charges with any tax program yet suggested, much less clean up the stupendous back bills.

The Committee on Appropriations must take an ax to every item in every department that can possibly be lopped off. They must chop out entirely all the foolish, visionary, and extravagant programs which have been dreamed and set in motion by legislative and executive misfits, who do not know a business proposition from the reflection of a rainbow. All that sort of stuff must be dumped into the wastebasket. Even the practical programs have got to come down to a rock-bottom basis or no taxation measure that can be devised will keep the Treasury supplied with funds to pay the way of the Government and save its name from financial reproach.

When we consider that our national debt has been increased from practically a billion dollars before we entered the World War to more than $25,000,000,000 now, a sum almost beyond human conception, it is apparent how absolutely necessary it is that we should economize in the expenditure of public funds. The interest upon our public debt of to-day approximately amounts to what our public debt was some two years ago.

In connection with the proposed appropriation we should also keep in mind that the people of this country are taxed in almost every conceivable manner for the purpose of providing funds to meet the authorized expenditures of the Government. To illustrate, as to some small yet important things, we tax club dues when in excess of $10 per year, even dues payable to an organization like a chamber of commerce; we tax soft drinks like ice cream sodas; we tax eyeglasses, ordinary spectacles, apparently upon the theory that they are a luxury; and we tax sporting goods, like tennis rackets and baseballs, although we know that every boy in America who has a healthful body indulges in some out-of-door sport, and particularly in baseball, the great national game.

I favor the prompt repeal of the obnoxious, nagging consumption taxes. I am satisfied that we can save more than the amounts of these taxes by the exercise of thrift and economy alone. How many hundreds of millions of dollars can be saved by promptly reducing the Army to a peace-time basis of something less than 200,000 men? [Applause.] How many more hundreds of millions of dollars can be saved by reducing the Navy to a peace-time basis and eliminating the foolish program of attempting to create a Navy equal to that of Great Britain? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAGEE. How many millions upon millions of dollars can be saved by striking from appropriation bills items, like the one under consideration, of little or no merit and items not demanding immediate consideration? How many hundreds of millions of dollars can be saved by promptly returning the railroads to their owners under proper governmental supervision? [Applause.] I do not wish to be understood as speaking in a spirit of criticism. I merely speak as one who would like to do something in the public interest and as one who is willing to cooperate with anybody else, regardless of party affiliations, who feels likewise.

In view of the various burdensome taxes now being imposed and paid by the people of this country, I can not understand why an appropriation should be made in this bill for the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of an additional Democratic "soothing" sirup. I call it Democratic not in any captious spirit, but because this paragraph in the pending bill appears to have been taken bodily from the Democratic bill from the Department of Agriculture introduced in the House on January 24, 1919, and will be found on page 51 thereof.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BLACK. In making that statement, does not the gentleman recognize the fact that this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture at the last session of Congress and was also reported unanimously at this session by the Republican chairman of the committee?

Mr. MAGEE. I am giving my views upon this subject.

Mr. HAUGEN. And, may I add, passed almost unanimously by the House of Representatives at the last session of Congress?

Mr. MAGEE. There does not appear to me to have been any proper revision of the old bill and the striking therefrom of items of little or no merit. Instead of figuring on "new plans of financing" I am in favor of figuring on new plans of economy. I think that this bill should be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to revise the same downward along the lines of efficiency and economy and not upward along the lines of extravagance and wasteful expenditure of public funds. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to show how economical the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] really is, the other day when the proposition was offered to save this Government $100,000 on a proposed appropriation of $358,980 for garden seeds there were only two Members who voted for my amendment to save that $100,000, as against 95 who voted to keep it in. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] had voted to save that $100,000 there would have been one more vote, at least 3 in favor and only 94 against. The gentleman now wants to save $7,000 on finding a better method to manufacture molasses. He had an opportunity to save $100,000 when we had the garden-seed appropriation up in this bill. In a previous paragraph we had already passed the item of $139,780 for the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds, and in addition to this amount the now economical gentleman permitted only two votes to go against the additional appropriation of $358,980, when it was larger by over $100,000 than existing law and larger by over $100,000 than the bill brought in here by the last committee in the Sixty-fifth Congress. I desire to call attention also to the fact that on the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] there appears in the RECORD on page 370 the following:

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

And following that request, after 30 minutes' debate had been exhausted and the Walsh amendment had been voted upon and completed, another amendment was offered to save $100,000 in the seed appropriation, concerning which there appears in the RECORD on page 373 the following:

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto is exhausted. But I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be granted five minutes.
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. What is it?
Mr. BLANTON. I watched the language closely when the gentleman in charge of this bill asked that the debate close, and if the Chair will refer to the language he will find that it referred only to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and all amendments thereto, not to this paragraph. Therefore the debate on any other amendment to this paragraph is clearly in order.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from New York is not in order. The debate has closed under the agreement.

I merely call the attention to this erroneous decision, because I do not want this distinguished Chairman of the Committee of the Whole Republican House on the state of the Union to make an erroneous ruling against my point of order and get away with it altogether. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have been at some loss to know exactly how to vote on some amendments offered to this bill striking out some items and cutting down others. I think we all agree with the sentiments uttered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] and that it is very desirable to practice the most rigid economy consistent with providing proper funds for the efficient management of these great departments of the Government. I have no expert knowledge of the various items in this bill, neither has the average Member of the House, I take it. The Committee on Agriculture has had hearings on this bill and the various items and provisions of this bill and they bring into the House what they consider a proper bill. Now, under our present method of making appropriations we are compelled to rely, in my judgment, very largely on the recommendations of these appropriating committees when they have studied these questions and make a report to the House.

I think there is great need that this Congress should at as early a date as possible enact legislation creating the budget system, so that these great supply bills can be created and made up and passed upon in an intelligent and comprehensive manner, so that Members may have something to rely on. I believe by this method we can save many millions of dollars annually. But until that is done, unless a Member of the House has certain expert knowledge that would justify him in believing that a recommendation of a committee is wrong or that the amount carried in the bill is excessive, I seriously doubt whether simply in the interest of general economy and retrenchment in these matters we are justified in voting haphazard here and there to cut down the various appropriations or strike them out entirely. We will get nowhere by that method.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. I was just wondering whether under that suggested budget system what more expert advice we would have than we have now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not say as to that other than that many of the great governments of the world and a great many States of the Union have adopted budget systems of some kind in preparing appropriations, and that it is claimed they work well in the interest of economy.

The Department of Agriculture is one of the great departments of the Government. It has had a remarkable history. The first Secretary was the Hon. Jeremiah Rusk, of Wisconsin, who was appointed in the administration of President Harrison. The first appropriation that was made by the Congress for the department was a little over $1,000,000, a very modest sum, and for more than 10 years after the creation of the department, with the Secretary of Agriculture a member of the Cabinet, the appropriations in no one year reached the sum of $5,000,000. But there was a gradual growth. I will insert herewith a list giving the appropriations for the various years, beginning with the year 1890, the first year in which appropriations were made for this department.

It will be noticed that these appropriations have in no single year been less than in the preceding year. There has been a gradual but steady growth in these appropriations from year to year without regard to the political complexion of Congress:

Appropriations for the Department of Agriculture from 1890.

1890	$1,669,770.00
1891	1,796,502.85
1892	3,028,153.50
1893	3,233,060.72
1894	3,323,500.00
1895	3,226,915.00
1896	3,303,750.00
1897	3,255,532.00
1898	3,182,902.06
1899	3,509,202.00
1900	3,726,022.00
1901	4,023,500.00
1902	4,582,420.00
1903	5,208,960.00
1904	5,978,160.00
1905	5,902,040.00
1906	6,882,690.00
1907	9,930,440.00
1908	9,447,290.00
1909	11,672,106.00
1910	12,995,036.00
1911	13,487,636.00
1912	16,900,016.00
1913	16,648,168.00
1914	17,986,945.00
1915	19,865,832.00
1916	22,971,782.00
1917	24,911,791.39
1918	25,929,113.00
1919	27,875,353.00

Amount carried in this bill $31,691,562, being only a normal and average increase as compared with former years.

The amount of appropriations for 18 years was under $10,000,000 each year, but beginning in 1908 the appropriations have risen gradually under each successive Congress from $9,000,000, until last year the appropriation was approximately $28,000,000. There has been a gradual increase each year. This department has extended its activities, and that has necessarily required more money. In my judgment, this money from the beginning has been wisely spent in the main.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE]——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know if the gentleman has examined a brochure that has been sent out by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, which, on page 6, presents a table showing how not only the appropriations of the Department of Agriculture have increased but how those other appropriations, intended for agriculture, in land-grant colleges, have increased. I call his attention to page 6, on which a table appears, showing that in 1904 the Government's appropriation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This table is a table covering appropriations to the United States Department of Agriculture and land-grant colleges of 1904 to 1916. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] had a great deal to do with this when he was chairman of the committee. These appropriations have advanced, according to this table, from $10,000,000 in 1904 to $70,000,000 in 1916.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Those are items which are carried in the permanent law, and are separate and apart from the annual Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There are other appropriations for agricultural purposes aside from the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. I am referring to the regular annual appropriation bill for this department. I am not prepared to say, Mr. Chairman, that all the items in the bill are proper and that they could not be reduced. I believe many of them could be. I am simply saying that, so far as I am concerned, it is hard for me, not having expert knowledge about a particular provision or paragraph, to set my judgment up against the committee that reported the bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the chairman of this committee, has had long service in this House and on this great committee. We all have confidence in his ability and his integrity. He is a farmer, operating great farms in one of the great agricultural States of this Union, and understands thoroughly the needs of the farmer. On matters where we lack definite technical information we can safely follow his judgment. I have been voting with the committee on the various items of this bill. I do not see how I can do anything else, unless there is some evidence offered from some one who knows and has technical and expert knowledge about these different paragraphs that they are extravagant and excessive.

We must reduce appropriations. We must cut down the expenses of the Government, but the place to begin this is in the appropriating committees. If they bring in bills after having given proper consideration and after extended hearings, there is only one thing we can do, in my judgment, if we want to hold together, and that is to support the committees, except in cases where it is shown they are in error.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I understand that there is before the House an amendment to reduce an appropriation for the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup from $12,000 to $7,000. Am I correct?

Mr. HAUGEN. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. MONDELL. Five thousand dollars. It is proposed to save $7,000 in the matter of the investigation of the methods of manufacture of table sirup.

Frankly, I do not know how much money is needed to carry on the investigations relative to the matter of manufacture of table sirup. I am willing to believe that it may require more than $12,000. I am willing to believe that on a proper showing we might do all that was necessary to do for less than $12,000.

But, gentlemen, it does occur to me that we are taking up the time of the House in pretty small hairsplitting when we discuss for a considerable length of time the question of the saving of $7,000 in the investigation of the methods of manufacture of table sirup, particularly at a time when our expenditures are running into the tens of billions of dollars per annum.

Now, gentlemen, what is the situation? The Congress that adjourned on the 4th of March left unenacted seven important appropriation bills. I do not propose to go into a discussion of who is responsible for that situation. There are differences of opinion and there are grounds for differences of opinion in regard to it. This Congress when it met had seven important appropriation bills to pass, if possible, before the 1st of July. The Congress might have been called into session the 5th day of March, but it was not. It might have been called into session at any time between the 5th of March and the 19th of May, but it was not.

But I am not going to discuss the responsibility for not calling Congress in session. I can not enlighten gentlemen on that point. They all have their own notions with regard to the responsibility touching that. But the fact is that we met on the 19th of May charged with the responsibility of placing on the statute books of the Nation, if possible, before the 1st day of July seven great bills that ought to have been passed by the former Congress.

Now, in view of that situation what was it necessary for us to do? To get to work, and to get to work at once. There were just two bills that could be presented to this House without careful reexamination, without involving any great danger of making considerable appropriations that were not needed, and those bills were the Indian appropriation bill and the Agricultural appropriation bill. It was necessary to start this program immediately upon the assembling of Congress. We could not ask the Committee on Military Affairs to report at once, because members of the Military Committee on both sides are agreed that there should be some changes in the bill on reexamination. We could not ask the Naval Committee to report immediately, because gentlemen on both sides of that committee were agreed that there must be vital changes in that bill. The sundry civil bill, involving all the departments and activities of the Government from Panama to Alaska, could not be reported without a reexamination, because conditions had changed since it was reported before, and even the bill relative to the expenditures of the District of Columbia must have reexamination in view of the changed conditions. But there were no radically changed conditions in the field of Indian expenditures or in the field of agricultural expenditures, and those two bills could be reported out promptly. Neither of them carries large sums compared with our total expenditures. We can save more on one item in the naval bill or in the Army bill than both of these bills carry, and I hope that we will save ten times as much in the expenditures for military and naval purposes as these two bills carry when the military and naval bills come in. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I feel I am largely responsible for this Agricultural bill being before the House without reexamination. I asked the chairman of the committee to be good enough to get his committee together and report the bill as soon as possible; to report it with reductions, if it could be reported with reductions after brief consideration, but if there was not time for the consideration that would warrant reductions, I did not advise reductions without consideration; and I did want the bill reported as promptly as possible.

Now, I have no manner of doubt but that there are items in this bill that might properly be reduced. I think that during the war, with the spirit of extravagant expenditure that was abroad in the land, and which permeated all the departments, we probably launched out into fields unnecessary to occupy and went further in them than we are justified in doing, in agriculture as elsewhere. I hope that when this new Congress has time, in formulating the next Agricultural bill, to give careful consideration to all those matters, we may find that without injury to the great agricultural industries of the country we may reduce expenditures. I do not anticipate that we are going to have opposition on the other side in reasonable reduction along those lines, because we are all anxious, as far as possible, to lop off and put behind us what were essentially war activities.

But the examination of the manufacture of table sirup is not necessarily a war industry, and $12,000 is not a very large sum of money to put into it, and a saving of $5,000 will not get us very far when we have started out to reduce by millions and billions, if we can, the expenditures of the period of the war; and so, for one, speaking only as an individual——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman see some danger in the insertion in this and other bills of certain war-industries boards that are being carried over now and being made after-war institutions?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not speaking of certain war-industry boards. If there be such in the bill, in the brief time the House has been kind enough to give me, I do think that in view of the fact that much less will be spent under the Agricultural Department if this bill becomes a law before the 1st of July than would be spent if it did not become a law and we had to pass a continuing resolution, the situation would be very much better, even from the standpoint of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if the bill becomes a law than if it did not become a law before the 1st of July. We can not reform, if it is to be assumed that there is reformation necessary, all these items on the Agricultural bill on the floor of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To be concrete, for example——

Mr. MONDELL. I have great confidence in this committee; and let me suggest, further, that some gentlemen are now protesting against items in this bill on this side who allowed them to pass through the House in the late session without a protest and without a suggestion that they were not just what they ought to be. I hope the House will stand by the Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. There are millions or billions of war expenditures that are running to-day, and that will continue to run. Will the gentleman indicate at what point we will swallow bills and, for the saving of time, shall make it a hundred millions or half a billion?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, my distinguished friend has had longer experience in this House than any other man on the floor, and he is the most practical man here, and at the same time he is a man who is usually very sound in his views, and I have frequently heard him suggest to the House that while gentlemen might differ in regard to little trifling items on an appropriation bill, in the main the House ought to follow its committees, which have more knowledge on a given subject than the individual.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] want more time?

Mr. HAUGEN. No. Go ahead.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is a small item of $12,000. The purposes of it are well known to those of us who have taken the trouble to read the hearings on this proposition. It was put on the bill about three years ago. It has already resulted in great good to the ribbon cane-sirup industry of this country. They propose further to extend this work, to ascertain if it is possible to manufacture sweet sirup out of grapes, culls of fruit, sugar beets, and the like. But I did not take the floor to explain the purpose of this item. I rose for the purpose of congratulating the new Republican Members who come from rural districts representing great agricultural constituencies, that at last a Republican in authority has seen fit to raise his voice in protest against the actual leadership of the Republican Party of the great State of Pennsylvania. I am glad to see the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], coming, as he does, from the great rolling plains of the West, where men make their living in the sweat of their faces, rising in his place this morning to protest against the continued nagging at this bill of my beloved friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague from South Carolina yield?

Mr. LEVER. Just for a short question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will be very difficult for the gentleman from South Carolina to start any differences between the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and myself.

Mr. LEVER. I do not need to do it. The differences have already started, and are very apparent here now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Notwithstanding the opinion of the gentleman from South Carolina with reference to the State of Pennsylvania, does the gentleman know that that State is a much greater agricultural State than the State of Wyoming?

Mr. LEVER. It ought to be. It is a bigger State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, it is. Do not forget that Pennsylvania is a pretty strong agricultural State. It is sometimes forgotten here.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Philadelphia is not.

Mr. LEVER. It is suggested by my friend from Louisiana that Philadelphia is not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia is a very large consumer of farm products. We are anxious that the farmer shall succeed in his business.

Mr. LEVER. It is very important that it shall get its proper supply of sirup.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and we furnish the money to pay for it. We have to pay for what we get.

Mr. LEVER. I am going to make a mere suggestion. This is a very interesting situation. I think as the future develops and as the history of the performances of this morning is read, it is going to be looked upon as rather vital in the life of a great political party in this country. You can no more join the rural West with the industrial East and keep them joined than you can make oil and water mix. You will not do it. The evidence of that crops out this morning.

But I say again I want to congratulate these new Republican Members who are sitting here earnestly listening to this debate, that at last some one has risen on their side who can speak with authority to defend the farmers' bill against the attacks of the city of Philadelphia. [Applause.]

Now, in furtherance of my observations here, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] wades into this bill. He had spoken nearly his entire time before I discovered what the real trouble was with the gentleman from New York. He is not so much interested in saving $7,000 as he is in letting his Knickerbocker Club friends understand that he wants a repeal of the tax on the membership of that institution. He is more interested in the proposition of letting his tennis-playing friends, dressed in their little dapper suits, bowing here and hitting yonder, know that he is thinking of them than he is of the farmers in South Carolina and Illinois and Wyoming who are sweating blood to produce the stuff that these men eat. He is more interested in that than he is in the matter of saving $7,000. [Applause.] I was glad to see my friend from the great agricultural empire of Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] discover the difficulty in the mind of the gentleman from New York and rush to the rescue. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to suggest that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, we are accustomed to the shedding of crocodile tears, and, of course, we can expect it from the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, because this bill is his baby. It was reported to the House in December, 1918, or January, 1919, and the more nearly it can go through now resembling the shape in which he reported it, of course, the greater credit will redound to that side of the House, which since a certain long-remembered proclamation has become a distinguished minority.

But I want to direct my attention for a few moments to the remarks of the distinguished majority floor leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who by virtue of his authority expressed his views in no uncertain tones and in a manner calculated to subdue and quiet those who believe that the time has come for economy in public expenditures. He would have economy in the Army and Navy bill, but he does not want us to touch a penny of the money that is appropriated for the farmer. He and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] come from those sections of the country where if any great public improvement or benefit is to be undertaken it should be pursued at the expense of Uncle Sam. If Wyoming wants some public program put through, let the Federal Government pay for it. If South Carolina wants something undertaken for the benefit of the taxpayers of that State, let the Federal Government bear the burden. I say that the time has arrived in all activities, of peace or war, of farming or industry, to cut down appropriations, and the time has come for the majority party on this side of the aisle to attempt to make good its promise in the program of legislation it held out after its conference here some two weeks ago that it was for economy in expenditures and appropriations and for efficiency in the management of public affairs.

Now, this particular appropriation is a small item, and I know that it would make very little difference in the tax rate; but if we can not have indisputable proof that it is needed, I submit that we might well adopt this amendment. I appreciate the situation of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], who is one of the best friends on this side of the aisle—and I think in the House—that the farmer has.

He is not superior to the brilliant young man of South Carolina, but he has the farmers' interests at heart. We all agree that we are dependent on the farmer, but in Heaven's name do you think the farmers in Iowa or South Carolina or Philadelphia, if you please, are going to rise up in their wrath and sign pronunciamentos condemning the Congress of the United States because we had the temerity to reduce an appropriation for the investigation of the methods of manufacturing table sirup from $12,000 to $5,000? Do you think that the whole farming interests in the country are going to totter and fall because we are attempting in one small item to save money? I submit that it is incumbent on the gentlemen of this House, regardless of party lines, to turn right in now and, if it can be done, economize in the public expenditures and appropriations.

I know the chairman of this committee will get up and read a few words to justify this appropriation, but I trust if he does it that the amendment may not be defeated, and I do not think it ought to be defeated unless he does show it beyond a reasonable doubt.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about this bill being a Democratic bill. It is true, and every bill reported to this House at this session so far is a Democratic bill. Here is a Democratic bill reported in the last Congress carrying $31,691,562. This bill carries the same amount and is word for word the one that was reported in January. Republicans and Democrats spent a week in passing that bill. Here are the results of the labor: Thirty-eight thousand five hundred dollars cut out of the bill, practically all of it went out on points of order, and $20,000 added to it, and, mind you, by Republicans. The bill went to the Senate; the Senate committee added $5,683,290. The Democratic bill as reported by the Senate committee to the Senate carried an excess over this bill of $5,692,290. The committee reported a number of amendments to the bill under consideration. One for $500,000 for the eradication of tuberculosis among cattle; another of $250,000 for the extermination of the corn borer in Massachusetts and other States, half of the amount estimated for by the department.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] calls attention to the fact that $70,000,000 was appropriated for this department in 1918. I take it that the gentleman has reference to the total appropriations made in 1918, including the permanent annual appropriation and various other appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. If so, the amount was not $70,000,000, but $72,359,546.60. Now, let us make some comparison. For instance, the appropriations for 1910 were $17,115,410.35. It jumped up to $37,188,852 in 1917, and from that amount to $72,359,546.60 in 1918. It dropped to $62,939,603 in 1919. The total amount appropriated for 1919 under the general appropriation and the food-production acts was $38,907,216, and this bill carries $31,691,562, a decrease of $7,215,654. If the bill is adopted with amendments, as reported by the committee, it will carry $32,562,842, which amount is $6,254,374 less than the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year. So, gentlemen, instead of having an increase we have a decrease.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has called our attention to the fact that we are taking over new work. Yes; we are taking over some of the work left undone by the War Industry Board transferred to the Bureau of Markets. Under the regulations issued by the wool division of the War Industry Board approximately 3,600 country dealers were permitted to handle wool of the 1918 clip. These regulations limited the profits of the dealers. To audit their reports and accounts will require some time. In a number of instances actual personal audits must be made of the books. It is estimated that between one and two million dollars of excess profits were secured from the 1918 wool transactions. This money must be located and collected from both classes of dealers. It is then proposed to distribute it to the growers of the wool from which the profits resulted, so far as it may be feasible to do so.

The department is asking for $35,000 to complete the work in order that the wrongdoing may be corrected. Gentlemen, if one or two million dollars can in this instance be recovered, is it not worth an expenditure of $35,000?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 10 words. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], whom I greatly respect and admire, in common with the rest of the House, suggested that the Republican leaders have a very difficult problem to keep together the interests of the East and the West. Every once in a while South Carolina suggests some such question as that for the Republican Party to solve. The Republican Party has always been able to meet it and will now. The Republican Party is a national organization and is intended to represent all parts and interests of the Union. We will have a few discussions among ourselves, as our friends on the other side do, but do not worry; we will take care of them all and maintain a united party as we did a united Union. The ability of the Republican Party to work for the welfare of each and all is one of the reasons why the American people find it so useful.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Kansas observe that the gentleman from South Carolina is harmonizing the manufacturers in this item, that he is supporting an appropriation of $10,000 for the manufacturers and not for the farmers? I wanted the gentleman's time just to read the item—

For investigation and development of methods for the manufacture—

Not the production—of table sirup and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups—

And so forth.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is already uniting with the Northern States, with the big interests, providing $10,000 that the manufacturers may find the way to utilize the products of the farm.

Mr. LEVER. Let me suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that you can not produce sirup; you must manufacture it; and if you do not investigate the proposition of manufacturing sirup out of the raw material, the farmer suffers the loss. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion has been made that we ought to economize. I am very strong for economy, but there ought to be some place to begin, of big enough size, so that it would demonstrate that we were not just making motions, but that we mean business. You bring me an item that is for $100,000,000, and I should be very much interested right away, but for God's sake do not start here with an oration about economy and jump onto a little $12,000 appropriation which you have not studied and which the committee has. Take something of your size.

I want to say another thing about this item. I once was employed by the Santa Fe to spend a month in looking up this sirup business, and I know a little something about it. I am going to say that this country could hardly spend $12,000 in a better way than by spending it in investigating the best methods of improving the manufacture of sirup in this country and ascertaining what further development of farm products can be so utilized. Some gentleman here wants to know if it is to improve the flavor. Why, yes; sirup goes into every family, and if there is any way of making better sirup or similar products or enlarging the production of sirup, $12,000 ought to be appropriated every year as long as they use sirup in this country, and it ought to be a continuing proposition. Aside from any agricultural interest, Philadelphia and New York and every city in the country will be as much aided and assisted by this as will the agriculturists, if we can find some more economical way of making sirup, which would help the poor people of those cities. It would be a great advantage to this country to do so. The more farm products can be made into sirup products, the cheaper such products can be manufactured, the greater will be the sale of such products of the farm. If the expenditure of $12,000 a year by 100,000,000 people will give the consumers less costly or better sirups, it will redound to the good of all who must count their dollars as they spend them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," in the city of Washington and elsewhere, including chemical apparatus, chemicals and supplies, repairs to apparatus, gas, electric current, official traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, and all other expenses, employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as may be considered necessary for the purposes named, and rent outside of the District of Columbia; and to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the revision of the United States Pharmacopœia and development of methods of analysis, $600,221.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 52, line 6, strike out "$600,221" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$620,221."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this is simply an increase of $20,000 for the enforcement of the food and drug act, and, in view of the increased cost in transportation and material, we think that the $20,000 should be granted.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, as it stands, this represents an increase of some $30,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. We propose to increase the amount $20,000 over the amount recommended.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I observe that the gentleman says, and the report also says, that this increase is necessary largely on account of the increased traveling expenses.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It has been my hope that in the fiscal year 1920 probably traveling expenses would be decreased rather than increased.

Mr. HAUGEN. I trust that they may be; but there are increases all along the line, and $20,000 in an expenditure of $600,000 is a small increase.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the amount therein stated and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$589,081," which was the amount carried in the bill of last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] by striking out the figures "$620,221" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$589,081."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the figures stated in my amendment are the figures carried in the appropriation bill of last year. This bill provides for an increase of $11,000 or thereabouts, and the gentleman from Iowa has offered an amendment increasing it by $20,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Increasing it to the amount that was estimated by the department at the last session. The committee at the last session cut the estimate $20,000 and agreed to an increase of $30,000, and after reconsideration it has now recommended that the full $50,000 of increase be granted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the total increase over last year would be $50,000 if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa passes?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the point I want to speak upon for a moment. This provision is for the enforcement of the so-called pure food and drug act. That goes into the field of narcotics. It also goes into the field of liquor, distilled spirits, and the like. The point I want to make—and this is partly in answer to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and in substantiation of the demand for economy on this bill—is that the Treasury Department already is expending vast sums of money to enforce the antinarcotic law. Here we have it all gone over again in the Department of Agriculture. The Treasury Department is charged with expenditures and gets large appropriations for the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws with respect to the sale and distribution of liquors, distilled spirits, and the like. Here we are going all over it again by making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture. We began this discussion by suggesting to our new Members of Congress that they ought to be informed about the way these things are done. I called attention a moment ago to the fact that some of the war trade boards and bureaus created during the war for war purposes only have been unloaded on these regular departments of the Government so that their employees could be put upon the statutory rolls. That is being done in this bill. We are taking over the war trade board on wool in this bill. We are providing permanent places for the men who were employed temporarily for the purpose of war. We are building up a tremendous institution, practically carrying on in the departments the temporary war bureaus we had expected to abolish when the war is declared at an end.

But in addition to taking them over we are also providing two ways for the accomplishment of the same purpose. We provide an appropriation to the Treasury Department to enforce the liquor laws and to enforce the antinarcotic laws, and we make provision in this bill to do the same thing. In other words, we have two sets of officials going about the country performing one service. We continue to give them an appropriation in this bill despite all that has been said here with regard to the desire to pass this bill in the interests of the farmers of the country. The farmer ought to know what is being done in his name. He has to help pay the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this item carries an appropriation for the enforcement of what is commonly known as the food and drugs act. It is an extremely important provision. You either ought to enforce the law and enforce it strictly, rigidly, and impartially or repeal it. The department estimated for a certain amount of money to do this. The committee conducted hearings, cross-examined witnesses, and concluded the department needed that much for that purpose, and we gave it to them in this bill. It was brought to the committee's attention that, first of all, traveling expenses in this country were very greatly increased. Now, in the enforcement of the food and drugs act, you all know they have to employ a large number of traveling inspectors, who are in the business of enforcing that law. That is the first proposition. You do not have to argue that as a fact; everybody knows that. It is as certain as that the sun shines. Now, the next proposition is——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why the increase in the cost of traveling expenses? I can not quite understand that.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is trying to get me into a political debate.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; not at all. I am simply asking for information.

Mr. LEVER. Rates have been increased; the gentleman knows that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This appropriation is for the next year. Is it expected that traveling rates will be greater next year?

Mr. LEVER. I can not tell.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is what I do not understand, and I am asking for information.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is not on an appropriating committee and he does not know how estimates are prepared.

Mr. ANDERSON rose.

Mr. LEVER. In a moment; I am stating how estimates are prepared. The preparation of these estimates began last summer. They were sent to the Treasury Department as early as the 1st of November, and then they were finally sent to Congress on the opening day of the session. At that time we were engaged in war and it was anticipated we would continue to be engaged in war, and even now we do not know when the railroads will be taken back and when fares will be reduced. Another point: Everybody also knows that chemicals have very greatly increased in price. The Bureau of Chemistry in the enforcement of this act must of necessity buy a large quantity of chemicals. Another proposition involved by this—I want to show in my brief five minutes that these appropriations are not entirely unreasonable, nor have they been dumped in here without real consideration—is that during the past two of three years there has been more adulteration of foods and drugs on account of the let down somewhat, because of the lack of men to do the work, than there has ever been since the food and drugs act passed. They are selling all kinds of stuff under the guise of drugs that will produce a kick as strong as champagne if you drink it. Now, it is proposed by this increased appropriation here to allow for more rigid inspection against the adulteration of foods and in a measure not to enforce prohibition, because prohibition has nothing to do with this item; not a cent of it is spent in the enforcement of the liquor laws of this country, but to enforce an act of Congress to prevent the adulteration of drugs and foods. Many drugs are now being adulterated for the purpose of getting alcohol out of them. Men can not afford to oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is——

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired by agreement. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the grading, weighing, handling, transportation, and uses of naval stores, the preparation of definite type samples thereof, and for the demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores, in cooperation with individuals and companies, including the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $10,000.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, along with the new Members of Congress I have been very much interested in this debate, and I think I can understand that the Democratic Party wants to get political advantage out of it and the Republican Party wants credit out of it. And I see the entire appropriation amounts to some $31,000,000, which seems to be mostly for the purpose of paying an army of clerks, several thousand of them. Now, I would be very glad if the chairman of the committee, or the former chairman of the committee, or any other person, will tell me what the farmers are to get out of this. I have not heard anybody show that this legislation which has been in operation for many years, what the advantage has been to the farmer. One-third of the people live on the farms, and this great Nation can well afford to make an apppropriation of $31,000,000, or any larger sum, if it is of general advantage to the farmers. Of course, the department wants large appropriations and places for an army of clerks, but I would like to hear and know what they are getting out of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and development of methods of manufacturing insecticides and fungicides, and for investigating chemical problems relating to the composition, action, and application of insecticides and fungicides, $25,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think the statement made by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] was a very fair one. His question, however, has been answered several times in the debate. It was admitted by the chairman of the committee, and it was admitted by him during the last Congress, that this department now, by reason of the various bureaus that have been built up, by the unloading upon it of various war bureaus and things of that kind, which were intended to be temporary, but which are to be made permanent in the Department of Agriculture, now has at its command upward of 18,000 employees, who travel over the country instructing the farmer, lecturing to him, showing him how to till the soil, teaching him about the chemistry of the soil, and telling him how to do a variety of things which he is supposed not to know. The farmer under these circumstances ought to be the best educated man in the country, having these 18,000 lecturers and experts to come and go at his beck and call to tell him what to do. Yet the trouble is that the farmer has not been made to understand by his friends in this House that he, the farmer himself, has to pay in part for the education and the salary of these 18,000 lecturers, who tell him what to do. He does not yet understand that the great mass of these lecturers and experts were put upon the pay roll of the Government during the last six or seven years, when the gentlemen upon the other side were in power, and when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who has been waxing eloquent in his defense of this bill, was in charge of the measure. These are things that I think tend to explain to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] why. Some of us indicated that the farmer himself, the real, genuine, horny-handed tiller of the soil, does not thoroughly understand sometimes what is being done to him in the name of the farmer in a measure of this kind.

To make it plain, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has raised this question, whether he can tell just how we would expend this $25,000 and just how the farmer would get a direct benefit from it? It is for the "investigation and development of methods of manufacturing insecticides and fungicides" and for "investigating chemical problems relating to the composition, action, and application of insecticides and fungicides." To be sure the farmer is annoyed by insects, bugs, and pests of various kinds, and some of them receive no salary from the Government, none whatever.

But here the proposition is to take out of the farmers' funds, the taxpaying farmers' funds, $25,000. To do what? To investigate the development of methods "of manufacturing insecticides and fungicides." In other words, the farmer's money in this instance, the farmer for whom the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] so eloquently pleads, is to be taken, in this instance, by experts to find out a way by which the "manufacturers," not the farmers, can make a fungicide to sell to the farmers.

Does my friend from Pennsylvania understand that the gentleman from South Carolina is gradually coming over from the soil and the furrow and the cotton hill to the big interests and encouraging them in this bill? Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who comes from that grand old Commonwealth which is supposed to represent everything that the big interests stand for, understand that we are getting $25,000 in this farmers' bill to encourage the manufacture of things that we can sell to the farmer?

I do not know whether the farmer knows this or not. The gentleman from South Carolina has gone to his lunch temporarily and is not here to explain. But I wish when he comes back that he would tell why he is for "the manufacturers" in this instance. It sounds like treason.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I am here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In due time, then, the gentleman will tell why he is taking up the cause of the manufacturers of insecticides and fungicides. It is surprising.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I represent in part not only an agricultural State but one of the greatest agricultural States in the Union. I come from a State where there are some of the best farmers in the United States, but the farmers of Iowa do not think they have learned all about farming yet or that there can be no further improvement. They are not so conceited as to believe that they can not be taught anything by experts who devote themselves to these subjects who have shown their qualifications and demonstrated them upon the farm itself. We have that kind of men out there, men who have made a success of farming, men who have raised more on their farms and made more profits off of them than their neighbors, who are helping to tell the others how to realize the same profits and raise the same kind of crops.

The Agricultural Department, I will say for the benefit of my two friends from Pennsylvania, is an educational institution. It is not for the purpose of farming, although it carries on experimental farms for the purpose of showing how these things ought to be done. This money is not appropriated to make donations to the farmers—far from it—and yet, from what the gentlemen who are opposed to this appropriation have stated, they seem to think we should not appropriate any money unless we are to turn it over to the farmers in form of a donation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have only five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not this a donation to the manufacturers of insecticides and fungicides?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Is it not a fact that your State, in addition to this fund, appropriates funds that are expended at Ames, Iowa, for the purpose of developing the very thing that is in this paragraph?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is another matter I intended to come to. They not only have use for this money in the way it is appropriated here, but they add a million or more of dollars to it out in our State for the purpose of teaching the farmers more about farming, and as a result we have one of the finest agricultural colleges in the whole country at Ames, Iowa.

And we never stint the money on it. We do not have the discussion about the money spent upon it that we have here about some of these paltry appropriations in this bill. They appropriate the money there to carry on an agricultural college of the highest grade, a school which has a reputation all over the world, and to which people come from all over the world to learn about farming. If my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] had a better understanding of what it means to farm, if he had worked upon a farm, and had been brought up on a farm, as I was, when he was a boy, he would learn that largely through the work of the Agricultural Department there has been a greater advance in farming in this country during the last 25 years than has been shown in any other department of industry. Farming is done much better now, and it is done so well in the State of Iowa that, although the virgin soil there has long been exhausted, and although you might expect that it would not raise as good crops now as formerly, yet to-day we are raising one-third greater crops than we did when that soil was new, and largely as a result of instruction given by the Department of Agriculture.

Now, with reference to an appropriation like this, for the development of fungicides and chemicals to destroy insects, according to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture—although I have not the exact figures here, and the chairman can probably give them—somewhere around $300,000,000 a year in value of crops has been destroyed by insects and fungus growths. Is it not worth paying $25,000 to see if we can not get some better system of destroying these insects?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman says this is for the benefit of the manufacturers, partly; but is not that beneficial to the farmer if the manufacturers can be shown how to improve their compositions so that the farmers can get a better and cheaper insecticide or fungicide? But it is not alone for that purpose; part of it is for the purpose of showing the farmer himself how he can make these insecticides on his own farm.

I do not know of any more commendable item in this bill than this item of $25,000, and I say it as one having practical experience in farming, who lives in a farming community; and I say the farmers themselves want this appropriation contained in this paragraph, and that they want this bill passed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk read the next paragraph, and the gentleman can then move to strike out the last word.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experiments in the manufacture of rare chemicals for use in chemical research, including investigation of domestic sources of supply, $10,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture may furnish, upon application, samples of rare chemicals to investigators for research work and charge for the same a price to cover the cost thereof, such price to be determined and established by the Secretary, and the money received from sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa what authority there is for having this item in here?

Mr. HAUGEN. This amount carried here is $200,000 less than the amount carried last year.

Mr. WALSH. It was not in the bill last year.

Mr. HAUGEN. We appropriate $50,000 this year instead of $250,000.

Mr. WALSH. It was not in the last bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. This is transferred from the miscellaneous section.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state that this was in the bill last year?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. It was in the miscellaneous section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. WALSH. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and development of methods of utilizing wool-scouring waste, $9,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. In order to save time, Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HERSMAN. It is a little difficult for us new Members to get on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California please wait until we have read the next paragraph?

Mr. HERSMAN. I am willing to stay on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for general expenses, $969,901.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word. The gentleman from California is recognized for the purpose of striking out the last word.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I find it is about as difficult to get recognized here as it is to kill these insects and bugs that trouble our orchards in California, over which this discussion has arisen. I do not rise to speak for the purpose of telling you gentlemen of the Congress how to guide the Department of Agriculture of this Nation, but as one of the new Members has asked what the farmers of this country were getting out of those appropriation bills, I want to say that I do not believe that any class of people of our Nation are getting so much for the money expended as the agriculturists of our Nation are getting. [Applause.]

I know something about the soil—not of the East, but of the soils of the West—and I know the difficulties that the farmers there contend with, and I know why, in the wisdom of this committee, there was a provision inserted in this bill for the ascertainment of the best methods of manufacturing certain insecticides and fungicides that will kill the insects that trouble the farmer-orchardist. All our orchards depend upon our knowing how these materials should be manufactured. The proper way to mix the various intricate sprays used by the horticulturist and orchardist of this Nation is of the highest importance, and only by extended experiment and careful observation by skilled scientists can the proper results be obtained. A slight variation in temperature while mixing or a small change in ingredients used might result in detriment to the vine or tree; or, on the other hand, we might have a mixture that was worthless. It is also of the greatest importance that the Department of Agriculture should be familiar with the commercial sprays that are placed on the market. It is certainly within the functions of this department to guard the wealth of this Nation in a field where only trained scientists can enter. The money you may see fit to appropriate for this particular item and for most of the items of this bill will be found to yield a great dividend to the Nation. While this Congress will of necessity make large appropriations for the Army and Navy for the proper protection of the Nation, do not let us forget that our greatness primarily depends upon the skill and intelligence we display in handling our soil.

The prune industry, the peach industry, the almond industry, the walnut industry, and many other industries all depend upon the wisdom which you gentlemen put into this appropriation measure. If you will furnish experts to advise us when and how to treat our trees and vines and what material should be used, then you have given to the orchardist the one thing that will preserve his investment, safeguard his property, and add to the wealth of this Nation.

The money that was used from the last appropriation in California did much to increase the food supply of the Nation. The lessons of scientific farming once learned are a yearly recurring asset to the Nation. I know that by the proper selection of seed in California you increase the yield of 50,000 acres of sorghum grains 20 per cent. That is an immense amount. The money you appropriated for that work was inconsiderable in proportion to what was received in return.

I know men who have saved thousands of dollars in the San Joaquin Valley because they acted on the advice of the Department of Agriculture. For a number of years the beans there were blighted by heat. The department suggested that the ground be cultivated for one month without being planted, and then the beans when they came in bloom would come into bloom at a cooler season of the year. They followed those suggestions, and thereby they increased the food supply of this Nation tremendously and added greatly to the value of a large area of land.

Mr. LEVER. And if the gentleman will permit, these are the kind of men who have been accused and ridiculed here on the floor of the House.

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes. I am not speaking of the East. I do not know anything about it. I have not been in the East for 30 years, and I do not know what the Agricultural Department is doing to promote agriculture in the Eastern or Southern States. But I do know we are mightily pleased with what they are doing in the West.

I will tell you that in the State of California you will find one of the greatest institutions that makes for the prosperity and upbuilding of this great Nation. I have followed farming continuously for 30 years, and my observation is that every dollar you put into the Agricultural Department is well expended and that there is little or no waste. The men who represent that department are men of the highest type. They are men who are anxious to come and help you solve your problems. Two weeks before I left California to come to this House of Representatives I telephoned to our county seat, to one of the department men, and asked him to come down to investigate what I thought was the red spider that was threatening my prune crop and that had the year before devastated a large acreage of prunes in California. That entomologist responded at once. He came 30 miles to my orchard and looked it over, and he told me it was not the variety of red spider that the orchardists so much feared, but that the red spider that had devastated the orchards of California came about the 1st of July, and that all I had to do was to have the superintendent of my orchard watch the situation the first week of July, and then I would have two weeks in which the spraying must be done. He gave minute instructions as to the kind of spray to use and the method of application. The Department of Agriculture, together with our State university, is bringing to the development of the West the knowledge of the agricultural world, and each year our acres yield more under their wise guidance. Now, I will tell you, you can not afford to cripple a great institution that is on the very front-line trenches of the Nation's prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes, in order that he may answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from California if the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania] is correct in his insistence that these agricultural appropriations are not for the benefit of the farmer and not desired by the farmer, why is it that the Members of this House who represent agricultural districts, who live among the farmers and who are acquainted with their wishes and their views and their needs, practically to a man are advocating these measures, whereas those who are opposing them are almost to a man from cities, who do not represent farmers and know nothing about the wishes or needs of farmers? [Applause.]

Mr. HERSMAN. The gentleman from Philadelphia will answer that question. I do not know. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 7 and 8 on page 53.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 53, strike out all of lines 7 and 8.

Mr. SNELL. I make this motion for this reason: This is an entirely new section in a regular Agricultural bill. There was an item carried in one of the food-production acts providing for doing this work, but according to the testimony that was given by Dr. Alsberg before the committee, he said that they never spent this money, and, as far as he knew, up to the present time they were not sure whether they would need it or not; and if this gentleman is not sure up to the present time that they need this money we certainly should not appropriate it, and I hope that the paragraph will be dropped from the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. The fact that the money has not been expended shows that if it is not expended it will impose no additional burden upon the Treasury. But some work has been done, and it is possible that some results may come from it—that is, for the utilization of the wool grease.

Mr. SNELL. Dr. Alsberg says in his testimony that he does not know whether he wants this money or not.

Mr. HAUGEN. If it is not used, it will do no harm.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Chemistry, $1,381,571.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that $50,000 was stricken out on a point of order, and this is not the correct total.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think the Clerk has authority now to correct the totals.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, lines 11 to 17 inclusive, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], in discussing another item in the bill, took the very proper position that in the ordinary course we should pay very careful heed to the Committee on Agriculture in all these various items contained in the appropriation bill which they have submitted to the House. I agree to that, and there is no man in the House whose judgment I have more usually valued than that of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who was the former chairman of this committee. But on the other hand I think it is proper sometimes that we apply the test of our own investigation and our own judgment on some of these items. If we do not do this, if Members are to make no investigation of their own, but blindly follow the recommendations of our committees, then the committees might as well legislate in the first instance and save the House the formality of adopting their conclusions. I have made some investigation of this item which I have moved to strike out, and I insist that it ought to go out of the bill for the reasons which I will now state. It was a war emergency item pure and simple. The experiment has been made and the results are known. Why continue it when it has ceased to be an experiment? Its prohibitive cost as a commercial proposition has already been demonstrated.

We are all familiar with the fact that before the war the potash supply of the United States, and of the world as for that matter, was from the Province of Saxony in Prussia and the Province of Alsace, also a German territory. We imported about 250,000 tons of potash prior to the war, and the demand was constantly increasing. The most of it, or a good part of it, was used in commercial fertilizer, and munitions factories used quite a good deal.

Soon after the declaration of war—to be exact, in January, 1915—the Imperial German Government put an embargo on the export of potash, and we, as well as the world, were left without any considerable source of supply. It did not take long before the reserve supply in this country was used up, and the United States Government very properly set about, by all means available, to develop sources of supply of potash in this country.

Several sources have been found since that investigation started, and some have been developed with considerable success. The alkali lakes of western Nebraska, those of southern California, and the Great Salt Lake in Utah have been developed as sources of supply. But one of the most practical sources, according to the expert testimony in this matter, is the reduction of cement dust and blast-furnace dust by an electrical process. That discovery came about in a very unusual way. It was found that these cement plants and blast furnaces must find some way to prevent discharging their poisonous fumes in the air. It was obnoxious to surrounding neighborhoods, and States and municipalities were enacting laws to abate the nuisance, and so they reduced the fumes to dust, and it was soon found that this dust was readily soluble and that the potash could be recovered by a simple process of leeching. So far as I have been able to learn this is the only source that is thus far developed that will really be able to compete as a commercial proposition with the sources of potash in the Provinces of Alsace and Saxony.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. As soon as I complete this statement I will. Now, this item of $127,600 which I have moved to eliminate from the bill is to be used to continue the operation of a Government plant at Summerland, Calif., engaged in reducing the giant kelp found on the Pacific coast to potash and other by-products. It is a great seaweed, as we all know. The process is to go out and harvest the kelp, transport it to the factory, and by a process that has been discovered get a certain amount of potash out of it.

But what does it cost to get a ton of potash out of kelp? On this point we have in the hearings on this bill the testimony of Dr. Milton Whitney, Chief of the Bureau of Soils, and here is what he says in answer to the question by the chairman of the committee, who at that time was the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. Mr. LEVER asked him, "At what price do you produce this ton of potash from kelp?" He says, "I do not know what the average is, but I should say about $4.50 a unit, on an average."

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that was the price at which the product was sold and not at which it was produced, the law requiring that sales shall be at the market price.

Mr. BLACK. I should feel justified in accepting that explanation of the gentleman, because I do not believe the specific question was asked as to the production cost. As a matter of fact, there is nothing in the hearings to show that even the sale price of $450 per ton was equal to the production cost. This statement was made by Mr. Whitney:

We have harvested the kelp in our harvester, brought it in, dried and ashed it, and we have sold up to the present time about $50,000 worth of potash.

Then the question was asked at what price, and he said at $4.50 per unit. Now, the unit of potash is 20 pounds, and therefore you would have 100 units to make a ton, and the price at which the potash was sold was $450 a ton. Suppose they had sold the entire output of potash at the prewar price of $40 a ton; how much did they produce? Five thousand dollars' worth, at an expenditure of $127,600 to do it. Because you can readily see if they sold $50,000 worth at $450 a ton, if they had sold it at $40 a ton, the prewar price of commercial potash, they would have produced about $5,000 worth of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman understand that the Department of Agriculture intends to pursue experiments in kelp further? The gentleman knows that the experiments were small compared with what the commercial companies did on the Pacific coast. I understood that it was agreed by all hands that kelp could not be used profitably in these times for the production of potash.

Mr. BLACK. I think that most men do agree on that proposition, but the Department of Agriculture does not seem to be aware of it and contemplates the continuance of this fund, and $127,600 is to operate the plant at Summerland, Calif. It is true the largest plant which was used in this new enterprise was the Hercules Powder Co., and they have abandoned it, because they know that they can not produce potash economically by this process.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, I understood that the Agricultural Department expected to use this money more for the purpose of trying to find natural sources of potash in the West. Now, in reference to the cement industry, the gentleman understands that so far only a small quantity of potash has been obtained from cement factories.

Mr. BLACK. I admit that, but if the gentleman will study the situation he will find that the experts on this subject have come to the conclusion that that is the only feasible supply, and the only way in which potash can be produced in this country in competition with the foreign sources.

In the May, 1918, issue of the World's Work Mr. Frank Parker Stockbridge published a very interesting article dealing with the steps which had been taken in developing potash in the United States, and in that article he says:

One source of potash supply has given evidence of probable ability to meet all the requirements of permanent potash independence for the United States, namely, practically inexhaustible supply of raw materials, low enough cost of production to withstand competition under any conditions, and geographical distribution such as to minimize transportation costs.

This is the process of recovery of potash from cement and blast-furnace dust. It is too early to claim that this has already proved the panacea sought for, but the evidence so far is all in its favor, and I am merely passing along the judgment of Government experts who have delved deeply into every phase of the potash question in saying that on the basis of results thus far obtained it offers the best chance now in sight to compete with German potash in normal times.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have just examined the lengthy report of the Tariff Board upon this subject, and they differ with the conclusions the gentleman has stated. They doubt very much whether it will be successful in a commercial way to obtain potash from cement dust.

Mr. BLACK. It is successful over here at the Security Cement & Lime Co., of Hagerstown, Md., where they have already a plant with this process in operation. I also understand that the Bethlehem Steel Co. is installing a plant for the reduction of its blast-furnace dust to potash.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman first permit me further in answer to inquiries about the manufacture of potash from kelp to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that that is what this item of $127,600 is for, and it has no connection with the development of potash from other sources, as he seems to think? We have already passed another item of $31,340 for looking up other sources of the supply of potash. I have no objection to that. It was under that appropriation that we discovered the alkali lakes, and have discovered this reduction process in cement and blast-furnace plants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The potash question is a very important one. I want to ask whether we provided for an inquiry as to potash in the $50,000,000 mining bill that was passed during the war session?

Mr. BLACK. I shall have to refer that to the gentleman from South Carolina, because I confess I do not recall.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We appropriated $50,000,000 during the war for the investigation and discovery of minerals throughout the United States, with a view to promoting various war activities, including agriculture, and I want to know whether potash was contemplated in that $50,000,000 bill.

Mr. LEVER. I think not.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman refer to the Bureau of Mines bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. That was not included.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the Department of Agriculture is alone in this potash inquiry, so far as these appropriations are concerned?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and the investigation of all other sources outside of kelp is covered in the item we have already passed—$31,340—and I have no disposition to interfere with that. I am perfectly willing to vote money to investigate any practical source of supply, but it has been demonstrated very clearly, I think, that potash manufacture from kelp is not feasible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point is to find out whether we are duplicating the work in two departments.

Mr. BLACK. No; nothing is being done about it in the $50,000,000 bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman inform the committee what the average prewar price of potash was from the German fields?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; $40 a ton.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Has the gentleman read the statement of the Alien Property Custodian in connection with his story about the German chemical factories in this country to the effect that there had been a widespread German propaganda to make American farmers think they needed a great deal more potash than they really did?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; they conducted a propaganda of that sort, and it is probable that some farmers used potash on soils where they did not need it, but I do not believe that was at all general. That is, of course, a matter for the judgment of the farmer. As to the German monopoly, of course, we might have some prejudice against buying our potash from Germany, they having so recently been our enemies; but I call attention to the fact that since Alsace has been awarded to France we are assured of competition in the potash matter, and that from one of our most faithful and loyal allies, and there can be no danger of a German monopoly such as there was before the war.

In the World's Work Magazine article of Mr. Frank Parker Stockbridge, to which I have already referred, he says about the deposits of potash in Alsace, which was then in German possession:

> But when it shall have been restored to France its potash resources will not only break the German monopoly but provide France with a valuable export commodity to exchange for the vast supplies of all kinds she must obtain from us.

That is true; the greatest deposits of potash in the world are in the Province of Alsace, which now belongs to France; and it looks to me just as reasonable to suppose that you can go out on the Pacific coast, harvest that great kelp seaweed, carry it to the reduction plant, and reduce it to potash in competition with the natural deposits that nature has placed in the bowels of the earth—it would be just as reasonable to suppose that you could do that as that you could go to the great forests of the country, cut down the pine trees, reduce them to charcoal, and compete with the great coal deposits of the country for fuel. The whole thing is unreasonable, except as a war-emergency proposition, and now that the war is over it is the worst kind of extravagant waste to continue the experiment, and it should be stopped and that without further delay.

In the remainder of my time I want to pay respect to another practical phase of the matter. We have a great many people in this country who seem to hold to the belief that we can produce everything in the United States and buy nothing elsewhere and still carry on foreign trade with other nations. It can not be done. If we carry on foreign trade, if the United States stands in the front rank of the great commercial nations, as I hope it will, we must trade with other people and we must buy commodities which they can produce under economic conditions, and which it will not be feasible and practicable to produce in this country. We know that in 1918 the United States had a balance of trade in our favor of $3,000,000,000.

Now, how is that settled? It can only be settled in three ways—one by imports of gold, another by exchange of credits, or, rather, an extension of credits, and the third way by the exchange of commodities, and up until now we have been settling it, for the most part, by extension of credits. The conditions have not admitted of its being settled in any other way. But are we going to be willing to keep that up? Are we going to be willing to keep up extending from year to year the credits to these foreign countries? It is certain that they can not export their gold, because they are already on a fiat-money basis and do not have it to export, and therefore there must be an exchange of commodities. If there is not, then the whole commercial fabric of the world is going to be turned upside down. France owes us to-day two and a half billion dollars, and before we cease to extend them loans I dare say they will owe us $3,000,000,000, and the interest on that will be $150,000,000 annually. How are they to settle that interest debt? It must be, gentlemen, by the exchange of commodities, and I hold that the potash which they can dig from their mines in the Province of Alsace cheaper and under more economical conditions than it can be produced anywhere in the world will be one of the commodities that we naturally should buy from them, and it is absurd to continue an experiment to try to produce, as a commercial proposition, potash from the giant kelp of the Pacific coast, costing $450 per ton.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman touches on a very interesting subject in regard to the balance of trade that will follow the payment of interest on loans and the purchase of our materials in the rehabilitation of Europe, but does the gentleman take the position that we should decline to develop to the fullest possible extent all the industries of this country so as to avoid balancing trade with credit?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not. And that has not been my argument.

Mr. REAVIS. Well, we have a potash industry in this country that can, with proper sympathetic attention, be developed. Does the gentleman take the position we ought not to have that development?

Mr. BLACK. I do not. I simply contend that the facts in this case show that the production of potash from kelp is one source that can not be an economical process and should be discarded. I am in full sympathy with the production of potash by the reduction of cement dust and blast-furnace dust, because the testimony shows that is a commercial process and is economically sound. Of course, it is all right to produce potash from the alkali lakes of Nebraska and southern California and the Great Salt Lake of Utah, but when you undertake to go out and cut down kelp and haul it to the factory and make it into potash at $450 a ton, and everyone knows it will not sell for more than $70 or $80 a ton, and very probably not that high, from the mine fields of Alsace and Saxony, why it looks to me like it would not be the part of wisdom to continue an experiment of that sort. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has made a very strong statement. Fortunately, it is not necessary to take issue with anything that he said to justify this appropriation in its entirety. This appropriation was initiated, in the first place, for the purpose of making an experiment. That experiment was to determine whether or not potash could be produced from kelp on a commercial scale in competition with the potash that was brought from other sources to this country. I think we might as well admit from the very outset that it is not possible, and that we do not expect it will be possible to produce potash alone from kelp at a price which will enable us to compete with imported potash or with potash produced elsewhere in the United States; but it so happens that in the production of potash from kelp there are a number of by-products of very great value. Among them is a very high grade of high-temperature charcoal which sells for about $100 a ton. Another by-product is iodine, the price of which I am unable to state at the moment, but which is a very important product.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Who uses that high-grade charcoal which sells at $100 a ton? What commercial value has it?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not tell you; I am giving the testimony of the experts of the department in respect to the product and the price at which it is sold. I understand it is used, however, in the tempering of a very high grade of steel. It is a very high-grade, high-temperature charcoal.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If this has already been discovered, and I ask the question in good faith, why do you want to continue the investigation?

Mr. ANDERSON. We know that these by-products can be produced from kelp in conjunction with potash. We do not know whether they exist in sufficient quantities and can be gotten out from kelp at a cost which will enable us in connection with the return from the potash itself to make an industry of this sort self-sustaining. I am entirely frank when I say it is entirely experimental. They have conducted this investigation to the point so that we have every reason to believe now we can make this plant commercially a self-sustaining one, and this $127,600 in no way represents the cost of operating this plant, because we have every reason to expect that amount will be reduced by a very considerable revenue from sales of potash, charcoal, iodine, and other by-products.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. Is this appropriation of $127,600 for the purpose of providing money that the Agricultural Department will use to investigate the kelp proposition only?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. There is nothing in this appropriation that affects in any way the question of obtaining potash from the alkali lakes?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think not. I think that covers the kelp proposition entirely. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do.

Mr. BLACK. Speaking of return, is it not a fact that even at selling their product at $450 a ton last year the total receipts were only $50,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his permission. How long has this experiment in kelp continued up to date?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think this will be the third year, if my recollection is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much further time is it anticipated it will require to conclude these experiments?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is very likely, in order to determine just what by-products can be commercially taken out of kelp in the process of manufacture, a considerable amount of machinery now in operation will have to be taken out and other machinery substituted for it, and the process will have to go on for at least another year.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. KINKAID. Has investigation been made in different portions of the country for producing potash from purely mineral sources, and have not disclosures been made in the last year or two showing that a very great amount of potash may be found in the United States in mineral forms?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KINKAID. Another question, if the gentleman please. Is it not a fact that reports coming through, say, the Geological Survey, and through other authentic sources, are to the effect that the United States may develop sufficient potash for its own use and consumption?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think that is true, and I will say to the gentlemen of the committee that if this experiment is to stop with the determination of whether you can produce potash alone from kelp at a price that will compete commercially with potash produced from its sources, it can stop now and ought to stop now. We believe it is possible to produce potash and the by-products of kelp in such quantity as to make this plant a paying proposition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. And some of the products that are produced in addition to potash are much more valuable and much more important than is the potash itself.

I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if the point is not about this: This is really not an investigation of any production, but it is an investigation of the commercial possibilities of the seaweed called kelp, because you have proceeded sufficiently far to discover that kelp is not a promising source from which you may hope to get potash.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true if you base your proposition entirely on potash.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Is it not a misnomer to say that this is a potash investigation? Should it not be said that we are investigating the seaweed possibilities?

Mr. ANDERSON. Potash is, of course, the prime result of the investigation of the kelp. The other products are by-products.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I would like to know if this investigation has gone far enough so that the Government is sure that as a potash-producing proposition kelp is a failure? Has it gone that far?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not answer that question categorically, because the proposition has to be considered together. If you only go so far as the production of potash from kelp, the proposition is a failure commercially, but if you go the next step and produce iodine and charcoal and products similar to coal-tar products we have every reason to believe the process will be successful.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And that leads to this question. This is an agricultural bill. Are we justified in making an appropriation of this size or of any other size for the Department of Agriculture for something that is not akin to agriculture?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would not were it not for the fact that we already have the plant there and have $166,000 invested. We have gotten about so far that it is cheaper and more economical for us to go the rest of the way with the experiment and conclude it than to cut it off now.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not true that the Hercules Powder Co. had a much greater investment and that they abandoned it?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true, but their activities were directed entirely to the production of potash alone.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. The topic under consideration now involves two very important lines of thought that I think will enlist the sympathetic attention and consideration of every Member. The line that was enunciated by our friend from Texas [Mr. BLACK] opens up a world of suggestion. It has some values; it has some dangers. I think that my friend would admit it. To-day in the Balkan States the biggest problem before the peace conference is due to the fact that one of the States produces one thing mainly and little else; that another State produces another thing mainly and little else. One has a great wheat market and is dependent almost entirely upon that production, not only for food, but it is the chief production which it exchanges for needed articles; another produces no wheat but a great abundance of oil, and depends almost entirely upon that source for its livelihood; while another has some particular mineral wealth but is without either the agricultural or the oil wealth; while still another is the chief manufacturer of that section of Europe. The effort to get an agreement whereby no one will be shut out from the use by embargoes of what it has not but must depend on another for is really the biggest problem before the peace conference as to those States. In a country like ours, made up of a vast territory of a wide diversity, where one State or section devotes its energy to one line and others to different lines, there is no trouble, since they are all under one Government. In fact, this wide diversity of industry and the great expansion of territory are the conditions upon which our frame of government largely depends. But even in that case no one section of our country can be so independent as when it produces a variety of articles rather than but one. Especially is this true when applied to independent countries such as the Balkan States.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for one brief statement?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. BLACK. I hope the gentleman will not understand me to advocate the discouragement of the production of potash in this country under economic conditions. What I wanted to point out was that the facts indicated that you could not produce it economically out of kelp.

Mr. FESS. Probably if we both clearly understood what was meant, it would be found that we are not far apart.

The time was when we had a flock of sheep upon almost every farm in the country, upon the basis that a flock of sheep is more of a value than a detriment to any farm; and I do not believe that there is a farmer anywhere that could not profitably maintain even to-day a flock of sheep, which would add, first, to the wool product of the country, and, second, to the meat product of the country.

Now, my friend from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will recall that one of the strongest arguments ever produced on this floor against the sheep industry was by your famous Roger Q. Mills, who claimed that we could not go into the sheep business in this country in competition with Australia; that there the grazing fields are unlimited—lands inexpensive and adapted to the raising of sheep, with which we could not compete. He asserted that to undertake to utilize for the sheep industry land sold at such tremendous prices as ours are sold in competition with a country like Australia was foolishness. That is the principle for which our friend from Texas [Mr. BLACK] now contends. Well, whatever be the source of the depression of the sheep industry of the country, whether it was argument of that sort or something else, all of us recognize that the country has grown poorer by the fact that we have ceased to be a great wool and sheep growing country, both from the standpoint of the fiber and the standpoint of the meat products. We have ceased to be an independent country in that degree, because the industry has given way to a dependence upon a foreign supply. I think that no country can safely go upon the basis that it will not develop to the very last limit its ability to produce anything it can produce, so that it will never be dependent on any other country for anything.

The dye industry and the chemical industry, I think, are two splendid concrete examples of where this country was dependent for a time upon a foreign country, and that a country which became our enemy, Germany, and we were unable to produce those articles in competition with the foreign country because of the difference in our standard of wages. But the war, which was an absolute embargo, the strongest possible protection our Nation or any nation can have, opened up the opportunity for us to see what we could do. In the short space of four years we are producing both the dyes and the chemicals, not perhaps of such fine quality as those made in Germany, but sufficient to supply our needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. I thought I had 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman was recognized for five minutes. Otherwise the gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. FESS. It might be that we are not producing these elements in the fine type and quality that Germany was producing them, but I believe—and this is not braggadocio—that if the opportunity is afforded so that the genius of America can be put to its maximum, to the very limit, we shall produce as fine coloring materials as Germany ever did, and in abundant quantities, although we may have to take time to do it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. LEVER. I very fully agree with the suggestion of the gentleman, and two items are carried in this bill for that purpose, one the coloring item and the other the kelp item. Yet on a stand-up vote the Members of the gentleman's party voted almost unanimously against the coloring item.

Mr. FESS. I do not think it is the special duty of the Department of Agriculture to carry on that work, since we have a Bureau of Standards, especially adapted for just such expert investigation, and therefore I think this side of the House is not subject to the friendly criticism of my friend, who, I think, is generally fair.

Mr. LEVER. I try to be fair. There is absolutely no duplication between the work of the Bureau of Chemistry and that of the Bureau of Standards, so far as I am informed, and I put in the RECORD a year or so ago a statement by the Department of Commerce, perhaps the statement of Dr. Stratton himself, the Director of the Bureau of Standards, showing that that was true.

Mr. REBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REBER. The gentleman made a statement a moment ago as to our chemicals and dyes not having attained the efficiency and quality that those of Germany had attained before the war. I wish to state to the House and for the information of the gentleman, if I may, that the dyes that are being produced in the United States, from my own practical knowledge, are better than any dyes that we ever got from Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. I want to applaud that statement, because it is a revelation of a fact that I was not aware of and at which I am very happy. I did not know that we had reached that stage of efficiency, and I am glad to have the assurance of one who knows that we have. Now, the big thing is not to forfeit the opportunity to continue.

Along the lines of that suggestion that I made a moment ago is this, and I would like to have the thoughtful attention of the membership for just a moment: The acreage out of which we produce the foodstuffs of the world can not be enlarged to a very great extent in the future. We shall reclaim, it is true, some of the swamp lands and shall irrigate some of the arid lands, and we will thereby add to the acreage in a degree. However, this country will not very greatly add to the available cultivable acreage. But our population is growing by leaps and bounds, as is apparent to all of us. This fact means that the consumptive power is increasing most rapidly, both in increased desires and increased numbers, while our productive power must be limited. Only two considerations will meet this problem: First, the acreage out of which we produce it, and, second, the scientific application of the newer views to increase the production of the available acreage. And while this Congress may be able to increase in a degree the acreage from which we produce the foodstuffs of America, yet the thing we ought to think most about is how to make the acreage produce double or treble or quadruple the amount that we produce now. It can be done, and I take it all will admit that it must be done. If there is from any committee a suggestion that through the expenditure of some money to carry on investigation a plan or discovery may be found whereby we can increase the productivity of the acreage, we ought not only to vote for it because it is an institution already established, but we ought to vote for it because it is an institution designed to increase a going concern and to meet the multiplying needs of the race. The item under consideration is designed to do this, and if fertilizer is a source out of which we are to multiply our capacity to produce, and thus make the acre produce twice or three or four times what it now produces, that is, make it produce to the maximum, then you do no wiser thing than to give this aid and thus help to reach the maximum production. This proposition is certainly incontrovertible, that consumption is growing from the need of the race, not only in the increase of desires but in the multiplication of the race. Consumption is not a constant but a continuously increasing quantity, while production based on acreage is a somewhat fixed quantity. In other words, demand is growing and will continue to grow, while supply will be at a standstill unless we find a way to so cultivate the acreage that the unit of production will be greatly increased. For that reason, while I sympathize very much with my friend from Texas in his desire to curtail expenditure, yet I want to know whether we have gotten all there is to be found before I vote against this item. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I agree in part with the general statement of the gentleman who has just addressed us [Mr. FESS]. We should develop our industries as far as it is practical to do so, but we are not confronted here primarily with the necessity of passing upon fundamental government or economic problems. This is a concrete proposition as to whether or not the Members of this Congress shall do that which I dare say no practical business man would do if he were putting up the money out of his own funds. There is a necessity, of course, for governmental exploration and activity in many lines, but if we are to command respect for the work of the Government we must use the same sort of sound business judgment in expending the public money that a hard-headed, practical man displays in expenditures in his own business.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not just now. I will in a minute. Now, I leave it to the common sense of the Members here that if you had spent three years and some hundreds of thousands of dollars in investigating a proposition, and at the end of that time it should be disclosed from your experiments that the commodity which you had hoped to produce could not be economically produced in this sort of way, or at least you had not discovered that it could be, and your own common sense and experimentation should tell you that there was no reasonable hope that it could be done, what would you do? Let us look at this as a practical proposition. I submit that it is absurd to say that we can go out into the ocean and get this wet seaweed, bring it in and dry it, and convert it into its chemical elements, extracting its potash at a price which will enable us to compete with those sections of the world where nature has already concentrated potash in great deposits, where it may be mined. With all due respect, I say, it strikes me as an absurd proposition. Now, I agree that as far as it is practical we should make our country self-sustaining, but we can not go to the extreme of expending money and energy in trying to produce something at a cost far greater than that at which we can purchase it, and I do not understand that any school of political philosophers in any age of the world have ever undertaken to support such a position as that. Now I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. I simply want to suggest to the gentleman that the application of strict business rules to the question of actual profit from the direct expenditure of the dollars and cents of the appropriations in this bill would destroy every one of these appropriations. The gentleman overlooks the fact that the Department of Agriculture is purely a scientific institution, conducting scientific investigations which no private concern has engaged in or could afford to engage in as a matter of commercial profit.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly; but after you have pursued your investigation to the conclusion of the inquiry which prompted the investigation and report that the thing is a failure so far and there is nothing in the situation upon which to base hope, why ask that Congress appropriate the money to run the experiment for another year?

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The committee has not made any such report. The report that the committee brings in is that the potash alone is not a profitable commercial proposition, but that the so-called by-products will pay the cost of manufacture. Now, I put this proposition to the gentleman——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Do not take up all my time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will ask to have the gentleman's time extended if he needs it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All right.

Mr. HAUGEN. If you are engaged in the manufacture or production of a highly desired article and you found that the by-products would pay the expense of the manufacture, would it not be wise to continue the operation of the plant?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not concede the premise, but I will answer the gentleman upon the assumption that the premise has been established. If I were conducting an investigation purely as an investigation and had determined that the plan was feasible and that my investigation had disclosed it, I would report back the results of my investigation and stop the expenditure of money for the investigation. Now, I do not understand that the gentleman contemplates that the Government shall go into the manufacture of potash and the by-products of that manufacture as an industry to be permanently operated by the Federal Government. I understand that the Federal Government has undertaken to investigate certain questions and explore certain fields seeking a domestic supply of potash, among them kelp. I understand from the gentleman that he is able upon his responsibility as the chairman of this committee to report to this Congress and to the country at large that the conversion of kelp is a feasible field for industry to enter. Now, if you are able to do that, and you do not contemplate that the Government shall produce but merely explore and experiment, why not take our hands out of the Federal Treasury and let industry pursue the project as a desirable field to enter? Somebody must pay this money which you are asking for in this item. [Applause.] Either way you take it, it seems to me this appropriation ought to stop.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman's understanding of the situation were entirely correct I think I should agree with him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All debate is closed, and the question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 29, noes 51.

Accordingly the motion to strike out the paragraph was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Entomology: One entomologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk and executive assistant, $2,250; 1 administrative assistant, $2,250; 1 editor, $2,250; 1 financial clerk, $1,800; 4 clerks, class four; 7 clerks, class three; 16 clerks, class two; 22 clerks, class one; 8 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 insect delineator, $1,600; 2 insect delineators, at $1,400 each; 2 entomological draftsmen, at $1,400 each; 1 entomological draftsman, $1,080; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 entomological preparator, $1,000; 4 entomological preparators, at $840 each; 8 entomological preparators, at 720 each; 7 entomological preparators, at $600 each; 1 laborer, $1,080; 2 messengers or laborers, at $900 each; 1 messenger or laborer, $840; 3 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 6 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 laborer, $540; 1 laborer, $480; 2 charwomen, at $480 each; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $124,010.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the increase in the salary of one entomologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000, in line 24, page 55. That is an increase from $4,500 to $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer an amendment to make the salary $4,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 23, after the colon, insert "one entomologist, who shall be chief of the bureau, $4,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts, $95,780: Provided, That $9,600 of said sum shall be available for the investigation of insects affecting the pecan and method of control of same.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, line 4, strike out "$95,780" and insert in lieu thereof "$105,780."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the department asks that this sum be increased $10,000, and the committee thinks that the request should be granted.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask some member of the committee if this appropriation is for the service of the entomologists at the various stations which were established a few years ago? I would like to know if the station at North East, Pa., in the heart of the Erie County grape belt, is to be maintained under this appropriation?

Mr. HAUGEN. This amendment is for the purpose of increasing the amount in the bill by $10,000, bringing the total up to $15,000. This sum is needed in connection with the campaign against the Japanese beetle, a dangerous insect pest of orchards and other fruit trees, recently introduced in this country. At the time the estimate of $5,000 was submitted the insect occurred more or less abundantly over some 10,000 acres, as compared with the known infestation of 600 or 700 acres in the preceding fall. The beetles are now known to be present over an area of approximately 25,000 acres.

Mr. SHREVE. I will ask the gentleman, if he can tell me, Is it the intention of the department to maintain the service in the Erie County grape belt?

Mr. HAUGEN. The data furnished me does not give that information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the section to which the gentleman refers the one for which provision was made when the gentleman was in Congress several years ago?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; as a Member at that time, which was about six years ago, I had inserted an amendment providing the sum of $3,000 for the purpose of establishing an entomologist at North East, Pa.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has that appropriation been reduced?

Mr. SHREVE. For many years the Government had carried these appropriations, but for some reason afterwards the appropriation was dropped.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I recall correctly, the section of country to which the gentleman refers is one of the important grape-growing sections of the United States.

Mr. SHREVE. It is probably the greatest section of the country for the growing of Concord grapes, which reaches its highest expression in the form of grape juice.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell us why the appropriation was shut off?

Mr. SHREVE. I never knew; I took it up when I came to Congress with the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, who very willingly and readily assented to the amendment and who recognized the great necessity for it. I might say that my remarks at that time cover the conditions as they exist to-day. We had the assistance of the Department of Agriculture for several years, and I might say that the grape growers of that vicinity would have been out of business long ago if it had not been for the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has not been answered by the gentleman from Iowa as to whether this station is to be continued. I presume it is, but I should like to know myself, because prohibition is about to be established and the grape industry is still to be fostered. Grape juice is coming in while fermented liquor is going out. The gentleman from Iowa ought to be able to tell us whether or not we may lose this station in Pennsylvania, for which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] had provision made when he was here before.

Mr. HAUGEN. I regret to say that I am not able to state whether this work will be continued at a certain station or not.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read a telegram from one of the largest manufacturers in my district. I asked a few days ago something about the situation, and this is the reply:

WESTFIELD, N. Y., May 28, 1919.

Hon. MILTON W. SHREVE,
Washington, D. C.:

We estimate that 15,000 tons of grapes were used last fall for unfermented grape juice, and 6,000 tons for food products such as jam and jelly. We have no information on wine production, but know that the quantity made in New York State, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Michigan was small.

WELCH GRAPE JUICE CO.

Mr. HAUGEN. Has the work been continued at this station or has it been neglected?

Mr. SHREVE. No; it has not been neglected; it has been a splendid work under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. And the proposition is to continue the work?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; that is what my people are here inquiring of me—whether or not the work is to be continued during the next two years.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman appreciates that 20,000 people are employed in the Department of Agriculture. There are thousands of projects of importance. The committee could not take the time to ascertain exactly where every dollar is to be expended and what projects are to be continued. I think the gentleman can be assured that his project will be continued.

Mr. SHREVE. I thank the gentleman for his kindly assurance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the speech I made on this subject in the Sixty-third Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The following is the speech referred to:

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of restoring to the grape belt, on the southern shore of Lake Erie, in Erie County, Pa., a station which was removed during 1913. For many years the Government has maintained a station at North East for the purpose of studying insect pests in the vineyards. I can safely say that the fact that the vineyard business is alive to-day is entirely owing to the Government assistance which we have had. Mr. Johnson was stationed there for many years, and he seems to have had a faculty of studying out ways to combat all the inspect pests. He did this up to the time that he left the service, which was entirely of his own accord. During the last year the grape-berry moth has infested this district. I will say that this moth can be found in all parts of the world. In fact, last year the entomologist of France, Mr. Marechal, came to this country and visited our district for the purpose of investigating the grape-berry moth. Even Mr. Johnson himself, in an article which he published at the end of his labors in 1912, declared that he knew nothing about it, that the grape-berry moth had been largely misunderstood. In this article he says:

"The grape-berry moth (Polychrosis viteana Clem.) is an insect enemy of the grape of long standing in the vineyards of the Lake Erie Valley. Since the first reports of its serious injury to the grape crop near Hudson, Ohio, in 1868, it has been an almost continual menace to grape production in vineyards located along the shores of Lake Erie from Sandusky, in Ohio, eastward into Pennsylvania and New York. Most of the data dealing with this insect covers a series of life-history records and field experiments conducted during the seasons from 1907 to 1909, inclusive, in connection with the investigations of the grape rootworm and other insect pests of the grapevine which have been carried on at North East, Pa., by the section of the Bureau of Entomology engaged in deciduous fruit insect investigations under the direction of Mr. A. L. Quaintance.

"During the seasons of 1907 and 1908 the investigation of the grape rootworm occupied the greater part of the time of the force engaged in the study of grape pests. For this reason the life-history studies covering those seasons were rather fragmentary. During the season of 1909, however, the junior author devoted the greater share of his time to a detailed study of the life history of this pest. From the records secured by him in this relation the data covering the various stages of a large number of individuals, presented under the topic of 'Seasonal history for 1909,' have been compiled.

"Recommendations offered for the control of this insect in regard to the time and manner of making spray applications are based upon the data obtained in the study of the life history and habits of the grape-berry moth during this investigation, correlated with the field experiments and observations covering that period. Since these life-history studies have shown considerable deviations from those previously recorded in regard to the time of appearance of certain stages of the insect and in the number of broods each season, it has been necessary to revise our ideas somewhat as to the relative importance of the spray applications formerly recommended; and since suitable opportunities have not presented themselves for a thorough trial of this revised spray schedule, some of the recommendations along this line are offered rather in the form of suggestions than as definitely demonstrated and proved methods.

"At the present state of our knowledge of the habits of this pest and of the methods that have been suggested and employed for its control it is impossible to recommend any one method which of itself has given results that are as satisfactory as could be wished."

Mr. Johnson says that they have been in error in their studies and investigations of the proper means of eradicating this pest. Now, in my own district, where we have 10,000 or 15,000 acres of grapes, the damage last year amounted to several hundred thousand dollars, and I have a number of telegrams from our people which I wish to read. The first is from Mr. George E. Pierce, who is a wholesale dealer in grapes:

NORTH EAST, PA., March 6, 1914.

M. W. SHREVE, Washington, D. C.:

I understand there is a movement to reestablish a Government station in this county. I investigated grape pests. Please use your utmost efforts in its favor. Some of the best located and cultivated vineyards are being cut down on account of berry moths, and the pests are spreading rapidly. The output is decreasing. The acreage in the township is 7,000. My shipments in 1912 were 550 carloads; in 1913, 100 carloads.

GEORGE E. PIERCE.

I have also received the following telegrams:

NORTH EAST, PA., March 6, 1914.

Hon. MILTON W. SHREVE,
Washington, D. C.:

Grape industry in urgent need of expert help to find way to control pests that threaten its ruin. Do everything possible to secure the help needed. You know from personal knowledge grape crop is decreasing, whereas to supply market a substantial gain is required.

A. I. LOOP.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, including a special investigation of the Hessian fly and the chinch bug, $147,060, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 57, between lines 10 and 11, insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the European corn borer in Massachusetts, New York, and other States, and to provide means for the control, prevention, and spread of this insect in these States or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $250,000, which shall be immediately available."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the words "which shall be immediately available." I am not particular about that part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw the language "which shall be immediately available." Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, for the present I object.

Mr. LEVER. I was about to object myself.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, we are now along after the 1st of June. This money will be available the 1st of July if the bill is passed before that time. It will make a difference of only a week, probably. In all probability the bill will not be passed before the 1st of July. Why take up the time of making this money available for only a week? The department could not expend it, anyway, before a week.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he offer the language without those words.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment without those words, and ask that it be so modified.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, between lines 10 and 11, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the European corn borer in Massachusetts, New York, and other States, and to provide means for the control, prevention and spread of this insect in other States, or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rents outside of the District of Columbia, employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $250,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for this somewhat large appropriation and how much these States are doing themselves to eradicate or overcome the ravages of this pest.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the bill reported to the last Congress and passed by this House included an item of $25,000 for this purpose. A supplementary estimate asking for $500,000 was presented to the committee. The committee has recommended $250,000, so that there will be available $25,000 carried in another paragraph of the bill, and $250,000, making a total of $275,000. If the gentleman desires more information as to the absolute need for the appropriation, then I shall yield to the gentleman from his own State [Mr. DALLINGER], who is very familiar with it.

Mr. WALSH. Has not the chairman of the committee any information as to how much Massachusetts and New York are spending?

Mr. HAUGEN. Undoubtedly those two States will spend a large amount of money, but this pest is not confined to the two States mentioned. It is spreading all over the United States. The gentleman knows the importance of the corn crop of the country, and he knows that if we are going to meet this proposition we should do so at the beginning; we should nip it in the bud, as we have been doing with the citrus-fruit canker and as we undertook to do with the cotton-boll weevil. The committee, in recommending the $250,000 on the urgent suggestion of the department to make it $500,000, did what it thought was best. If the gentleman will examine the photograph that I have here, he will appreciate the danger that we are facing.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I want to say in regard to this pest that it started in Massachusetts and New York and it has already spread out to North Dakota. This is the only item in the bill that I have received any communication from my district about, urging that we hold this appropriation in the bill. Inasmuch as $397,000 are appropriated elsewhere in the bill for the boll weevil or pink bollworm down in Mexico, to cooperate with the Mexicans to exterminate, I believe the North in this case should have this appropriation, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know to what extent there has been cooperation.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read from the hearings. Dr. Howard stated, among other things:

We have conducted a survey during the past summer, and find that it has now spread to an area of about 300 square miles around Boston. It is a very difficult insect to control, for the reason that it is not confined to corn, but breeds in the stock of orchard grasses, ragweeds, dahlias, and every kind of annual plant which has stocks large enough, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $85,400.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 14, page 57, add the following words: "Provided, That $25,000 of the above sum of $85,400 be used for investigation of insects and worms affecting tobacco and for demonstration in destroying such insects and worms."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, in the Sixtieth Congress this item was in the Agricultural bill, for the investigation and improvement of methods of growing, producing, and handling tobacco, $23,180. That was a separate fund. That was continued during the Sixty-first Congress, except that the amount was $23,330, and was continued on down to the Sixty-third Congress, when the sum was $31,630.

After that this appropriation was put into a lump sum just as it reads in this paragraph, and after the appropriation had been put into this lump sum I do not think there has been a proper investigation of those insects affecting the tobacco crop over the country. Now, the tobacco crop of the United States is a large crop. We raise tobacco from Connecticut to Florida and from Missouri to the Atlantic coast, and we ask simply the sum of $25,000 to carry on these investigations. The Department of Agriculture uses arsenate of lead for the purpose of destroying what is called the tobacco hornworm and other insects or worms affecting tobacco, and in order properly to use this arsenate of lead it is necessary for the Government to establish laboratories. It has one at Clarksville, Tenn., and, I think, one in Florida, and ought to have one in Connecticut, so men can go among the farmers and demonstrate to them how to use this remedy to kill tobacco worms and other insects. You put this sum, heretofore intended to be used for this purpose, in a lump sum and it is likely to be diverted, as I believe it has been heretofore, to other purposes, and I offer this amendment so as to make sure that this amount of $25,000—nothing is added to this appropriation whatever—is used for the purpose for which it was originally intended, and that is the investigation concerning insects affecting the tobacco crop of the United States. For that reason I ask the committee to separate this fund and give the tobacco investigation a separate fund, so we may know it will go to and be used for that purpose for which it was originally intended, and I hope that the committee will adopt the amendment. As I stated, it does not add a single cent to the appropriation in this item, but there is $60,400 left for the investigation of insects affecting other southern field crops. Now, I think that one of those stations should be established in Connecticut, and I think one west of the Mississippi River for the purpose of these investigations and demonstrations. I ask the House to pass this amendment so that this fund may be appropriated and used for the purpose for which it was originally intended.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph under consideration and is not in order. The paragraph under consideration relates to investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, and so forth. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky provides for demonstration of methods to destroy insects affecting tobacco. Inasmuch as the section itself is limited to investigation an amendment relating to demonstration of work would not be germane to the paragraph. For that reason I make the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that point of order is good. Probably there is a point of order that might be made to the paragraph that might hold good, but based simply upon the proposition that it is not germane to the section it does not occur to me that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not care to make any extended argument on it. I merely call the attention of the chairman to the fact that to a paragraph providing for investigation, including among other things insects affecting tobacco and other southern field crops, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky is certainly germane. If that is the only point of order, it is not well taken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is a limitation upon the appropriation and clearly not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to submit this observation in behalf of the amendment. Here is an appropriation of $85,400 for an investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, and so forth. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky is simply a direction as to how a part of this fund should be expended. It simply provides that $25,000 of the amount appropriated shall be expended for the investigation of insects affecting tobacco, and, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] states, it is a limitation, or certainly a direction, as to how the money shall be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question? Does the gentleman from Tennessee think it would be germane to offer an amendment to authorize the shipment of tobacco or rice or sugar in connection with the investigation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not, Mr. Chairman; but I submit this amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky does not by any means go that far.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment provides for demonstration, whereas the paragraph provides for investigation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But, Mr. Chairman, the paragraph in question itself provides for an investigation of these insects. The amendment also provides for an investigation, and I submit it is perfectly proper to offer an amendment to this provision saying how the money so appropriated should be expended. It certainly seems to me to be germane to the paragraph in question, because it provides for an investigation and, as I understand, a demonstration, which, I submit, is necessary to establish the value of the investigation.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. Is it not a fact that this lump-sum fund of $85,000, or a like sum heretofore appropriated, has been used in demonstration as well as investigation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Unquestionably. Mr. Chairman, that is a fact.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to ask this question: Is there not a laboratory in your own district fitted up for the purpose of demonstrating the use of arsenate of lead in killing these insects?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true, and it has been in existence for several years. As the gentleman from Kentucky suggests, it is used in investigating work, and there is also demonstration, just as the gentleman from Kentucky provides in his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe the Chair had better hear the amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, I believe the Chair will see it provides only for a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair does not think that this is a limitation on the appropriation, because it does not reduce the amount of the appropriation. While the paragraph relates to the investigation of tobacco, it does not relate to the demonstration. And two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] relates to tobacco, but the paragraph relates only to the investigation of the subject and not to the demonstration of the subject. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment to strike out the word "demonstration."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by striking out the word "demonstration."

Mr. THOMAS. No. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by Mr. THOMAS: At the end of line 14, page 57, add the following words: "Provided, That $25,000 of the above sum of $85,400 be used for investigations of insects and worms affecting tobacco.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment by adding, after the word "tobacco," the words "wherever grown throughout the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONERGAN offers the following amendment to the Thomas amendment: At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. THOMAS add the following: "wherever grown throughout the United States."

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to ask the gentleman's attention to page 26 of the bill, lines 6 and 7, in which is carried an appropriation of $30,000, and last year $27,000 was used for the very purpose indicated in the amendment of the gentleman. So if the amendment carried it would cut the appropriation $2,000. I take it the gentleman would rather have the appropriation $27,000. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask the gentleman if that amount of money was actually used in this work?

Mr. HAUGEN. Twenty-seven thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask if that was used?

Mr. HAUGEN. It was used. The amount is $27,800.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think it was used. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LONERGAN), the committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 37.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. THOMAS), the committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting truck crops, including insects affecting the potato, sugar beet, cabbage, onion, tomato, beans, peas, etc., and insects affecting stored products, $84,960.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 57, line 19, strike out "$84,960" and insert "$134,960."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, about a year ago the department, through the Bureau of Entomology, undertook to determine the feasibility of eradicating the sweet potato weevil, which threatened to destroy the sweet potato industry in many sections of the South. More than 30,000 farms have been inspected in Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, and northern Texas. The actual eradication work is now in progress in Florida and southern Georgia, and highly satisfactory results are being secured. I am quoting from a statement of the department.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the chairman of the committee has spared me the necessity of offering my amendment. He has taken the ground from under my feet. I want to say I proposed to make a similar amendment in response to the request of the agricultural department of the State of Delaware. The State Board of Agriculture of Delaware addressed to me the following letter:

STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE,
Dover, Del., May 19, 1919.

Hon. C. R. LAYTON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully called to the fact that the sweet potato industry in Texas, Louisiana, and Florida is seriously menaced by the sweet potato weevil, and there is danger that the trouble will spread to all the sweet potato growing regions of the country. It is believed that steps should be taken at this time by the United States Government to control this insect if possible.

Many entomologists believe that the insect may be entirely eradicated. It is estimated that the sweet potato crop is worth more than $100,000,000 annually, and it seems worth while therefore to do everything possible to save it.

Thanking you in anticipation for your interest, I am,

Very truly, yours,

WESLEY WEBB, Secretary.

I want to say just a few words in this connection, that not only is this a large crop on the alluvial soils along the Gulf of Mexico, in Texas, and in some of Florida and Louisiana, but it is one of the great growing crops of the States of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. Owing to the discovery of cold storage, we have been enabled to store up for the use of the people in the large cities certain products. We have also now devised another proposition, and that is a warm storage. The sweet potato, as many of you possibly know, is stored up in the fall of the year in warm storage houses and kept for the supply of the cities during the winter months and let out according to the public demand. I am glad that this appropriation has been provided for in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Biological Survey: One biologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,000; 1 chief clerk and executive assistant, $1,800; 1 administrative assistant, $2,250; 1 executive assistant, $1,800; 1 financial clerk, $1,600; 3 clerks class 3; 6 clerks class 2; 1 clerk, $1,260; 10 clerks class 1; 1 clerk, $1,100; 1 clerk, $1,080; 3 clerks at $1,000 each; 4 clerks at $900 each; 1 clerk, $840; 1 clerk, $720; one preparator, $1,200; 1 preparator, $900; 1 messenger, $720; 1 photographer, $1,300; one game warden, $1,200; 2 messenger boys at $480 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 1 laborer, $600; 2 charwomen at $240 each; in all, $55,970.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on line 12, page 59, "one biologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,000," it being an increase which is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 59, line 11, after the colon, insert "One biologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry, and for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten, $389,440: Provided, That of this sum $15,000 shall be used for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests and other public lands: And provided also, That of this sum not less than $123,800 shall be used on the national forests and the public domain in destroying wolves, coyotes, and other animals injurious to agriculture, animal husbandry, and wild game: And provided further, That of this sum not more than $125,000 shall be used on the public lands, national forests, and elsewhere in the Western and Northwestern States for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory wild animals.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico will be recognized.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, the question has been asked here repeatedly in connection with the consideration of a good many of these items what, if any, cooperation have the different States given in connection with the work? In the behalf of the State of New Mexico, I would say that in January, 1918, the State of New Mexico, in connection with the Bureau of Biology, cooperated in the destruction of predatory animals to the extent of $25,000. The governor of our State authorized the council of defense to take out from the war fund, so called, that amount in order to cooperate with this bureau in the eradication of animals such as are named in this paragraph.

I have before me a set of resolutions which I ask leave to extend in the RECORD, together with my remarks. They say:

Asking for appropriations for destruction of predatory animals.

Whereas we believe that the work of exterminating predatory wild animals and range-destroying rodents carried on under the direction of the Biological Survey during the past few years has been very successful, and that, under the thorough organization and efficient plans of that bureau, this evil will be largely minimized, if not entirely removed, provided the different States will heartily cooperate with the Federal Government in its plan of work; and

Whereas at the present time the funds appropriated by Congress for this purpose are wholly inadequate to meet the real requirements of the Biological Survey in carrying on this work, and on that account the results obtained are not satisfactory in most sections of the West; and

Whereas it is our belief that the present bounty laws of the States should be repealed, and in lieu thereof the various States should, through their several legislatures, enact laws appropriating sufficient money to equal the amounts to be expended by the Federal Government in the different States, and that such State appropriations should be expended under the direction of the Biological Survey, to be handled in conjunction with the funds appropriated by Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved by the New Mexico Cattle and Horse Growers' Association in convention assembled at Albuquerque, N. Mex., March 25, 26, and 27, 1919, That we urge Congress to appropriate the additional sum of $300,000 for immediate use in the extermination of predatory wild animals and range-destroying rodents, and that we petition the various States to make appropriations at least equal to the amounts expended by the Federal Government in the various States, said money, both Federal and State, to be expended under the direction of the Biological Survey.

One of the serious problems confronting those engaged in promoting increased production of food crops and meat animals was the tremendous damage to growing crops and to range grasses caused by prairie dogs and other rodents, and the loss of cattle, sheep, and poultry from wild animals. Investigations by the United States Biological Survey show that the annual losses in the United States from predatory wild animals amounted to several hundred million dollars, and the loss from rodents is probably greater. The annual loss in New Mexico was variously estimated at from fifteen to twenty-five million. The method used by the Biological Survey has been perfected by years of investigation and experimenting and are very successful. The "kill" of prairie dogs is generally from 85 to 95 per cent by the use of poisoned oats. They followed up the work by using poisoned rolled barley and later by using fumigants, such as bisulphide of carbon, which if carefully and thoroughly used a good start has been made. Owners of lands and farmers and stockmen have been shown that prairie dogs can be exterminated at a cost of about 4 cents per acre for infested areas. The infested areas are so large that it will require several years of intense work to completely eradicate the pest. The work of trapping and poisoning predatory wild animals is being carried on and shows good results.

The Biological Survey has cooperative arrangements in several States for exterminating rodents and predatory wild animals, and in every case the results are much more satisfactory and less expensive than under the bounty system. I have before me now a partial report made by the men in charge of this work in the southwestern part of the country through the council of defense of the State of New Mexico.

In the spring of 1918 the governor of the State authorized the use of $25,000 from the fund known in our State as the war fund, and under an agreement covering the plan for the cooperative work as executed. Under this agreement $10,000 of this amount, in conjunction with an equal amount by the Department of Agriculture, was set aside and applied in reducing losses in live stock due to predatory wild animals, an increased force of hunters was placed in the field, trapping was resorted to by this experiment; the results have been very satisfactory. State hunters have a total of 1,972 days, at a cost of $5,741.44. They have taken 642 coyotes, 124 bob cats, 14 gray wolves, 5 predatory bears, including 3 grizzlies. The average cost of animals in June was $88.87; in July, $8.53; August, $5.93. The Government operations in the State during the same periods cost $9,225.70, and resulted in the killing of 417 coyotes, 77 bob cats, 41 gray wolves, 13 mountain lions, and 2 bears. No reasonable estimate of damage inflicted by predatory animals that has been advanced can show anything other than returned for this investment a very high rate of interest. The estimate generally accepted—and it is conservative, indeed, in view of the present high value of live stock—is that each gray wolf destroys annually $1,000 worth of live stock; each mountain lion, $500; each coyote and bob cat, $50 worth; predatory bears may be rated in the same class with wolves. On this basis the saving represented in this cooperative work is nearly nine times the amount of expenditure. Thus you will observe that the estimated saving to the people of the Nation, you might state, is $131,500, at a cost of about $20,000.

I have before me a copy of a resolution adopted by the New Mexico Cattle and Horse Association, which met in Albuquerque, N. Mex., on March 25, 1919, in which they ask for an additional sum in this appropriation of $300,000, and they say, in part:

We believe that the work of exterminating predatory animals and range-destroying rodents carried on under the direction of the Biological Survey during the past few years has been very successful, and that under the thorough organization and efficient plan of that bureau in cooperation with the States this evil will be largely minimized, if not entirely removed.

The New Mexican Horse Growers' and Cattle Growers' Association, in convention assembled, asked me, I say, to introduce an amendment to this paragraph authorizing an appropriation of $300,000 for this purpose. I have refrained from presenting such an amendment, because I know that the department knows what it is doing, and we are expected to have faith in the department, and I believe that this is not the proper time to ask for an increase in these appropriations. But I am glad that in this bill are contained other items which go toward the destruction of rodents and also to the destruction of obnoxious weeds mentioned in a former paragraph—weeds such as the loco and other weeds that go toward destroying the meat-animal industry in this country.

We are all interested in that industry. We send our wool—20,000,000 or 25,000,000 pounds—to the cities of Philadelphia and Boston, so that those merchants can have that product, which will increase the employment of their people. We send our meat to the packing houses. All the American people are interested in that. There was a time when the people did not care how many animals were destroyed by predatory beasts, because meat was then plentiful. But since meat has become almost a luxury, since sheep are worth all the way from $10 to $15, instead of from $1.50 to $2.50, we urge that the department give us experts in cooperation with our own activities for the extermination of these pests.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks by inserting these resolutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the resolutions indicated in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the resolutions referred to:

THE NEW MEXICO CATTLE AND HORSE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
Albert, N. Mex., May 18, 1919.

Hon. B. C. HERNANDEZ,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Perhaps the following matter we are bringing to your valued notice herewith has passed that stage of its being a stern necessity that is reluctantly supported by a few staunch advocates of advancement and better methods, but the cooperative work now being done by the Federal and State authorities in the eradication of rodents and predatory animals, having had to take a chance on as thin ice as it did at our last legislature, makes me write you this letter of support in the effort that we are sure that you will make, for the continuation of the Federal aid in this splendid cooperative work, so well being carried on by S. E. Piper, who in this line of work stands second to none, both in his knowledge of the work, as well as his wonderful ability in organization and the successful handling of difficult situations so often met with in the field work. Speaking from our own experience as far as that has extended along this line, we are convinced that the benefit derived to the State is far beyond its usual estimate. We would not give it up for ten times the cost, and New Mexico could not have a worse loss than for the Federal Government to withdraw its part of the fund usually appropriated.

The far-reaching effect for the amount of range practically created, though its redemption from a state of unproductive aridity, in prairie dog infested sections, if allowed to so continue, would not only be of incalculable damage to the present live-stock industry now existing, but be an actual menace if neglected longer to its ultimate destruction. We feel sure that your own practical experience in the stock business will make you a strong champion of this being increased rather than cut down; that the only sound economic business way that the State keep its place as an agricultural and live-stock producer is through the progressive methods now being so successfully carried on, in so far as the appropriation will permit, by Mr. Piper and his collaborators.

Very truly, yours,

T. E. MITCHELL.

Resolution asking for Government cooperation in eradicating loco weed.

Whereas since the introduction of the live-stock industry in the West the loco weed has been an ever-recurring menace to the industry, causing great losses of cattle and horses annually; and

Whereas it has been proven through experiments by the Poisonous Plant Bureau of the Department of Agriculture and by individual experiments of stock growers that the poisonous weed can be permanently eradicated by cutting off the plants a few inches below the surface of the ground: Therefore be it

Resolved by the New Mexico Cattle and Horse Growers' Association in regular convention assembled at Albuquerque, N. Mex. March 25, 26, and 27, 1919, That we petition the Department of Agriculture to cooperate with us in the eradication of the loco weed; and be it further

Resolved, That we petition the Congress of the United States to make adequate appropriation to the Department of Agriculture for the eradication of the poisonous plant; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief Forester, our Senators and Congressmen, and Dr. C. D. Marsh, of the Poisonous Plant Bureau.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto now close.

Mr. RAKER. Not at this time.

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RAKER. I want 20 minutes. It is very vital and important, and I think when the House hears me it will conform to my wishes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman always speaks interestingly and instructively, but I do not think the gentleman should have that time now.

Mr. RAKER. Let us not close the debate now. Let it go for 10 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will renew my request after 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 60, line 22, strike out the figures "$389,040" and insert "$489,440."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this matter is of considerable importance and one worthy of the attention of the committee. We are all members of the Committee of the Whole, and here is where we get an opportunity to present matters that have not been presented or have not been fully presented to the committee in charge of the bill. Otherwise all we would have to do would be read a bill, or not read it, and have the House pass it, and the Committee of the Whole would be absolutely useless.

This item affects that which has been raised. After it has been grown, and after these seeds you have provided for have been planted, after the plowing of the land, and the sowing, and the tilling, the destruction then comes between that time and its harvest. We are asking not for a donation, not because the people in these localities have not provided for their own preservation and their own homes, but because of the fact that the Federal Government owns two-thirds of the adjoining land, upon which it has absolute control and upon which the private individual has none.

For instance, we will take a case in the State of California, and it is a good case for illustration: A man owns 160 acres adjoining, we will say, the public domain or a national forest. I want to get this to the attention of our western friends and the Members of this House who are in favor of giving the man who actually spends his money a fair deal and who believe that the Government should provide for its property the same as the individual. The squirrels or rodents upon that 160-acre tract of land must be destroyed by the private individual. If he fails to destroy the squirrels or rodents upon his land notice is served upon him through the board of supervisors. If he then fails to do it the district attorney makes application to the board, and the county destroys them itself, and then the man's property, if he does not pay this debt, no matter what it might be, is sold, the same as when a mortgage is placed upon it or a road is built upon a county highway, the same as State or county taxes. The people of our country have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in destroying the rodents upon their own individual land. But after you have destroyed rodents upon your own land, here is a territory, enormous in extent, owned by the Government, upon which the animals are raised, reared, and protected, and they come down like blackbirds upon the land again, and the farmer must keep on destroying them until his resources have all been exhausted.

Now, what we want is that the Government do its part to assist in the destruction of these rodents. It is vitally important, it is necessary, it ought to be done, and it should not be neglected. This bill should help provide the necessary means to assist. The committee, for whom we have the highest regard, were limited in the time which they had for the consideration of the bill that failed in the last session. There is nothing in the testimony with reference to these particular items. We are not making any accusation on that account, but it is just one of those things that went over. Now, we who are so vitally interested in this subject expected that this bill as reported at this session would contain the amount to which the Senate raised the item in the former bill; that is, an increase of $100,000. It has been explained that the committee could have no hearings at this session on account of the lack of time, and therefore it is not included, so we are asking to have the same amount placed upon the bill that the Senate placed upon it last year.

In this connection, so as to get the facts before the committee, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to have 5 minutes, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to have 5 minutes, and I to have 5 minutes for myself.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HAUGEN. I hope the gentleman will appreciate the fact that it is necessary to finish this bill as soon as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman to give me 10 minutes, and then I will quit.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to have any of this bargaining about time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I hope the gentleman will help us in expediting the passage of this bill.

Mr. RAKER. I can get time on other paragraphs. Gentlemen have been taking 15 and 20 minutes. Here is a vital question, and the facts ought to be gotten before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. The letter that I wrote to the Secretary is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 31, 1919.

Hon. DAVID F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am much interested in the item in the Agricultural appropriation bill which relates to the investigation of the food habits of North American birds and animals, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves and other animals injurious to agriculture and horticulture, with especial reference to the destruction of these predatory animals on the public lands, national forests, and elsewhere in the Western and Northwestern States and on the Pacific coast. I would be much pleased to have you furnish me with a statement—

1. The work that has been done.
2. The necessity for this appropriation.
3. The States that are asking for additional aid and cooperation.
4. The States that are this year asking aid for the first time.
5. The amount that the States are contributing to this work.

I have at different times taken this matter up with Mr. E. W. Nelson and Dr. Fisher, of the bureau, and would like to have a full statement so that I may be in a position to present the situation to the end that the Congress may recognize this splendid work.

Respectfully submitting the same, I am,

Very truly, yours, (Signed) JOHN E. RAKER.

Here is the reply:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, June 2, 1919.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RAKER: I have your letter of May 30, in which you request certain information concerning the item in the Agricultural appropriation bill under which the campaign of the department for the destruction of injurious mammals is being conducted.

The Bureau of Biological Survey estimates that prairie dogs and other injurious rodents cause an annual loss of crops and forage valued at $300,000,000 and that wolves and other predatory animals are responsible for the destruction annually of live stock valued at more than $20,000,000.

The bureau has an organized corps of hunters under expert supervision for the destruction of predatory animals. To the end of March, 1919, these men have captured 2,016 wolves, 75,103 coyotes, 10,033 bobcats, and 278 mountain lions. In addition, enormous numbers of coyotes and many bobcats have been killed by organized poisoning campaigns over great areas. The total result of this campaign, conducted in cooperation with many of the States has been the destruction of more than 200,000 predatory animals. It is estimated that, through the destruction of predatory animals during the calendar year 1918, live stock valued at more than $4,000,000 was saved. The skins of the predatory animals taken by hunters of the department are sold on Government account and more than $196,000 has been realized from this source.

In many sections of the West rodents destroy from 10 to 15 per cent of the total crops grown, and in some localities render successful agriculture impossible, even causing landowners to abandon their holdings. An extended and organized campaign, in cooperation with many of the Western States, is now in progress under the direction of the Biological Survey for the control of these rodents. In 1918 more than 100,000 farmers and landowners cooperated in this work, and a still greater number are cooperating during the present season. Estimates made by farmers and officials of agricultural colleges of the various States as a result of last year's campaign against rodents indicate a saving in crops of more than $13,000,000, in addition to the great increase in forage, due to the destruction of these animals over enormous acres of the western stock ranges. Thirteen States have been cooperating with the Biological Survey for several years in control of the injurious animals, and during the present year six additional States have requested the department to organize the work there, including Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Missouri. Seventeen States have either appropriated or otherwise provided funds for cooperation in the destruction of injurious animals. Owing to the fact that Government lands in the West are the principal breeding grounds for predatory and other injurious animals, a large number of the States are urging that the Government appropriate an amount equal to the sums contributed by them to the work. The funds of the various States, which have either been directly appropriated by the State legislatures or otherwise provided, for the present year amount to $1,172,000, as follows:

Arizona	$50,000.00
California	388,000.00
Colorado	65,085.00
Idaho	67,165.00
Kansas	3,954.00
Montana	103,700.00
Nebraska	3,388.80
Nevada	35,000.00
New Mexico	115,325.00
North Dakota	80,000.00
South Dakota	50,000.00
Oklahoma	5,000.00
Oregon	5,000.00
Texas	32,417.84
Utah	110,750.00
Washington	32,500.00
Wyoming	24,817.77
	1,172,103.41

If you desire any further information concerning this work, I shall be glad to supply it.

Very truly, yours, D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that over $1,000,000 has been appropriated by these States for the purpose of destroying these rodents. Over two-thirds of the land is owned by the Government, and this Government land is the breeding ground of these rodents. If the people do not destroy them upon their own land their land may be sold, but when they have destroyed them on their own land a new supply of these destructive animals will come back from the Government breeding grounds, come onto their lands and destroy their crops. As the Secretary says here, over 15 per cent of the crops are destroyed, and in many instances, to my personal knowledge, farmers have been compelled to leave their homes because of the destruction of crops upon their lands by these rodents, and I say it is only right and proper that this Government should deal properly with this subject and increase this appropriation $100,000. It ought to be $300,000 this year, and then $500,000 next year, because, as a matter of fact, with a real campaign of cooperation these rodents can be entirely wiped out. I have here an article which I am going to insert in the RECORD, showing where in my own county whole school districts have turned out—men, boys, women, and girls—using the poison at the proper time and destroying the rodents, so that the crops are saved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I am a little disappointed that the committee has shut me off. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I hope this appropriation will be placed on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. The article referred to is by Mr. FRENCH, which fully describes what is being done and the method, and is as follows:

[From the Alturas Plaindealer, Friday, May 23, 1919.]

ESTIMATED $1,000,000 DAMAGE TO MODOC FARMERS.

Following requests from the boards of supervisors of Modoc County as well as from the county horticultural commissioner for Federal and State aid in controlling ground squirrels, the greatest animal pest of crops in the northeastern counties of California, representatives of these two agencies were detailed to the work.

At the behest of G. H. Hecke, State commissioner of horticulture, the superintendent of rodent control of his commission, W. C. Jacobson, came to lend assistance, while the United States Biological Survey is represented by Edward Tallman, jr., of Berkeley.

During the past five years crews have been on national forests and public domain to assist ranchers and stockmen in their efforts to stem the depredations of the squirrel, and these agencies in turn sought the cooperation of those owning lands bordering the Government area. Not until the coming of the amended county horticultural commissioners act of 1917 was it possible to procure the necessary cooperation to make the work of any particular value. This act provided for the abatement of a nuisance occasioned by the presence of ground squirrels, and under this statute remarkable progress has been made in many of the counties of California. Modoc County, in addition to being endowed with one of the most destructive species of ground squirrels, has enormous acreages of vacant lands belonging to some one, but which are not treated for squirrel in the ordinary course of events. To remedy this condition and in order to make the assistance from State and Federal agencies the more helpful, a plan of drive has been set forth which has taken with great favor in all localities where presented.

The area included for a drive is decided upon by the farmers in the locality, and it is entirely up to those representing the community by attending the meetings called for the purpose as to whether a community shall have a squirrel drive or not. If favorable those detailed to assist are ready to devote their time and energy toward making it a success. The results which the ranchers in the localities already experimenting with such a type of control methods have met bring the procedure far out of the experimental stage. Progressive communities throughout the State are availing themselves of the assistance being rendered in this manner.

Committees for each school district are chosen for the various localities by those at the meeting, the duties of said committees being to line up all landowners willing to participate with all their help and as much stock as will be needed to accommodate their men; also, the nonresident tracts, the amount of poison each will need, the negligent landowners, who have always been lax in controlling squirrels and who likely will be unfavorable at the time of the drive. These latter are dealt with by serving them with a legal notice to abate the nuisance occurring upon their holdings, which precludes the possibility of their escape from the duty that other members of the community have taken upon themselves. Every public-spirited, whole-souled, progressive landowner does not hesitate for an instant, but rather considers the drive a most satisfactory expedient in the control of a pest which is annually costing the State of California upward of $30,000,000 and Modoc County no less than $1,000,000.

The residents of a community are divided into suitably sized crews and all of the land within the confines of the area specified is treated without regard for boundaries.

What does it cost the landowner? Just his time and the amount of poison used in treating his place. Who decides the amount of poison he should use? A committee of his fellow citizens. This entirely is a ranchers' own organization, all outside agencies merely acting as advisory assistants and to supply labor and materials for the areas with which they are directly concerned, namely, State and Government lands. The basis of estimate for amount of poison is about 75 to 100 pounds of poisoned grain per section of 640 acres. Poisoned grain is prepared by the office of county horticultural commissioner and cooperating agencies at actual cost, which is brought down to the low figure of from 12 to 13 cents per pound, due to the purchase of supplies in large quantities at Government contract prices, through the rodent-control division of the State commission of horticulture. If that is all there is to it, then why can't each landowner work individually? They have been working just so for the past 50 years, and lack of concerted, cooperative work simultaneously has brought about only partial results, and it has, furthermore, been impossible for State and Federal bureaus to work their areas at the same time.

By means of a drive all types of land are treated at one and the same time; thereby danger of reinfestation back and forth is eliminated. The same degree of control is arrived at for all acreages concerned in the drive, and a greater permanency to the work is established, if experience with previous drives can be taken for examples, where a clean-up of from 75 per cent to 90 per cent has been made in from one to three days. It means that everyone benefits from the work of all others without danger of the neighbors' squirrels being any more numerous than our own. The cost is reduced to a minimum and relieves for a considerable time the need for repetitive poisoning due to reinfestation. Many who are zealous to protect their crops are in this way safeguarded and need not feel that nothing is being done on adjoining lands.

Modoc County has the following drives under way: Surprise Valley from Washington school district south to the Lassen County line, including Cedarville, Eagleville, and the intervening lands between the lakes and the mountains. The drive starts off with a poison mix on May 28. Big Valley and Round Valley follow during the first week of June. It is here that enthusiasm is unbounded, for they went through just such a drive during 1918 and hotfoot for it this year. Then the Davis Creek-Goose Lake Valley drive, starting about the 10th of June. These drives last for one or more days, depending upon the amount of land to be covered and the number of men available. Notices in the form of posters will announce the dates of the poison mixes and drives.

Committees have been working hard and these public-spirited men are worthy of a great deal of commendation for the zeal with which they lined up their school districts.

Young squirrels are out now over most of the county, and as soon as the natural feed begins to ripen and go to seed poisoned grain will be taken with great avidity. The drives have been at times as to avail of a period when maximum results can be obtained with a minimum of effort. Get in touch with the committeemen in the above districts and learn more about the drives.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] increasing the appropriation for the destruction of predatory animals and injurious rodents by $100,000, in spite of the fact that it is too small, because the amount allowed in this bill is totally inadequate. As a matter of fact good business judgment would insist that at least $300,000 additional be appropriated for this purpose. The committee, it is true, authorized an appropriation of $389,440, which is the amount estimated for by the Department of Agriculture, but that estimate was made over a year ago, and the conditions have greatly changed since that time. The people of the stock-growing States have at last realized the immense value of the work done by the Biological Survey in the destruction of predatory animals and injurious rodents, and because of that realization the people are now willing, as individuals and by States and counties, to contribute funds for cooperative work with the Government. The Biological Survey is to-day embarrassed by offers of cooperation which it can not meet on any equitable basis. The report of the Secretary of Agriculture shows that 17 Western States have appropriated or otherwise provided more than $1,172,000 for cooperative work with the survey in the extermination of these noxious animals.

An appropriation by Congress of half a million dollars would still leave the stock-raising States of the West offering to assist in more than twice that sum; and it is entirely proper in this, as it is in other matters, for the United States to go at least half way, particularly where the Government owns such large areas of forest and public lands which serve as breeding grounds for these injurious animals. We must not forget that the States have no control over nor any power to tax these Government lands. I am quite positive that if the wolves and coyotes and prairie dogs could be eliminated from the national forests the increase in grazing fees would more than pay for all of the expense of exterminating them.

Over $20,000,000 each year is lost to this country in cattle and sheep killed by the predatory animals on the ranges; and yet it is entirely possible to eradicate these animals and save that amount of meat supply. Last year the organized hunters of the Biological Survey killed 2,000 wolves, 75,000 coyotes, 10,000 bobcats, and 278 mountain lions. Live stock valued at over $4,000,000 was saved by the destruction of these predatory animals, yet the expense to the United States for this good work was only about $100,000. Certainly that was a good investment. Gentlemen from city districts who are always interested in an adequate supply of meat should heartily support this amendment, because it means a greater meat production.

But the damage done by predatory animals is small compared to the loss created by injurious rodents. It has been conservatively estimated that crops and forage valued at $300,000,000 are annually destroyed in the United States by rodents.

That interesting little prairie dog which one sees from the car windows as he travels over the West destroys grass enough to feed a million cattle and a million sheep. Exterminate them and the meat production of America will be increased by that amount. Last year the Biological Survey spent about $150,000 in the campaign against prairie dogs and other rodents, which resulted in a saving of at least $13,000,000 in crops alone. Is there anywhere else in this appropriation bill that a greater return can be shown for the money?

This is a work that should be completed. It is possible to exterminate the gray wolf within five years, and the Biological Survey will do it if Congress appropriates the money. It is possible to completely eradicate the prairie dog—to make it as extinct as the dodo. The grass they now waste will be left to support increasing numbers of cattle and sheep. Congress can not appropriate any sum of money that will accomplish more good for all of the people of the United States than the amount carried in this appropriation, and which for that reason should be materially increased. The plan of the Biological Survey is to map the localities in which these rodents exist and then completely eradicate them in a given area. If a colony of prairie dogs is left in a part of the area they will soon multiply and be as destructive as ever. The whole colony must be absolutely exterminated, not a prairie dog left. If the work is done in that way the counties and States are glad to cooperate, because experience has shown that effective results can be obtained.

The American National Live Stock Association at its last annual convention at Denver advocated an additional annual appropriation by Congress of at least $300,000 for this purpose. The association recommended that all of the State bounty laws be repealed, and that the money which has been wasted in the payment of bounties to trappers be turned over to the Biological Survey for expenditure in cooperative work in the destruction of predatory animals and injurious rodents. The State of Arizona, in common with many of the other Western States, has repealed its bounty laws, and the money formerly paid in bounties, with a larger sum, has been offered to the Biological Survey, so that they may employ expert hunters to kill the mountain lions and coyotes, and other men to eliminate the prairie dogs and other rodents that do so much damage to the range. I want to impress upon the committee the vital necessity for increasing this appropriation. The people of the West are waiting for it anxiously.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks by printing a resolution recently adopted by the Arizona Cattle Growers' Association, which is as follows:

PREDATORY ANIMALS AND RODENT PESTS.

Whereas the American National Live Stock Association, in convention assembled at Denver, Colo., January 21, 22, and 23, 1919, adopted resolution No. 7, as follows:

"Whereas we believe that the work of exterminating predatory wild animals and range-destroying rodents carried on under the direction of the Biological Survey during the past few years has been very successful, and that, under the thorough organization and efficient plans of that bureau this evil will be largely minimized, if not entirely removed, provided the different States will heartily cooperate with the Federal Government in its plan of work; and

"Whereas at the present time the funds appropriated by Congress for this purpose are wholly inadequate to meet the real requirements of the Biological Survey in carrying on this work, and on that account the results obtained are not satisfactory in most sections of the West; and

"Whereas it is our belief that the present bounty laws of the States should be repealed, and in lieu thereof the various States should, through their several legislatures, enact laws appropriating sufficient money to equal the amounts to be expended by the Federal Government in the different States, and that such State appropriations should be expended under the direction of the Biological Survey, to be handled in conjunction with the funds appropriated by Congress: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the American National Live Stock Association, in convention assembled at Denver, Colo., January 21, 22, and 23, 1919, That we urge Congress to appropriate the additional sum of $300,000 for immediate use in the extermination of predatory wild animals and range-destroying rodents, and that we petition the various States to make appropriations at least equal to the amounts expended by the Federal Government in the various States; said money, both Federal and State, to be expended under the direction of the Biological Survey"; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Arizona Legislature senate bill No. 15, as amended, repealing the bounty laws of the State, and making appropriation for the extermination of predatory wild animals and range-destroying rodents, to be expended under the direction of the Biological Survey, together with a like amount appropriated by the Federal Government; and

Whereas we believe that this is the only efficient and successful method of securing the extermination of such predatory wild animals and range-destroying rodents: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Cattle Growers' Association in convention assembled at Phoenix, Ariz., February 11, 12, and 13, 1919, That we heartily indorse the said resolution of the American National Live Stock Association as adopted, and that we urge the passage of senate bill No. 15 as amended, and that the president of this association is instructed to use his best endeavors to secure the passage of said senate bill No. 15 as amended, and also to secure the adoption by the Arizona State Legislature of a memorial to Congress asking that the appropriation requested in said resolution No. 7 be made, and that the sum of $50,000 a year be appropriated to the use of the Biological Survey in the State of Arizona; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the Chief of the Biological Survey, and to the necessary committees and officers of the Arizona State Legislature.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that there is a great deal of justice in the request made by the two gentlemen who have preceded me. There is absolutely no injustice, as far as I can see, in the proposed amendment. One of the worst pests that the people of the Western States have to contend with is the ground squirrel. It does more damage, I believe, than any other animal alive. The ground squirrel—and I say this because I recently heard the question asked, What is a ground squirrel?—is not a game squirrel. It is not of the nut-eating, tree-climbing variety of squirrel. It is about the mangiest, most disreputable, repulsive animal you can imagine. It belongs to the rat species.

It is accused of carrying disease germs. It has been accused of almost every crime on the squirrel calendar. As my colleague from California stated, we are required by law to clear the ground squirrels from our land. If we do not do it, the State does it and the tax is assessed upon the land, and the lands are taken and sold the same as land would be for delinquent taxes. We have paid in such taxes as high as 50 cents an acre. Now, there are millions of acres of Government-owned land——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired, and all time has expired by limitation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact that an agreement was made limiting the time, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have two more minutes to complete his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, during the campaign for extinction which was carried on, when the work was done we were assessed as high as 50 cents an acre for killing off these rodents. And yet they come down in swarms and droves from Government land over which the State has no control. The only appreciable method of destroying them is by running over them with automobiles on the State highways.

Now, when it comes to multiplying, these ground squirrels which are so destructive to our interests and to our property, why, the jack rabbit is not in the same mathematical class.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN) there were 26 ayes and 29 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read two lines of the next paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have tellers on this.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late; the Clerk had begun reading the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary expenses for enforcing the provisions of the migratory-bird treaty act of July 3, 1918 (Public, No. 186, 65th Cong.), and for cooperation with local authorities in the protection of migratory birds, and for necessary investigations connected therewith, $147,000: Provided, That of this sum not more than $22,000 may be used for the enforcement of sections 241, 242, 243, and 244 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," and for the enforcement of section 1 of the act approved May 25, 1900, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes," including all necessary investigations in connection therewith.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this paragraph. What are these two statutes referred to—March 4, 1909, and May 25, 1900?

Mr. HAUGEN. One of them is the Lacey Act and the other is an act passed later, an act that was held unconstitutional by the district courts, and I believe by the courts of one or two of the States. This is to enforce the various acts as well as the treaty with Canada. It is the purpose here to combine the items and to carry the appropriations under one item.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any authority for setting aside a sum of money under this appropriation for the act of March 4, 1909, nor do I think they can make applicable a portion of this money for the enforcing of sections of the act of May 25, 1900. The item is for the enforcing of the migratory-bird treaty. This proviso, of course, is not at all germane to anything contained in the item for enforcing the migratory-bird treaty, and I make the point of order on the proviso and——

Mr. ANDERSON. What is the point of order—that it is not germane?

Mr. WALSH. It is not germane and——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to suggest that the rule of germaneness does not apply to a proviso reported by a committee. It applies to an amendment offered on the floor of the House. Certainly it does not apply to a proviso reported in the bill by a committee.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the wonderful contention of my friend from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. If the rule does not apply to the proviso put in by the committee, you never could get anything out on a point of order, because they would simply put in a proviso, when they wanted to raise the statutory salaries, to the effect, provided, that the salary shall be $4,500 instead of $3,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman made the point of order that it is not germane. Of course, if it is not authorized by law, that is another proposition.

Mr. WALSH. I said that I made the point of order that it was not germane and was about to continue when the gentleman interjected his contention that the point of order was never good against a proviso inserted by the committee. I wish to further submit the contention that there is no authority for the Department of Agriculture under the act to revise and amend the penal laws to expend this sum of money out of this particular appropriation; that it is neither authorized by law nor is it germane to the item under consideration.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, this proviso is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of the money. It would be in order as an amendment if offered from the floor. Consequently, it must be in order as a proviso in the bill, which provides that of this sum of $147,000, not to exceed $22,000 may be expended for the purpose mentioned, and, as a matter of fact, that item is taken over from another item in the consolidation of the two appropriations. This is the exact sum, $22,000, which was appropriated before for the enforcement of the Lacey Act, which provides against the exportation of game from one territory to another—deer, and so forth. It has been in force for years, and there is no reason why this limitation should not be put in here; it certainly can not be out of order to limit expenditures to a particular item.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the contention is that the money can be expended to better advantage by merging the two items. It is just a question of whether you are going to segregate or merge these items. It was suggested by the department that it should be carried under one head. There is no question but that an appropriation for the enforcement of either act would be in order. It is just a question of policy, whether it should be carried in one item or in three or four items.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the act of 1900 before him?

Mr. PLATT. The act of May 25, 1900, is the Lacey Act.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the sections referred to here are parts of the Lacey Act, unquestionably.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the act of 1900 it is proper to appropriate, and the Chair thinks that the proviso that not more than $22,000 may be used for the enforcement of sections 241, 242, 243, and 244 of the Lacey Act, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to deliver to a common carrier for transportation, and so forth, certain game, would be in order. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Division of Publications: One chief of division, $3,500; 1 chief editor, $3,000; 1 assistant chief of division, $2,500; 1 superintendent of distribution, $2,500; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 assistant, $2,000; 1 assistant, $1,400; 1 assistant in charge of indexing, $2,000; 1 indexer, $1,400; 1 assistant in charge of illustrations, $2,100; 2 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,600 each; 2 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,500 each; 3 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,400 each; 1 draftsman or photographer, $1,300; 10 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,200 each; 1 lantern-slide colorist, $840; 1 laboratory aid, $720; 1 assistant in charge of document section, $2,000; 1 assistant in document section, $1,800; 1 assistant in document section, $1,400; 1 foreman, miscellaneous distribution, $1,500; 1 clerk, class 3; 2 clerks, class 2; 10 clerks, class 1; 16 clerks, at $1,000 each; 40 clerks, at $900 each; 21 clerks, at $840 each; 5 machine operators, at $1,200 each; 5 skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 7 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 4 skilled laborers, at $780 each; 1 chief folder, $1,200; 1 messenger or laborer, $900; 13 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 1 skilled laborer, $720; 1 folder, $1,000; 2 folders, at $900 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $1,100 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,000; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 7 messenger boys, at $720 each; 3 messenger boys, at $600 each; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; 2 messenger boys, at $420 each; 2 messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 laborer, $840; 2 laborers, at $600 each; 3 charwomen, at $480 each; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all $195,620.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, and direct the attention of the chairman to line 24, page 62. I desire to make a point of order upon the office of 1 superintendent of distribution at $2,500. This, I understand, is new. If the chairman desires, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the language is subject to the point of order, I concede that. This matter was gone into very thoroughly at the last session of Congress. I raised the point of order myself, but after conferring with the department I was satisfied that this gentleman was deserving of every cent suggested here. It is only a just recognition for valuable and faithful service, and I trust the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve it if the gentleman from Missouri desires to be heard.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, that this matter was gone over very thoroughly last January when we had this bill up. Two years ago when we appropriated $11,000,000 under the food-production act the department reorganized the Division of Publications and they selected in that department the very best man they had and put him in charge of the distribution in the Division of Publications. This man has been in the department for 28 years. He has gone from the bottom clear to the position he is now in. When the estimate was presented to the committee last January they asked us to give them this man at $2,500 a year under the title of superintendent of distribution, the title which was given to him under the food-production act. He was put there and is there rendering efficient work. It is absolutely necessary to have somebody there to look after the distribution of public documents and they have got the best man they have in the division for that work, a man who has been there, as I said, for 28 years, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not make the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. It would really be in the interest of efficiency in the service, would it not?

Mr. RUBEY. Absolutely; there is no question in the world about that.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to add to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has said, that this is absolutely true in regard to this man, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not press his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for a moment. The then Representative from Wisconsin, Mr. Stafford, made a point of order, but we prevailed upon him to withdraw it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] then made the point of order, and after investigation he withdrew it, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will be as kind to us as those two gentlemen were.

Mr. HAUGEN. And this matter was held open for nearly a whole day, so that the matter might be thoroughly investigated.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Well, in view, Mr. Chairman, of the universal desire upon the part of members of the committee that I should complete the trinity, I shall withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 7, after the semicolon following the word "each," insert, "one assistant photographer, $900."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this provides for a $900 position, an assistant photographer, and is absolutely needed.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For photographic equipment and for photographic materials and artists' tools and supplies, $22,000: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, under such rules and regulations and subject to such conditions as he may prescribe, to loan, rent, or sell copies of films: Provided, That in the sale or rental of films educational institutions or associations for agricultural education not organized for profit shall have preference; all moneys received from such rentals or sales to be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I will withhold it. I did not see the gentleman from California seeking to strike out the last word. Of course, I would not have the point of order stand in his way.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to take this method of getting before the committee an item later, and to go on each item as I would not otherwise do. I have noticed a good deal of time taken up on various items, but when you get down to a vital point we get into a furious hurry. That is not criticizing anybody at all. I am throwing no reflection, but it seems to me on these important items which really amount to something the effort is to keep facts from the Committee of the Whole, but on things upon which we do not expect to vote, but just to talk, we take half an hour or an hour or an hour and a half.

I am going, when the time comes, to offer to amend the bill—because this item relates to education and the advancement of the school children, boys and girls—when we get to page 71, line 4, by asking to strike out that one item of $1,500,000 and insert in lieu thereof $5,750,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have not reached that item yet.

Mr. RAKER. I know we have not, but I am trying to get it before the committee while discussing this item, because they sort of relate to it, some of the facts in respect to that item, so that before the vote on that the committee may have the information they ought to have. I have a letter here, dated April 9, 1919, as follows:

PLACERVILLE, CALIF., April 9, 1919.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Though Congress is not in session, no doubt some preliminary work will be done on the appropriation bills, and we wish to respectfully and earnestly urge that the small appropriation for the "farm adviser" or "Smith-Lever" work be not omitted.

We have had a "farm adviser" organization here for something over a year, in which time we have come to realize its possibilities. This community, we believe, is on the threshhold of great development. During the period of reconstruction upon which the country is entering many inexperienced people will "go back to the land," and no doubt many will come here. These people should have expert guidance or disaster awaits some of them. Not only will they be handicapped by inexperience generally, but they will find peculiar local conditions in many places, and unless they do have expert guidance many who go back to the land will be unable to stay there.

But the need to assist the inexperienced, aid in the work of reconstruction, and take care of returning soldiers and others who are urged to go on the land is not the only need for the work. We find it valued also by the skilled and experienced ranchers who are already on the land. The increased production resulting will make the small relative cost a profitable investment rather than an expense, and we are convinced that its loss would be a serious setback to our community and others like it.

For these reasons we respectfully urge that you use your influence to see that the farm-adviser organization is taken care of.

Very respectfully,

ELDORADO COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
H. E. BILLINGER, Chairman,
JOS. SCHERRER,
W. A. RAULS,
S. H. RANTZ,
H. J. WILCOX,
Legislative Committee.

Now, I sent that letter to the Secretary of Agriculture, and I saw him to the end that the facts might be had relative to this appropriation of $1,500,000 and necessity for its increase, and which was increased last year by the Senate committee from $1,500,000 to $4,500,000. And I ask unanimous consent that I may read this letter within my time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman ask additional time?

Mr. RAKER. If my time should run out.

Mr. HAUGEN. How long will it take?

Mr. RAKER. I will read pretty fast.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will not get any additional time to read letters. We are not on this item, anyhow.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent so that I will not be cut off.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will not the gentleman defer that until we reach the item?

Mr. RAKER. The trouble is that when we get to that item I will not be given time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask that I may have five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HAUGEN. I shall have to object at this time.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I move to strike out the last word. I observe this authorizes the Agricultural Department to rent or sell copies of films, and I would like to inquire whether any of these films have been rented to private parties or corporations for exhibition purposes?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Do you know?

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding is that they are lent to private parties or people who are engaged in delivering lectures and to municipalities.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The reason I ask about this is that I am advised, and believe it to be true, that the Public Health Service and other departments of the Government are renting films to private persons, who are making large sums out of them. It is being done under the guidance and supervision of the United States Government. And I would like to know whether it is done under the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LEVER. The practice would not be very extensive, because the amount carried is very limited.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the former chairman of the Agricultural Committee know how many films the Government has?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know offhand. I will say to the gentleman if the department is doing anything of the kind suggested by him it is doing it in violation of law. It reads:

For sale or rental of films, educational institutions or associations for agricultural education not organized for profit shall have preference.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It says, "Shall have perference." What does that mean?

Mr. LEVER. I am sure it was the intention of the committee when this item was put in the bill a couple of years ago that these films might be loaned and only loaned to educational institutions.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think that ought to be the purpose and ought to be the law. But if the Government is renting out these films to people to make a profit out of the business it ought to be stopped.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is entirely right about that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, for the purpose of expedition, I may offer an amendment now, to be pending on page 71, line 4.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Let me get my request presented.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. RAKER. I am not. If the Chairman so ruled, I yet have a right to present the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is asking unanimous consent to present an amendment to page 71, line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] state his request?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the letter be printed and that I may print a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture in response to the letter from the El Dorado Chamber of Commerce in response to it, showing the necessity of this appropriation, to the end that the Members may have it in to-morrow's RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, where does the gentleman from California expect to be to-morrow?

Mr. RAKER. I hope to be here when the House opens and until the gavel falls at adjournment, as I always am. I am trying to present certain matters to the House that have a great deal of justice in them, and I am never away and never absent when the interest of the people are at stake.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the request of the gentleman from California for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Division of Publications, $239,690.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to make an observation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, here is carried an appropriation of a little over $400,000 for carrying on publications. I think the publications referred to here are very creditable, but I want to ask the members of the committee a question about the source of the appropriation that is used for these various weekly letters that indicate current prices, coming probably from the Bureau of Markets or other bureau of this department. I am told that there are something like 32 different bulletins that are issued from the various departments here in Washington, and a few of the 32 come from the Agricultural Department. So far as I can judge, the bulletins from the Agricultural Department are fairly creditable. But, if I may be permitted, I think I would be justified in criticizing some of the bulletins that come from some of the departments, which indicate that they are a little more than self-advertising; that they are autobiographical; that they seem to exist for the sake of convincing the public that they should be perpetuated, and they are but little more than a mere agency of self-adulation.

I believe that Members here will agree with me that public money should not be used for any purpose that is merely to perpetuate these establishments doing this sort of work, when their primary purpose is to convince us that what is being done is the best thing possible to do. I want to say that, so far as I know, the bulletins of this department are pretty creditable, as I said, with but little ground for criticism. The Members who have gone into this more fully will, I think, agree with me.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman refer to the bulletins or the market reports?

Mr. FESS. When I say "bulletin," I refer to publications usually marked "bulletins," not particularly agricultural bulletins, because I think those are very good in the main. But we have weekly publications that are merely exploiting what they are doing.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman has reference, I think, to the periodical publications of the department, which contain a good deal of propaganda?

Mr. FESS. Almost totally propaganda; yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. FESS. My thought was that Congress ought to be free to carve out some of that, even if you have to use a corn knife to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Permit me to say that I am becoming more and more convinced each day as to the correctness of the gentleman's position in that regard. Not only the Department of Agriculture, but practically every other department that has leave to print seems to be doing that. You go into a newspaper office and you find you can scarcely get into it on account of the publications, and you go into your own mail, and you can not without difficulty get to the real essence of it on account of the publications. While a number of them are creditable and ought to be authorized, yet it seems to me—and I am becoming fully convinced of it in my own mind—there is a lot of useless waste in the publications conducted by the departments of the Government.

Mr. FESS. I am glad to have the gentleman's opinion of that, and I am convinced we ought to cut out a good deal of this waste of public funds. At least it is our duty to ascertain the specific authority by which this propaganda on behalf of self-interest is being carried on in most if not all of the departments. If a decent regard for the protection of public funds is not enough to insure against self-adulation, it would appear that proper modesty at least would operate as a restraint.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has taken the soothing influence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to bring to a reasonable frame of mind our amiable friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and I want to express my deep appreciation of the signal service the gentleman from Ohio has rendered to the Committee of the Whole in bringing about so desirable a result. [Laughter.] The gentleman from South Carolina is an ardent advocate of this bill, because in the early stages of it he helped to prepare it. In fact, he is the parent of it, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], distinguished as he is, has only fallen heir to the gentleman's handiwork.

Mr. HAUGEN. I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania direct his remarks to another committee. The Committee on Agriculture does not authorize appropriations for the items he refers to. I think the gentleman will render valuable service if he will call the attention of the proper committee to the unwise expenditures that he refers to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman. But does not the gentleman from Iowa agree with me that it was a very happy office which the gentleman from Ohio performed a little while ago in inducing the gentleman from South Carolina to finally agree that there was just a little waste, just a little extravagance, in the publications of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; but fortunately the criticism does not lie with the committee that is now in charge of this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, let us see who rises to the defense of the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I was a little bit late in coming in, but I would like to know what those two last words were that the gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The vital words of the paragraph. I was proceeding to indorse what the gentleman from South Carolina said by quoting from the Philadelphia Commercial List and Price Current of May 24, 1919, and this may have suggested some of the things that were in the mind of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] when he came to induce the gentleman from South Carolina finally to agree with some of us on this side. I read:

MORE WASTE.

We received on Saturday, May 17, from the United States Bureau of Markets a circular entitled "Extraneous material for use in accordance with bureau memorandum No. 178."

It contains an article on "Foreign trade in butter and cheese," comparing the trade of the United States with foreign countries for the years from 1913 and 1914 to 1918. This article is not useful or even interesting to enough people to warrant its publication. Information of this character ought to be furnished by the Department of Commerce, anyhow, and probably is.

That is one of the points I made heretofore—that you duplicate work here. I read further:

It also contains an article on the butter shortage in Paris, all of which we know and have known since before the armistice was signed.

It also contains maximum prices for condensed milk in Norway, which interests practically nobody.

It also contains an article on "Argentine butter bought by England," copied from the Canadian Weekly Bulletin of April 7, 1918—over 13 months ago.

It also contains a whole page of "Ocean freight rates on dairy products" from North Atlantic ports of the United States to foreign countries, which are not useful to a single exporter, and the publication of which is therefore wasteful. Unless shippers have freight rates "up to the minute," they are useless for them to trade on. They vary according to the supply of and demand for freight room, and they vary sometimes at different ports. If an exporter wants to work an order for butter and cheese, would he go to the Bureau of Markets to get his freight rate? Not on your life! He would go to a steamship agent.

The gentleman from South Carolina is confirmed by this editorial.

It is an outrage that the people of the United States should be taxed for this kind of work. If the Bureau of Markets shall continue to be allowed to run wild, as it recently has been, and extend its activities to all branches of business—as it has to the produce business—the number of employees in its service would be past counting and the expense something terrific.

Congress must get busy, cut out this useless work, and define the bureau's activities. The Bureau of Markets was originally started "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm products."

It has developed into a beautiful scheme "to increase the number of Government employees in useless, unappreciated, and wasteful work at the expense of the taxpayer."

Its appropriations have increased in six years from $50,000 to nearly $4,000,000. Its possibilities in this respect are unlimited, so long as its chief thinks the people need his fatherly help and nobody kicks.

So I am grateful to the gentleman from Ohio for having enabled me thus to indorse what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has said about the uselessness of a number of these publications which emanate from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania] covers his real motive in taking the floor at this time by his facetious references to the amiable relationship that exists between the gentleman from Ohio and myself. Now, here the Bureau of Markets is publishing information that is said to be of vast value to the dairy industry of this country, and not only to the dairy industry of the country but to the consumers of butter, cheese, and dairy products. The real motive of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to continue his assaults upon the Department of Agriculture, and especially that part of the Department of Agriculture whose business it is, by furnishing valuable and timely information, to protect the producer on the one hand against fake information gotten out by certain produce exchanges and on the other hand to protect the gentleman's own constituents, the consumers, against like fake information by furnishing as a basis of comparison real facts and figures produced by a tribunal of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Library: For books of reference, technical and scientific books, papers and periodicals, and for expenses incurred in completing imperfect series; for the employment of additional assistants in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for official traveling expenses, and for library fixtures, library cards, supplies, and for all other necessary expenses, $18,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 66, line 17, after the word "reference" insert "law books."

Mr. HAUGEN. That is offered simply to make a part of the appropriation available for the purchase of law books.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture: For stationery, blank books, twine, paper, gum, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, fuel, water and gas pipes, heating apparatus, furniture, carpets, and mattings; for lights, freight, express charges, advertising, telegraphing, telephoning, postage, washing towels, and necessary repairs and improvements to buildings and heating apparatus; for the purchase, subsistence, and care of horses and the purchase and repair of harness and vehicles, for official purposes only; for the payment of duties on imported articles, and the Department of Agriculture's proportionate share of the expense of the dispatch agent in New York; for official traveling expenses; and for other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the department, $142,500.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 67, line 17, strike out "$142,500" and insert "$175,500, of which $33,000 shall be immediately available for necessary repairs to the central heating plant of the department."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. I take it the amendment is in order and that all will agree that it will be necessary for the department to maintain a heating plant if it is going to continue in business.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; particularly during this weather.

Mr. HAUGEN. It may turn colder along in December.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order to that part of the amendment which makes a portion of this appropriation immediately available.

Mr. HAUGEN. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa to increase the amount from $142,500 to $175,500.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. CANDLER) there were—ayes 25, noes 11.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will withdraw that, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore (amid applause), Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 31057, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if the program is to go on with the Agricultural appropriation bill to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. To continue the consideration of the Agricultural bill until it is disposed of.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on House resolution 5, a resolution for the purpose of providing for the volunteer officers of the Civil War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the resolution indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Will they be composed entirely of remarks by the gentleman himself?

Mr. RAKER. I have a few extracts in regard to the subject.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair finds on the Speaker's table the papers in an election contest case from Alaska and refers the papers, with all accompanying documents, to the Committee on Elections No. 3; also some papers in the Berger case, which are referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1 and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. IRELAND, for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. TILSON, for three days, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, June 3, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 3, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee submitting ourselves to the divine will, for out of Thy hand we have received every good and perfect gift, and our great purpose in life is to glorify Thy name, to extend the kingdom of righteousness and peace and truth among men. We thank Thee for the brotherly love that prevails, for the unity of spirit, for the great national spirit that has moved us forward and inspired us with mighty purposes and with high ideals and with glorious ambitions. We pray that Thou wilt guide and govern us as, true to the traditions of the past and true to the gleam that shines along the pathway of the future, we press onward to accomplish Thy divine purpose in us as a Nation. We ask these things for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

He also presented a memorial of the Business Men's Association of Fairmont, W. Va., remonstrating against the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates as recently advanced, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 101, American Federation of Glass Workers, of Morgantown, W. Va., remonstrating against the prohibition of the manufacture and use of beer, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Martinsburg, W. Va., remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Association of Manufacturers, of New York City, N. Y., favoring the return to private ownership of the railroads of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Eastern Shook & Wooden Box Manufacturing Association, of Boston, Mass., favoring the appointment of James C. Jeffreys as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 267, S. N. P. J., of Rock Springs, Wyo., and a petition of Local Lodge No. 10, S. N. P. J., of Sublet, Wyo., praying for the independence of the Jugo-Slavs and for justice and fair dealing in connection with peace deliberations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Pioneer Grange, No. 1, Patrons of Husbandry, of Burns, Wyo., favoring the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

MEXICAN OIL SITUATION.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing on page 5 of the Marine News referring to the Mexican oil situation. I do not know as to the facts in the article and the conclusions reached, but it deals with a very important subject, and I think should be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. I object. Let it go to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire objects to the printing of the publication in the RECORD and desires to have it referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not a matter, it seems to me, that the Committee on Printing could deal with. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow this article to be printed in the RECORD. It is a matter of great public interest, and it is a short article dealing with the fuel and oil situation, a very important subject. I think it is a matter that really ought to appear in the RECORD for the benefit of the public and the information of Congress.

Mr. MOSES. I submit to the Senator from Florida that in view of the fact that the Committee on Printing meets every other day, and such matters are being disposed of very rapidly, and in view of the position which I have repeatedly announced on the floor of the Senate at this session, I can not withdraw my objection, but I can assure the Senator from Florida that the Committee on Printing will immediately consider the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The article will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CURTIS. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and I submit a report (No. 2) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. KENYON. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report back, with amendments, the bill (S. 1213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918. I wish to give notice that on to-morrow I shall submit a report to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which were referred the following resolutions, reported them severally without amendment, and they were considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Senate resolution No. 45, submitted by Mr. TOWNSEND on the 29th ultimo:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate resolution No. 46, submitted by Mr. NELSON on the 29th ultimo:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate resolution No. 47, submitted by Mr. CUMMINS on the 29th ultimo:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate resolution No. 51, submitted by Mr. SMOOT on the 29th ultimo:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate resolution No. 53, submitted by Mr. MCLEAN on the 2d instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearing as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Senate resolution No. 54, submitted by Mr. GRONNA on the 2d instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate resolution No. 55, submitted by Mr. WADSWORTH on the 2d instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

THE CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred House concurrent resolution No. 4, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress be prepared and published, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in section 73 of the printing act approved January 12, 1895, and that the sum of $800 be paid for preparing, compiling, and indexing said edition, one-half of the said sum to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWBERRY. On yesterday I introduced for my colleague, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], the bill (S. 1309) to establish a national highway system, to create a Federal highway commission, to encourage efficient and economical highway transportation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

LOAN OF TENTS.

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Dawson, Ga., tents and cots for use of Confederate veterans in their State convention, June 17 and 18, 1919, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I heard a message handed down from the House of Representatives announcing the passage of a joint resolution authorizing the War Department to loan Army tents for the use of Confederate veterans in a reunion to be held within a short period at Dawson, Ga. In the haste the joint resolution took the usual course and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I intended to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. Is it now in order to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it be put upon its passage?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee will be discharged. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House joint resolution No. 79. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I did not hear the Senator's request. Will he restate it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a joint resolution which has passed the House of Representatives and was handed down this morning. It authorizes the War Department to loan Army tents for the use of a Confederate veterans' reunion.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Legislation of this character has been habitually passed.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WATSON. Has the routine morning business been concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. If there be no further reports of committees, the introduction of bills is next in order.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ELISHA PAINTER.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying the bill (S. 1227, 65th Cong., 1st sess.) granting a pension to Elisha Painter, no adverse report having been made thereon.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. McCORMICK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 58), which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That there be appointed a special committee of the Senate to devise a plan for a budget system, and that said committee shall report a plan for a national budget not later than September 1, 1919.

COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 59), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

WORK FOR THE UNEMPLOYED.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 60), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas the demobilization of 4,000,000 soldiers and millions of war workers in the United States has created a great body of unemployed men and women; and

Whereas this condition is brought about as a direct result of the exercise of the war-making power of Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the plain and imperative duty of Congress to at once initiate the necessary steps to open opportunities for employment to all workers in the United States who face enforced idleness.

Resolved further, That as a first step to remedy the evil of widespread unemployment among the people of the United States in the immediate future the Senate hereby authorizes and directs the Committees on Education and Labor, Agriculture and Forestry, Coast Defenses, Commerce, Conservation of National Resources, District of Columbia, Fisheries, Forest Reservations and Protection of Game, Geological Survey, Industrial Expositions, Interoceanic Canals, Interstate Commerce, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Manufactures, Mines and Mining, Mississippi River and its Tributaries, Naval Affairs, Post Offices and Post Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands, Railroads, Territories, Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, University of the United States, to each make an investigation as to the possibilities of work for the unemployed in those branches of industry, either in public or private employment, coming within the purview of each of the aforesaid committees of the Senate.

Resolved further, That said committees shall have power to subpœna witnesses and administer oaths, to send for persons and papers, and employ such assistants as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution, and to report on or before June 15, 1919.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 61), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to hold hearings, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page; to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; to sit and act at such times and places as it may deem necessary during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses thereof, including the cost of travel and subsistence of the members of the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, incident to any hearings which may be held in places other than Washington, D. C., to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. PAGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 62), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page; to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

SUPPRESSION OF ANARCHISTIC OUTRAGES.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, toward the close of the last session there was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill originally introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], popularly known as the red-flag bill. In the form in which it came from the committee its scope was much wider than as originally introduced, and was intended to penalize the teaching or advocacy of the overthrow of the Government by means of violence, and deny the use of the mails for the circulation of literature so advocating or advising, to prohibit the transmission in interstate commerce of literature of that character, and to prohibit the importation of literature of that character. The tragic events recorded in the morning newspapers afford added evidence of the necessity of stringent legislation along the lines of the bill referred to.

I introduce this morning a bill in the form of the report of the committee upon the so-called red-flag bill and ask that it may be read from the desk.

The bill (S. 1327) to declare unlawful the exhibition of a red flag and to fix a penalty therefor was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

A bill (S. 1327) to declare unlawful the exhibition of a red flag and to fix a penalty therefor.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to advocate or advise or to write, or with intent to forward the purpose hereinafter mentioned, to print, publish, sell, or distribute any document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication, in or by which there is advised the overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property of the Government of the United States or of all government.

SEC. 2. That the display or exhibition, at any meeting, gathering, or parade, public or private, of any flag, banner, or emblem, symbolizing, or intended by the person or persons displaying or exhibiting the same, to symbolize a purpose to overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property the Government of the United States or all government, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 3. Every document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication, in or by which there is advocated or advised the overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property of the Government of the United States or of all government, or in or by which there is advocated or advised the unlawful use of force or violence or physical injury to or the unlawful seizure or destruction of persons or property as a means toward the accomplishment of economic, industrial, or political changes, is hereby declared to be nonmailable and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the Dead Letter Office, duly authorized thereto, or other person upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful, with intent to forward the end in or by the same advocated or advised, to import or cause to be imported into the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable, or with such intent to transport or cause to be transported any such matter from one State to another or to any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 5. Whoever shall use or attempt to use the mails or Postal Service of the United States for the transmission of any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable, or who shall otherwise violate any provision of this act, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to operate as a repeal, in whole or in part, of section 20 of the act approved October 15, 1914, commonly known as the Clayton Act, or to limit or abridge any right conferred or guaranteed thereby, or to prohibit the transmission of any document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication in or by which there is advocated or advised the exercise of any such right, and which does not otherwise offend against this act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, as a specimen of the literature the circulation of which this proposed act is intended to prohibit, I send to the desk a copy of the circular found near the remains of the individual who on last night endeavored to take the life of the Attorney General of the United States, which circular is entitled "Plain Words."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the circular presented by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not ask that it be read, but I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD, unless some Senator shall desire to have it read.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Every Senator has read it. It has been printed in all of the newspapers this morning.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no desire that it shall be read.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we can not hear what the Senator from Montana is saying on this side of the Chamber. I should like to hear the article read.

Mr. ASHURST. I should also like to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the article. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

PROCLAMATION OF A REVOLUTION FOUND IN EFFECTS OF ANARCHIST.

PLAIN WORDS.

The powers that be made no secret of their will to stop, here in America, the world-wide spread of revolution. The powers that must be reckon that they will have to accept the fight they have provoked.

A time has come when the social question's solution can be delayed no longer; class war is on and can not cease but with a complete victory for the international proletariat.

The challenge is an old one, oh, "democratic" lords of the autocratic Republic. We have been dreaming of freedom, we have talked of liberty, we have aspired to a better world, and you jailed us, you clubbed us, you deported us, you murdered us whenever you could.

Now that the great war, waged to replenish your purses and build a pedestal to your saints is over, nothing better can you do to protect your stolen millions and your usurped fame than to direct all the power of the murderous institutions you created for your exclusive defense against the working multitudes rising to a more human conception of life.

The jails, the dungeons you reared to bury all protesting voices, are now replenished with languishing conscientious workers, and, never satisfied, you increase their number every day.

It is history of yesterday that your gunmen were shooting and murdering unarmed masses by the wholesale; it has been the history of every day in your régime; and now all prospects are even worse.

Do not expect us to sit down and pray and cry. We accept your challenge and mean to stick to our war duties. We know that all you do is for your defense as a class; we know also that the proletariat has the same right to protect itself since their press has been suffocated, their mouths muzzled, we mean to speak for them the voice of dynamite, through the mouth of guns.

Do not say we are acting cowardly because we keep in hiding; do not say it is abominable; it is war—class war—and you were the first to wage it under cover of the powerful institutions you call order, in the darkness of your laws, behind the guns of your bone-headed slave.

No liberty to you accept but yours; the working people also have a right to freedom, and their rights—our own rights—we have set our minds to protect at any price.

We are not many, perhaps more than you dream of, though; but are all determined to fight to the last, till a man remains buried in your bastiles, till a hostage of the working class is left to the tortures of your police system, and will never rest till your fall is complete and the laboring classes have taken possession of all that rightly belongs to them.

There will have to be bloodshed; we will not dodge; there will have to be murder; we will kill, because it is necessary; there will have to be destruction; we will destroy to rid the world of your tyrannical institutions.

We are ready to do anything and everything to suppress the capitalist class; just as you are doing anything and everything to suppress the proletarian revolution.

Our mutual position is pretty clear. What has been done by us so far is only a warning that there are friends of popular liberties still living. Only now we are getting into the fight; and you will have a chance to see what liberty-loving people can do.

Do not seek to believe that we are the Germans' or the devil's paid agents; you know well we are class conscious men, with strong determination, and no vulgar liability. And never hope that your cops and your hounds will ever succeed in ridding the country of the anarchistic germ that pulses in our veins.

We know how we stand with you, and know how to take care of ourselves.

Besides, you will never get all of us—and we multiply nowadays.

Just wait and resign to your fate, since privilege and riches have turned your heads.

Long live social revolution! Down with tyranny!

THE ANARCHIST FIGHTERS.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not know that it is the proper order, but I desire to call up the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 220) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable water," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, introduced by myself, was referred to a joint committee consisting of the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is a matter of perfect indifference to me to what committee the bill is referred. I have no more interest in the bill than any Senator has in an important piece of public legislation. All I desire to protest against was this method of referring one bill to two committees. As has been suggested, it might as well be referred to 10 committees. It seems to me it would throw the whole business of the Senate into utter confusion to have two committees consider the same measure. Which committee is to report it? Which committee is to deal with it? Are they both to deal with it at the same time? In fact, I can not very well understand how we can refer one bill to two committees at the same time. One committee must have control of it. I merely desire to protest against it as a novel and confusing method of doing business; that is all. The rules contemplate no reference to two committees. I do not know whether it is strictly out of order—I have not examined the rule carefully—but the rule says "reference to a committee." All I desire is merely to make the point against referring a measure to two committees.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, under ordinary circumstances the position taken by the Senator from Massachusetts would be entirely unanswerable, but we confront a very unusual situation here. The bill deals with the subject of power sites on the public domain, on public land, and, considering that feature of the bill alone, it would, of course, properly go to the Committee on Public Lands; but the bill likewise deals with the construction of dams in navigable streams, and, considered in that aspect, it very properly would go to the Committee on Commerce.

During the last session such a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives. That body, recognizing that it could not be appropriately referred either to the Committee on Public Lands or to the Committee on Commerce, referred it to a special committee, consisting of certain members of the Committee on Public Lands and certain members of the Committee on Commerce, an equal number being selected from each of those committees. The bill passed that House, and the Senate disagreeing to the bill, a committee of conference was appointed by this body to consider the subject. This body, recognizing that it would be quite improper to select a committee of conference to deal with that particular bill chosen exclusively from the Committee on Public Lands or exclusively from the Committee on Commerce, ordered that it be referred to a conference committee consisting of three members of the Committee on Public Lands and three Members of the Committee on Commerce. So that both Houses have already determined that a bill of this character is properly referred to a special committee consisting of members chosen from both of those committees.

My motion now is that this bill be referred to a special committee consisting of the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Commerce. Those two bodies can get together, work out the features of the bill, and make a report upon it; in other words, 20 members can constitute a committee as well as 10 members and can act upon the measure.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course, the question of conference committees is hardly parallel, because either body can select any of its Members it chooses for any conference, and can make up a conference representing, if it chooses, more than one committee. I have seen that done heretofore. I think it was done in the case of the Philippine bill; but here is a bill containing two subjects. Let it be referred to one committee first, and when they have dealt with their part of it refer it to the other committee. Here it is proposed to refer the same bill at the same time to two committees. It seems to me it would create endless confusion in the business of the Senate if that system should be adopted. There are plenty of ways of managing it afterwards. The committees can arrange it amongst themselves. Send the bill to each committee, if that is desired, and let them arrange how they shall deal with it. I think, however, that the principle of referring one bill to two committees to be a dangerous one to put into our practice for the orderly conduct of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the pending motion is not debatable at this time. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to reconsider the vote of the Senate agreeing to an order referring the bill in question jointly to the Committee on Commerce and Public Lands. Those who favor the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts will say "aye." [A pause.] Those who are opposed to the motion will say "no." [A pause.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to waste the time of the Senate on a point of this character, but it seems to me one that could be arranged without much difficulty and without involving us in establishing a precedent that may lead to a great deal of trouble. I think the object can be attained in other ways.

On a division, the motion to reconsider was adopted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 1, which is also No. 1 on the calendar, proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women, which the Secretary read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE ——.

"The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter upon any extended discussion of this proposition. It has been discussed as have but few other questions that have ever engaged the thought and the attention of the American people. Hearings have been repeatedly held by committees of both House and Senate on this question in the past. It has been debated on the floor of both bodies and has been discussed throughout the country in every forum where the people are wont to gather to listen to public discussions. What is needed now is action and not speech. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I shall enter upon no debate touching the merits of this proposition, which are well understood throughout the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment and have it pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 9, page 1, it is proposed to insert, before the word "citizens," the word "white," so that it will read:

The right of white citizens to vote—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. REED and Mr. WATSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REED. I rose to make an inquiry at this time. I wanted to ask the Senator if he intended to urge this amendment, or if he intended to have it printed.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire a vote on the amendment.

Mr. REED. Without debate?

Mr. HARRISON. My own idea is that the amendment is thoroughly understood, and I do not care to delay the vote on the main proposition. I do not think anything more can be said than Senators already understand, and personally I do not particularly care to debate it.

Mr. REED. The reason why I asked the question was that when the Senator sent up his amendment he said, if I heard him correctly, that he desired to have it printed.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I said "pending."

Mr. REED. I misunderstood the Senator, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McLean	Smith, Md.
Ball	Harris	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harrison	Moses	Smoot
Brandegee	Henderson	Myers	Spencer

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is detained by illness.

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

[Mr. REED addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. GAY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McLean	Smith, S. C.

Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Sherman
Gay	McKellar	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore resumed the chair.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is absent on account of illness. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is absent from the city on important public business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on important business.

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] from the Chamber on account of illness.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a standing pair with that Senator. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NEWBERRY. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is detained at home on account of illness in his family.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with him and withhold my vote. If permited to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CALDER. On the final vote upon this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If they were present, they would vote on this question the same way as I vote, and therefore I vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is unavoidably absent to-day, and that if present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the city on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the negative). I have received a note from the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in which he stated that he desired me to protect him on all matters except the final vote on woman suffrage. On the question of woman suffrage the Senator from North Carolina is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. I have not the letter before me, and I therefore withdraw my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is detained by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Borah	Harris	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Harrison	Phelan	Underwood
Fletcher	McKellar	Smith, S. C.	Williams
Gay	Myers	Swanson	Wolcott

NAYS—59.

France	Lodge	Pomerene

NOT VOTING—21.

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Penrose	Smith, Ga.
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reed	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Kellogg	Robinson	Townsend
Gerry	King	Shields
Gore	Martin	Simmons
Gronna	Owen	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment was rejected.

TREATY OF PEACE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 12, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of California May 20, as follows:

Whereas the peace treaty has been completed and has been delivered to the representatives of Germany; and

Whereas a synopsis only of the treaty has been given publicity in the United States, and our people are entitled to know its full contents, and to what, if any, engagements they may have been committed; and

Whereas it is reported in the press that the entire treaty has been cabled to the State Department and is now in the possession of the State Department: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested forthwith to transmit to the Senate the full text of the treaty of peace completed at the Paris conference and delivered to the representatives of Germany.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, to be taken up on the conclusion of the pending joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to object, but before the order is entered I wish to say that it is now an established fact that the treaty which this resolution is calling for is public to the people of Europe, particularly those with whom we were lately engaged in war. It is also true, Mr. President, that the treaty is now in the possession of certain interests in New York City. While the Senate of the United States is asking for a treaty with which it will ultimately have to deal, and while the American people are asking for a treaty by which they will ultimately, in all probability, be bound, and are unable to secure it, certain interests in the city of New York are in the possession of this treaty and are discussing it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to say in this connection that I have seen a statement in the Associated Press and other reputable papers that there was an understanding between the parties who made this treaty that it should not be officially given out. If Germany or German interests have broken that promise and given it out, the responsibility is with them. The question presented here is whether, if that statement is true, we shall officially ask the President of the United States to break faith and give out a treaty which the Associated Press says it is understood will not be given out. I see it stated also that the French prime minister has refused to give it out, and Lloyd-George has refused to give it out on account of this understanding. If there is such an understanding, it is reasonable to presume that there was some reason why the treaty should not officially be given out. All we have contended for here in a matter of foreign affairs, in which we have no partisanship, is that it should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to inquire whether the request of the Senator from California which has been presented for unanimous consent is debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request has not been granted, although the Chair has as yet heard no objection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand the matter before the Senate is the request of the Senator from California for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana is entirely right.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire whether that request is open to debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a debatable question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I demand the regular order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I renew my request, then, for the very reason that has been suggested. I will not reply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will now take occasion to say what I was going to say out of order when the request for unanimous consent was before us. Now, I will say in order upon the woman-suffrage joint resolution that the treaty is in New York. I had a copy of it in my hand yesterday, and I heard of several others. I was offered a copy to bring on here and show to my colleagues. I said that no copy could come into my hands without being made public. Therefore, it was not given to me, but it is there in New York. I heard of four copies in existence in New York. How many more there may be in the country I do not know, but, as far as I can make out, the only place where it is not allowed to come is the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he has not seen newspaper reports to the effect that copies of the treaty are on sale on the streets in Germany at 15 cents a copy?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that I have seen stated in the newspapers, and I have no doubt it is quite true.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Massachusetts, as usual, avoids the direct issue on this subject.

Mr. LODGE. What is the issue?

Mr. SWANSON. The issue is whether we shall officially ask the President to officially give out a treaty which it has been stated that he has agreed not to give out.

Mr. LODGE. Who stated that he agreed not to give it out?

Mr. SWANSON. The Associated Press and other reputable papers. I understand the prime minister of France has said——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator's understanding of what the prime minister of France said is not entirely convincing.

Mr. SWANSON. Nothing is convincing to the Senator on this or any other question appertaining to the league of nations or this question. The only position we have advocated on this question is that it has been customary to refer delicate foreign affairs to the Foreign Relations Committee. That committee is organized to handle delicate questions. If it was true, as stated, that our representatives agreed that it is unwise and improper to give us the treaty officially, why should the Senate ask the President to do something that he has agreed not to do? We have not asked that this question be disposed of finally. All we have asked is that the committee, of which the Senator is chairman, shall have the matter referred to it to ascertain the reason why the treaty has not been given out and to ascertain what is proper in a delicate situation of this kind and report to the Senate what its conclusions are. The Democrats do not control that committee. The question is whether the Foreign Relations Committee shall now, as heretofore, exercise its functions and pass upon this question.

I do not know whether such a specific agreement was made or not, but I have seen it stated in the Associated Press and other sources that Lloyd-George and Clemenceau had stated that it was understood that the treaty was not to be officially given out. If it is given out unofficially somebody is responsible for doing it, and why should we be responsible? Who knows that it is official?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Virginia says he has observed what Clemenceau and Lloyd-George have said. I do not know whether that is exactly reliable for our discussion or not, but if it is, the same Associated Press said that Mr. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George were willing that it should be made public and that the President of the United States put his veto on it.

Mr. SWANSON. There has been a discussion as to who is responsible. If that is true and there is a difference of opinion, why can it not be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee and let that committee consider the reasons why it should not be made public?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. In view of what was just said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], let me say that one of the morning papers of New York—I think the Times—on Sunday morning announced that the President had stated that he had reluctantly consented to withhold the text of the treaty, but had yielded to the importunities of Lloyd-George, Clemenceau, and his other associates.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, what is the situation here? The prime ministers of these countries and the President have considered it unwise at this time to give the treaty out. We presume that they have reasons for it. What is the contention on the Democratic side? Our contention is that we shall conduct our foreign relations in an orderly manner. Such resolutions have been referred to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. LODGE. They have not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I assume we can get some enlightenment on this question from the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. As I recall his language a moment ago, he said that the Senate of the United States is the only place where this treaty has not been allowed to come. The word "allowed" was used.

Mr. LODGE. I said it appears to be.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not remember the word "appears," but assuming that the word "appears" was used——

Mr. LODGE. I said "appears" or "apparently."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I would have to further assume that there is some information which the Senator from Massachusetts has which makes it apparent that somebody allowed the treaty to get into other sources or rather other hands than the Senate of the United States. The implication of the Senator, it seems to me, must be based on information which he has withheld from the Senate or else it is unfounded.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Is it open to me now to extricate myself from the extraordinary dilemma which the Senator from New Mexico has presented? If it is, I will say that I had little more difficulty in getting information than this. The copies of the treaty were given out that I have referred to, and they found that many of them were going to America, and an order was issued from our headquarters in Paris that no more were to be permitted.

Mr. SWANSON. By whom were they given out?

Mr. LODGE. Given out by the authorities.

Mr. SWANSON. What authorities?

Mr. LODGE. The representatives of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. What representatives?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose some of the President's followers. I do not suppose he gave them out himself.

Mr. SWANSON. What followers? They are not representatives. I have understood they do not represent the United States.

Mr. LODGE. There are no representatives over there except the President's personal agents.

Mr. SWANSON. There is nobody authorized to give out foreign affairs under the Constitution except the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, then, they were given out by his order.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator make that statement on his own responsibility?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not know whether he ordered it or not.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator know where they came from?

Mr. LODGE. They came from Paris. They were given out by our representatives there.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to ask the Senator this question: If this agreement was entered into, if they considered it unwise that the treaty, which is a tentative treaty submitted to Germany, tentative until signed and agreed to, should be given out, and agreed not to give it out, would the Senator break faith and give it out?

Mr. LODGE. I am not dealing with a newspaper hypothesis. The Senator says if this and if that and if the other. There have been half a dozen different newspaper reports.

Mr. SWANSON. What the Senator ought to deal with as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and that is the very suggestion made, is to ask that the resolution be referred to his committee to ascertain what the facts are. The Senator objects to obtaining the facts.

Mr. LODGE. I will wait until the Senator is through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield further to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I have been on the Foreign Relations Committee longer than the Senator from Virginia. I am as familiar with its methods as he is. I have defended its privileges and prerogatives, I think, as often as anyone, and I shall continue to protect them. This case is utterly different. There is no prerogative here of the Foreign Relations Committee. To go through the farce of referring it to the Foreign Relations Committee, in order to be told what we already know, is useless. This is a request for a document which has been given out in part officially in a summary, a wretched summary, and imperfect, but that was given out. Other fragments of it, like the one about the procès verbal and others, have come dribbling out from time to time. The whole treaty is here in various private hands. The people who have received it were given those copies, given them abroad. Some may have been mailed, for aught I know. They are here. We know as well as we know anything that they are on sale in Berlin. And yet we are told this is a very delicate question on which we must argue to know why, if they are held back, and why a document the whole world is reading should not be printed in completeness. That is all there is to it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. I wish to read a cable dispatch published in the Philadelphia Public Ledger yesterday:

[From the Philadelphia Public Ledger of June 2, 1919.]

PRESS PEACE DIGEST SHARPENED FOR ITS POLITICAL EFFECT ABROAD.

(By our own correspondent; special cable dispatch.)

LONDON, June 1.

While President Wilson and Premiers Lloyd-George and Clemenceau imagined that they were keeping from the world the exact text of the peace treaty, Germany stole a march, for she has put it out in pamphlet form, selling it upon the streets of her cities. As cabled last Friday, some of these pamphlets had reached Norway. A version, going by way of Holland to Chicago, now also is probably of the same German origin.

Mr. SWANSON. What is the contention of the gentlemen on the other side? It is not denied that this promise was made. I understand that the Parliament of England and the Parliament of France have no official copy of the treaty. I do not think there is any doubt but what it was understood that it would not be officially promulgated, and yet we are asked to request the President to break faith with an agreement made with his colleagues when the treaty was entered into as a tentative treaty. Germany has broken faith; and because Germany has broken faith the Senate of the United States is requested to ask the President to break faith. I am not willing to be put in that attitude. It seems to me it is the proper province of the committee to investigate whether he has entered into obligations not officially promulgated. When we have that information, we can determine whether it is wise or unwise. I see no purpose of organizing a committee like the Foreign Relations Committee unless it is to determine whether a delicate matter like this should be considered by it.

The Senator says, Why ask this? If he has the treaty—and he seems to have been able to get it if it has been offered for 15 cents—what is the occasion for demanding it, except to ask the President officially to give the treaty out, which he has agreed, the Associated Press says, not to do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Nobody has notified me officially or notified you officially that there was any reason why it should not be published.

Mr. SWANSON. No; and all I ask you to do is to refer it to the Foreign Relations Committee and allow the Secretary of State to appear before that committee and let him make a statement of the circumstances, and then ask you to vote with full information.

Mr. LODGE. Frankly, Mr. President, I have too much respect for the committee to go through all that nonsense.

Mr. SWANSON. Of course, the Senator does not want the information; the Senator does not want the reason. The Senator does not want it sent to that committee to ascertain why the treaty should not be given out at this time. All we have asked in this discussion of the situation is that the Foreign Relations Committee shall meet to-morrow, hear the Secretary of State and hear his reasons why the treaty should not officially be given out. It seems to me that any State Department or any President is entitled to have that opportunity to present to the Foreign Relations Committee the reasons. He can not appear before this body. You have organized a committee to hear the reasons why it should not officially be given out.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to conclude what I have to say in regard to this matter by saying that, regardless of what the agreement was between the big three, I assume that when the President learns that notwithstanding the agreement certain interests in New York have gotten possession of it, interests which are peculiarly interested in the treaty, the President will no longer feel that he is under an obligation to keep faith with those people, and that he will give it to the other branch of the treaty making power and to the people generally.

Mr. SWANSON. I have not any connection with interests in New York. Consequently I am not posted as to what they have or have not, but if Germany broke faith and sold copies of the treaty for 15 cents it ought not to have sold and they were obtained in New York, or if parties representing the United States broke faith with the President, or the parties that represented France broke faith with the prime minister and gave it out, there is no reason why the United States should be made a party to a breach of faith, if such a condition exists.

Mr. BORAH. I think the facts are that copies of the treaty which are in New York did not come from Germany. I think the Senator will find that they came under a confidential promise or a promise to be treated as confidential. But, nevertheless, they are there being discussed and considered by a great many people who are interested in the question but not as interested as is the Senate of the United States. They are representing themselves while we are representing a constituency.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator gives reasons why the committee should investigate it.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not want any investigating. I want the President to know that those people in New York who have these copies are using it in a semipublic way, to wit, in a way which will inform all those who are interested with them as to its contents, and I shall not assume until the facts have shown the contrary that when that fact is brought to the attention of the President he will withhold from the people that which those who are particularly interested in the treaty have in their possession.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator will see that this resolution is not directed to the President. It asks the Secretary of State for the text of the treaty, and not "if it is not incompatible with the public interest." It does not have even that. Not the President but the Secretary of State is requested to send the treaty here. That is contrary to the entire precedents.

Mr. BORAH. We are wandering from the subject. I do not care anything at all about the technical language of the resolution. We will change that any time which will suit the Senator. What we want is the treaty, the substance.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator want the treaty if we have agreed not to give it out officially?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know whether we have made that agreement or not.

Mr. SWANSON. Would not the Senator like to know whether we are breaking faith when we give out the treaty or not?

Mr. BORAH. If that agreement has been made——

Mr. SWANSON. Are our agreements scraps of paper?

Mr. BORAH. It seems some are.

Mr. SWANSON. Do you think this one ought to be, so far as this Government is concerned?

Mr. BORAH. If the President has made an agreement with the other members with whom he is associated in the peace conference that the treaty should not be given out, then there is no reason why the President should not communicate the fact to us that the agreement exists. We have only an Associated Press dispatch, which is modified in different ways, in one instance stating that the President himself has denied it to the public. But even if that agreement has been made, nevertheless a number of copies have gone into the hands of special interests in this country which are particularly interested in some of its terms, and so I am sure the President would be relieved from that obligation and should give it to the people who are interested in it.

Mr. SWANSON. If differences exist, we have appointed a committee to ascertain the definite facts and make a recommendation to the Senate. Such resolutions have from time immemorial been addressed to the President, but for some reason—I do not know why—this is addressed to the Secretary of State.

Under the Constitution the President is in control of our foreign affairs. The Secretary of State, so far as foreign affairs are concerned, is simply a representative of the President, acting under his direction.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. NELSON. Can not the Senator from Virginia see the obvious reason why we have to address this communication to the Secretary of State? The Secretary of State is here in this country, and the President of the United States is 3,000 miles away. How can we reach him except by cable?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Minnesota is entirely mistaken. The Secretary of State is in Paris with the President, and yet this communication is directed to the Secretary of State, who is in Paris. It is to be communicated to him. Consequently the Senator is mistaken as to his facts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Who is here? Is there anybody left in the executive department at all? [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there are enough left here in the executive department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Just a moment, if the Senator from Virginia will suspend. The Chair hopes the occupants of the galleries will remember that there is a rule of the Senate which forbids demonstrations in the galleries. Whether the Chair will feel it his duty to enforce that rule remains to be seen.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this resolution is addressed to the Secretary of State, who is in Paris. The President also is there. Why it was purposely directed to the Secretary of State instead of to the President I can not understand. It has been the uniform practice that such resolutions should be addressed to the President, because he derives his authority in relation to foreign affairs not from Congress but from the Constitution.

It is not even stated in the resolution that the information is to be communicated "if not incompatible with the public interest." It seems to me that this resolution being in reference to a treaty which is simply a tentative treaty, not being addressed to the President, he not being requested to communicate the information if not incompatible with the public interest, it should properly be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

What injury could come from that? The committee could meet to-morrow or the day after to-morrow, get the entire facts, and make its recommendations thereon to the Senate with complete and full knowledge. All we ask Senators to do is to satisfy themselves as to the wisdom of the course which they contemplate pursuing.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if it is not a fact that the Secretary of State, here in the United States, apparently has issued what he calls a synopsis of the treaty, which has been presented and considered here?

Mr. SWANSON. I may be mistaken, but my understanding is that the synopsis was officially given out by all of the associates in the peace conference; that it was agreed by them to give it out as a synopsis. Consequently there was no breach of faith made in giving out the synopsis. I am not speaking authoritatively, but my impression is that the synopsis was given out by them in Paris and cabled here. The agreement those gentlemen made was that they would give it out as the substance of the treaty, but officially that they would not give the treaty out in full. As to whether that is true or not, I have no authority to say, but the Associated Press say it is true, for they published it; but the Prime Minister of France refused to give it out, and Lloyd-George said that that was the agreement. If there was such an agreement, it does seem to me that we should not put ourselves in the attitude of asking our President to break it.

Mr. FALL. I may be wrong, and I am interrogating the Senator from Virginia for the purpose of making myself right, but I have understood that the object of the resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was to obtain the material from which this synopsis was made; in other words, that the synopsis having been given out and circulated, and being considered by the newspapers of the country, the public may obtain very erroneous ideas as to the treaty itself; and this synopsis, being an official or semiofficial document, if it is not correct, the public may be very badly misinformed, while if the Senate itself had the document before it from which the synopsis was made it could very readily ascertain whether the synopsis is a correct one. I understand that that is the purpose of the resolution, and it seems to me eminently proper that the request should be made to the Secretary of State, as it was reported by the newspapers here that the synopsis was given out by the State Department.

Mr. SWANSON. No; as I understand, it was cabled from Paris. I am under the impression that this was the semiofficial or official—I can not say which—summary that was given out by all of the associates at the peace conference to the world.

Mr. FALL. Very likely. I have no information about that; but it came from the State Department here.

Mr. SWANSON. It was cabled from Paris; I am satisfied of that.

Mr. FALL. Well, it had to be cabled from Paris, and it had been drawn up for a month or six weeks or two months, of course.

Mr. SWANSON. The difference is this: The summary, not the treaty, was cabled from Paris to the State Department.

Mr. FALL. Then, an answer to that effect by the Secretary of State would at once settle the proposition.

Mr. President, there is another question I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia. Is the Senator aware of any treaty by which the United States was bound not to make peace with Germany except in conjunction with England, France, Italy, and Japan?

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator mean to make the treaty at the same time?

Mr. FALL. The other Allies were bound by such an agreement. Has the United States made any such committal?

Mr. SWANSON. I think the President has stated to some of the members of the Foreign Relations Committee—possibly the Senator from Massachusetts was present at the time and others during the war—that he had made no committal of that kind whatever.

Mr. FALL. The United States could not have such a treaty unless it was submitted to this body and ratified by this body.

Mr. SWANSON. I say the President has made no committal of any kind whatever during the war, as I understand, and that at the meeting of the members of the Foreign Relations Committee with him he so stated.

Mr. FALL. Then, it seems to me, it is all the more apparent that the request of the Senator from California is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Virginia permit a suggestion of the Chair?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the ruling which has been made oftentimes by permanent occupants of the chair heretofore, the present occupant will feel compelled to hold that, if the Senator from Virginia or any other Senator yields for more than a question, he will thereby lose the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield for just an instant to a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I want to say to the Senator from Virginia, preliminary to the question, that I will ask in this particular instance that the pending business be laid aside in order that the suffrage amendment may be taken up and disposed of. I am just as anxious to debate the pending resolution as is the Senator from Virginia, but I have refrained from saying anything in respect to it. May I beg of him therefore—and this is my question—that we permit our debate to take place when we reach the unfinished business, and that we now go on and pass the suffrage amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator from California that that was my purpose. I did not precipitate the debate, but I rose to reply to the address of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], followed by a very earnest discussion of the matter by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I simply rose to reply to statements made by these two distinguished Senators. I am willing for the discussion to proceed on the suffrage joint resolution.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution, extending the right of suffrage to women.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Is there an amendment pending, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. BORAH. What has become of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has not offered an amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Vote!

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the consideration of the joint resolution. I realize that it will be voted on at no distant hour, but before it is voted upon I desire to make some brief observations. I do not do so because of any particular satisfaction which I shall derive from the statement myself, but largely because I have the good fortune to represent a suffrage State and I do not wish my vote to be construed as a condemnation of suffrage when secured by State action.

The fact that I am opposed to this proposed amendment has been construed in some quarters as denoting my opposition to woman suffrage as such. I am not opposed to woman suffrage. Indeed, I have been an advocate of it in an humble way for twenty-odd years. It has prevailed in my State for over 20 years, and after these years of observation I am still a believer in such suffrage. I realize, of course, that it does not and will not accomplish all that is claimed by its most enthusiastic advocates in the way of elevating and purifying politics, but the effect of suffrage in the cause of better government and better politics, in my judgment, is all to the good.

But while I have always been an advocate of suffrage, I have always believed the matter should be settled by the action of the respective States. It is for that reason that I shall cast my vote against this joint resolution. That is a principle which does not change with the number, so far as I am concerned, of votes in favor of or against a proposition. It is fundamental to my way of viewing things, and I am not in a position, therefore, doing justice to myself and my own convictions, to waive my views. If I felt the objections which I have were one of minor importance, a subsidiary proposition, I should unhesitatingly vote for suffrage. If I were called upon, in other words, to weigh one against the other, I might support suffrage as the major proposition; but suffrage can be enjoyed through the action of the respective States. There is, therefore, no occasion for doing violence to what I conceive to be a very fundamental principle in our Government. There are two reasons why I think that suffrage ought not to be achieved in this way: The first is that of the principle with reference to local self-government or home rule, and the second is one of policy.

Mr. President, when this Government was being organized and men came forward from 1770 on to 1789, when they consummated their work in the Constitutional Convention, to take charge of the affairs of a new government, the thing which astonished the world was the capacity, the ability, the statesmanship, and the leadership of the men who moved out of obscurity into the affairs of the world. Other peoples had undertaken, and have since undertaken, to accomplish revolution, to set up free institutions, and to assume for the people the burdens and responsibilities of free government. The enterprise has failed time after time by reason of the fact that the men who were called upon to take the leadership in such a movement were not fitted either in poise, experience, judgment, or wisdom to carry forward the work.

The revolution which took place in France only a few years after the Revolution in the United States failed because of the incapacity of the leaders. The revolution which has taken place in Russia within the last few months has broken down because of the incapacity of the leaders. But the American Revolution was a success, as the subsequent 150 years have demonstrated, because of the remarkable capacity and the leadership of the men who came out of the different Colonies to take hold of that great affair. Where did they get their training? From what university had they graduated? In what school was it that they had been trained to assume these responsibilities? The university of the different Colonies, in the town meetings of New England, in the burgesses of Virginia, in the legislatures of the various Colonies. Under the principle of local self-government and home rule these men had been trained so that they were prepared when the task came to take on the work which was before them. Realizing the great worth of the principle, when they came to organize the Government and to write the Constitution they were very careful to preserve self-government or home rule for local affairs and to provide a national government and a national constitution for national affairs.

It was not a mere matter of administrative efficiency or a mere convenience of government, neither was it local prejudice or alone the bias of tradition which caused this principle to be so carefully preserved in the final framework of the Constitution. It was a deeper and profounder reason. These men understood perfectly that without it free institutions would be but a passing scheme with which to again delude for a season the advocates of liberty. They realized fully, and if we were not so deeply moved by the cry of party expediency we would realize, that this principle is the rock foundation upon which our whole vast fabric rests. Without it our house is built upon shifting sands. Without it the influence of the people in our Government will be wholly thwarted. Without it the right of suffrage is an illusion, a toy in the hands of an impotent constituency. Without it corruption and extravagance and the whole pack of centralization's treacherous and deadly evils will sweep on and on, imperious, rampant, and unrepentant, until discontent and revolution finally seize the reins of government. Without it there can be no splendid and sturdy citizenship or orderly, lawful, and responsible government.

Democracy carries in its system every hour of its existence the germs of autocracy. The tendency is always toward centralization. And only a brave and self-reliant and vigilant people can hold it within reasonable and proper bounds. There is, after all, only one guaranty for the success of popular government, and that is the worth and capacity of the individual citizen, and self-government is the only school in which he can be trained to his task. Anything that keeps him in touch with his government, which feeds his interest and deepens his concern in public affairs, not as an officeholder but as he lives his daily life, is vital and fundamental. The watchman upon the walls is not the coddled and anemic satellite of a federal bureaucracy, but the self-helping, self-reliant, wholesome individual whose intellectual and moral fiber in daily contact with his government has wrought its sense of duty and its appreciation of responsibility.

To give men, to give women, the right of suffrage and at the same time administer all the affairs and center all authority of government at Washington is, indeed, to keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope. It is not and can not be democracy. It is bureaucracy, the most vicious, the most expensive, and the most deadening form of government ever devised by the wit of man.

The thing, therefore, which has strengthened us through all these years, which has given us success where others have failed, has been the fact that the Government through the local organizations or processes of government has been brought in touch with the citizen. He has been trained in the State and the subdivisions of the State in the duties of citizenship, as his great forefathers and forebears were in the century past. But for the last 25 years, step by step, day by day, and year after year, we have been withdrawing from the States all power and centering it in the Government at Washington. We are gradually entirely destroying the principle of home rule or of local self-government, and this, to my judgment, is the most pronounced step in the utter destruction of that principle that we have yet taken. If I am correct in this view, Mr. President, it can by no means be a matter of minor import. If I am correct in the view which I entertain, it is a principle which is indispensable and prerequisite to the wholesome maintenance of our Federal system of government.

It has often been said to me that as a member of the Republican Party it would seem peculiar that I should be jealous of the principle of State rights. The doctrine of State rights or the doctrine of local self-government or home rule is just as essentially a principle of the Republican Party, and has been through all its life, as of any other political organization in this country. The State-rights theory, based upon the proposition of the right of a State to withdraw from the Union, was settled at Gettysburg and Appomattox; but the right of a State within the Union to govern its own affairs and control its own local concerns, to preserve and to manage its own local interests, was just as highly appreciated a principle of the organizers of the Republican Party as it has ever been of any other political organization.

This is a principle upon which Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Jefferson never differed; a principle upon which none of the framers or leaders of the Republic have ever differed. The right of a State to control its own local affairs exclusively and to manage its own concerns is indispensable to the preservation of the Federal Union, without which we can not as a Republic endure. It is because this constitutional amendment does violence to that principle that I am going to cast my vote against it. There is no necessity to bring in conflict the right to vote and the right of home rule.

Mr. Lincoln, upon an important occasion when the question of State rights came pointedly before him, declared:

> To maintain inviolate the rights of the States to order and control under the Constitution their own affairs by their own judgment exclusively is essential for the preservation of that balance of power on which our institutions rest.

This states the principle as all students of our Government understand it and have understood it from the beginning. We have not always lived up to the principle. Expediency, party interest, or party advantage, or selfish and ulterior motives, may often cause us to violate this tenet of free government, but no one misunderstands it.

The same principle has been stated with reference to this particular amendment by President Wilson when he declared, in 1917:

> I am tied to a conviction which I have had all my life that changes of this sort ought to be brought State by State. It is a deeply matured conviction on my part, and therefore I would be without excuse to my own constitutional principles if I lent my support to this very important movement for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Yes; this has been a conviction with all of us who believe in our form of government. Whatever the causes or the excuses for its abandonment, or for doing violence to it upon any particular occasion, in sober moments we go back to the belief that it is vital to our whole scheme and purpose, our whole framework and plan of government. For myself I utterly reject the doctrine that party expediency can ever justify the breaking down of such indispensable principles of free government. Perhaps it was something of this kind that Washington was thinking of when in his Farewell Address he warned against party divisions.

No one can be more interested in preserving home rule than the women of this country. The woman is naturally tied to her home not only physically, but spiritually, and from her home she must exert her influence upon public affairs, if at all. Not many of them will desire, and a still less number will have an opportunity, to take part in affairs at points widely separated from their homes and their families. The nearer you can bring the processes of government to the home the more closely you can associate affairs with the daily life of the woman who holds the ballot, the more serviceable you will make the ballot after she secures it. She will come to realize, if she does not now, that any act of Congress which has a tendency to remove government from local influence is so greatly to her disadvantage that it will practically overcome the advantage of the ballot. The great body of the women of this country, upon reflection, will not approve of destroying home rule.

But there is another question, which I will refer to only very briefly, and that is the question of policy.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the Senator takes up the next topic may I ask him whether he voted for the amendment prohibiting the use of alcoholic liquors in the United States after the 1st of next January?

Mr. BORAH. I did.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I am rather curious to know how the Senator can differentiate between his action on that occasion and his contemplated action on this.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I voted for the constitutional amendment providing for national prohibition. I might answer the Senator's question by a simple statement to the effect that, even assuming I was in error in that instance, there would be no justification for my being in error the second time. If I violated the rule of local self-government by voting for that amendment, that is positively no reason why I should continue in my course of error, and I would have just as much right to vote against this as if I had been correct in that instance. But there is a wide difference, indeed, between the two propositions. In the first place, the national prohibition amendment infringed the right of local self-government only to a very limited degree. It was impossible under the Constitution as it stood for the States to settle exclusively with the question of prohibition. Although the people of the State might wish to have prohibition, under the commerce clause of the Constitution it was within the power of the people outside of the State to prevent it. They could ship liquor into the State and could demoralize the entire situation under the commerce clause. In other words, already under the commerce clause the liquor traffic was very largely within the control of the National Government. The fight for national prohibition by national amendment began by reason of this situation. I know, so far as I am concerned, that I was led to support the proposition in the first instance because witnessing the conditions in my own State I found that Idaho could not have prohibition of its own individual action. I therefore became committed to the principle of national prohibition through constitutional amendment—not for the purpose of destroying local self-government but really in aid of it. There was no other way by which a State could be dry.

It is true that after the campaign for the national prohibition amendment began, what is known as the Webb-Kenyon law and the Reed amendment were adopted, which helped the situation very much. But the Webb-Kenyon law was for a long time in doubt, and is even yet in doubt in the minds of a great many able lawyers in this country. The Supreme Court has sustained it. Whether it would in time modify that decision or not is a different question. We had had prohibition in the State of Idaho in so far as we could have it by action of the people of the State. But liquor was shipped into the State under the commerce clause of the Constitution, and we were therefore at the mercy of the National Government. I conceive that to be a wholly different situation to that of suffrage, where each State may act for itself and the National Government does not undertake to interfere. In other words, if any State in the Union wants woman suffrage it can have it, and the people on the outside can not in any way change the situation. If the States could have settled the question solely and alone by their own action I do not believe I should have ever consented to cast my vote for action upon the part of the Government in regard to prohibition.

It should be remembered also that the Webb-Kenyon law and the Reed law were national enactments; that in all these instances we were dealing with the matter from a national standpoint. Indeed, the liquor traffic had become a national enterprise carried on upon a national scale in utter disregard of the State lines. This condition justified a treatment of the matter in its entirety from the national standpoint.

I was going to refer, Mr. President, to another question, and that is the question of policy. I am not going to enter upon any defense of the South. The South needs no defense from me. She has her able and loyal Senators here who will wisely guard her interests. But as a part of our common country I am bound to consider her interests the same as I would that of my own great West. We are all influenced more or less by our local surroundings, and no man rises wholly above his environments. But in the great questions which affect the Nation as a whole I propose to consider the Nation as a whole. The South has had her heavy burden to carry. I do not propose to add unnecessarily to the weight of that burden. If I were wise enough I would help to lift it. I am sure that feeling is shared by all upon this side of the Chamber. If so, shall we go recklessly forward and thrust upon her a condition for which she is not prepared? Is that the way to maintain unity—to preserve national good feeling and to make us as a Nation strong? Is that a wise policy for a people so widely separated in territory and so diverse in local environment? No; that way lies dissension and dissatisfaction, and if pushed to extreme, disintegration and national weakness.

To impose upon the Southern States a rule for local affairs for which they are not prepared and which they do not want, simply because we have the voting power to do so, is Prussianism, while to give to them the right and privilege of settling these matters in their respective States according to their interests and as they see fit and in harmony with the views of their own people is democracy—American democracy. It is not the name which tests, defines, and distinguishes justice from injustice; it is the quality of the deed. Tyranny and force in the name of democracy are tyranny and force still. Utter disregard of the local conditions and local interests of a people, the compelling them to conform to laws which do not fit their situation, is the most sterilizing and discouraging form of modern tyranny. Shall we give of our treasure and shed our blood that Serbia and Rumania may have local government and deny it to Georgia and Alabama? When the people of Idaho and Wyoming impose their will upon a people 3,000 miles away, living under conditions of which the people of Idaho and Wyoming know but little, how shall you distinguish that from the Magyars, the imperious and conscienceless Magyars, imposing their will upon Bosnia and Herzegovina?

I want to ask my friends upon the other side of the Chamber, if this amendment is passed, do you propose to go home to your people and say, "We now have the fifteenth amendment, which inhibits discrimination on account of race or color, and the eighteenth amendment, which inhibits discrimination because of sex, and the power under each amendment in Congress to enforce the rule, and we propose to see these guaranties of the Constitution of the United States faithfully carried out? Does anybody suppose that this amendment is anything but a white amendment, unless party exigency leads to a different rule? On the other hand, let me ask my friends upon this side of the Chamber, when this guaranty is written into the Constitution, which gives to from two and one-half to three million Negro women the right to vote in the South and gives you the power to see that the provision is carried out, do the men upon this side of the Chamber propose to see that that is done? Do you propose to put the South under Federal control as to elections? If you do, you will have a great task, which you seem lightly to contemplate.

I should like to have somebody rise and answer me here and now, and tell me whether or not this which we are writing into the Constitution is not a solemn lie. Nobody intends that the two and a half million Negro women of the South shall vote, unless, as I say, party expediency compels action for the sheer purpose of party advantage.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is nothing in this proposed amendment that provides that they shall vote. All that this amendment provides for is that they shall not be prevented from voting on account of sex.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; that is the suggestion I would expect. The fifteenth amendment provides that there be no discrimination as to color. For forty-odd years it has been there. It is a dead letter, as dead as if it were written in the private memorandum of the exiled Kaiser of Germany. It has been dead because the South could not submit to domination by the colored race and the North realized the task of enforcing it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator from Idaho to say that the fifteenth amendment provided that there should be no discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that that amendment has been a dead letter in the South. My own State has been held up to the world as the chief offender in that respect. I wish to ask the Senator if he can find in the laws or the constitution of the State of Mississippi, or in their administration, one single thing which is a discrimination on account of race or color or previous condition of servitude, and I wish to ask him if he is not acquainted with the fact that in the case of the State of Mississippi versus Williams the Supreme Court of the United States decided that nothing at all in any of the provisions of the Mississippi constitution, or the laws enforcing them, constituted any violation of the fifteenth amendment?

If the Senator will pardon me one moment, I am with him in his opposition to this measure.

Mr. BORAH. Why?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the fifteenth amendment is a mistake, and I think this is a mistake.

Mr. BORAH. Why?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is a mistake, because the entire people of the United States are called upon to say what shall be the political constitution of a State, to say what shall be its political structure; and that is where the Senator from Colorado was altogether wrong in the question which he propounded to the Senator from Idaho. The prohibition amendment does not affect the political structure, the life and political soul, of a State, and a State ought to be allowed to take care of its own soul without the interference of people of other States. But I rose for the purpose of denying that there is one word or jot or tittle of violation of the fifteenth amendment in the consitution of the State of Mississippi, and to quote the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States agrees with me in that opinion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word.

Mr. BORAH. Let me have a word, and then the Senator can go ahead with the rest of his speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BORAH. I realize that the State of Mississippi escaped the condemnation of the Supreme Court of the United States, but, nevertheless, the Negro does not vote in Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He does not when disqualified.

Mr. BORAH. No; and disqualification is adjusted to the situation of the colored man.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And he does not for several reasons: First, because a part of them are disqualified because they do not come under the educational qualification; a part of them are disqualified because they do not pay their taxes; a part of them are disqualified because they have been convicted of felonies or misdemeanors involving moral turpitude, and that is all; and every white man is disqualified for the same reasons wherever the same reasons apply.

It is true that we took advantage of the fact that we knew there would be nine Negroes to one white man disqualified for these reasons, but not one of them is a disqualification "on account of race, or color, or previous condition of servitude." They are on account of the disqualifications themselves. Now, they may be made to apply to the Negro women, but thus far there is no law to make them applicable; and the Senator is exactly right in saying that every State in this Union ought to be left to take care of its own political soul. That is a different thing from a mere police regulation like that as to selling liquor. This goes to the very substance, it goes to the very life of the people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I only wanted to say that which I think I did say—that it makes no difference how the juggling takes place; the result is that the Negro does not vote because he is black. That is the only crime which he has committed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The white man does not vote in Mississippi under the same conditions.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, the white man votes because you are careful to apply tests which do not apply to the white man. You pick out those tests which exclude the Negro and write them into your law, and that excludes the Negro. Take the case which came up in Oklahoma only a short time ago, the "grandfather" clause of the constitution of Oklahoma. The Supreme Court of the United States held that that was in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and that it was enacted for the purpose of preventing the colored man from voting.

Now, I am not discussing at this time the question as to whether or not the South could submit to the domination of the inferior race. I am not discussing the justification of what you have done. We would do the same thing in the North if the situation was the same. That is not the proposition. I am saying that you do not do so, and the Senator from Mississippi will agree with me that you never intend to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I agree, cordially. We never intend to do it if we can lawfully and constitutionally prevent it.

Mr. BORAH. No; but, on the other hand, Mr. President, the North takes no interest in the enforcement of the fifteenth amendment. I believe there was an effort a time or two, but it amounted to nothing.

Why, Mr. President, we sometimes talk about the difference in the treatment of the Negro in the South and the North. Mr. Taft, in an article a few days ago upon this subject, said that the emigration of the Negro to the North would compel the southern men to treat him better and to give him better consideration, and that that would go far toward solving the race question. The case is not so simple. Did not Mr. Taft know when those Negroes he was talking about emigrating to the North reached the State of Illinois—the soil made sacred by the ashes of the martyr, the man who emancipated the Negro—the northerner decimated them, massacred them because they would have earned their bread in the sweat of their brow? You can not settle the race question or the Negro question by enacting laws here in the Congress. Neither upon my side of the Chamber nor upon your side of the Chamber do you expect this guaranty to be anything but a dead letter when it is passed. Others may do as they think best, but when I am called upon to write into the Constitution of the United States a solemn guaranty, I propose to be prepared to see that it is enforced; and that is the reason why, when this white amendment was presented, I voted to make it a white amendment, because that is what it will be.

I have said that this amendment would not be enforced unless party expediency demanded a different course. The fifteenth amendment was passed as a matter of party expediency, and the only efforts that have ever been made to enforce it arose out of party necessity. It will be remembered when the fifteenth amendment was first brought forward Thaddeus Stevens, leader of the House, was opposed to it for the very reason that it infringed upon the rights of the States; but afterwards he yielded, because, as he frankly declared, he thought that it was necessary in order to maintain the Republican Party in power. It may be that at some time when some of the States seem to be drifting permanently away from the Republican Party it will seek to recoup by taking control of some of the southern or border States, thus making it necessary for the Federal Government to take control of the elections. But if this constitutional amendment depends for its execution not upon the inherent justice of the amendment itself but upon mere party expediency, it will be a disturbing and a vicious provision and will serve neither the white people nor the colored people. To be entirely frank, I do not think we ought to force this situation. I believe that the wiser and the better solution of the race question runs along different lines. I certainly want to see the Negro secure justice, but I realize, and every sane man realizes, that you can not force colored rule upon the South. It will bring renewed racial warfare, which in the end will be vastly more injurious to the colored race than to the white race, and heaven knows it would be bad enough for either. I think it infinitely better that we leave the situation to be dealt with through the several States than to undertake to force a rule which is not acceptable.

I regard the race question as the Nemesis of American life. I sympathize deeply with the people upon whom falls most heavily the burden of solving it. Sphinxlike, inscrutable, and intractable it intrudes itself at every national feast and jubilee. There is no phase of national life, no outlook but is colored by the sinister shadow of this problem. We of the North can afford to take counsel upon this matter. We can afford to listen to the requests of our southern friends. We ourselves are not without fault. As I have just said, look at East St. Louis—within the grand old Commonwealth whose soil holds the sacred ashes of the emancipator, the man who gave the Negro his freedom. Talk about enfranchising 3,000,000 Negro women, of widening the political power of the Negro of the South, when we massacre him, shoot him down like a dog, burn him as we would inanimate rubbish merely because he appears in our midst as a laborer. We will not even endure him as a competitor in the field of industry. Let us see if we can not first do justice to this ward of ours, this race among us by no volition of his own, this race which sheds its blood for the Republic when the Republic is in peril. eLt us, I say, first do justice to the Negro in the industrial world that he may educate and train his children for the duties of citizenship, then we shall be much nearer a final solution of the race question.

But, Mr. President, I come back to the point from which I started—the right of local self-government, of home rule, an illusion when you take from the States the control of suffrage. I would not for any ordinary cause, for any transient or passing circumstances, place anything in the way of woman to vote. But this principle is fundamental; without its preservation the right to vote in time will be fruitless—yes; I go further, and say that without its preservation our form of government must ultimately fail. It is the source of character in citizenship, the fountain from which is fed the moral and intellectual life of all those who must carry on in the great and ever-increasing burdens of the Republic. I want the principle of democracy extended as far as possible. I know I am a believer in woman suffrage, but I would be blind to every page of printed history, from the experiment at Athens to this hour, if I did not know, and I would be recreant to my belief if I did not declare, that without the principle of local self-government democracy is a sham—aye, a deluding and debauching lie. The two great rights, the right to vote and the right of local self-government, of home rule, are the very pillars of sound and wholesome free government. They are not in conflict. They are not at war with each other. They should not be brought into conflict. They should go hand in hand. The friends of republican institutions should not consent that one shall destroy the other.

Is it our purpose, our conscious and deliberate purpose, to remove the last vestige of this great principle which it took the human family 2,000 years to discover and infinite suffering and sacrifice to establish as a workable principle in government? Do we propose to tear away and obliterate the very foundation stones upon which rests the integrity of the States? Do we propose, as serious men intrusted for a brief season with great responsibility and with fearful power for good or evil, to disregard the teachings of Hamilton and Marshall, of Jefferson and Monroe, of Jackson and Lincoln? De we propose to break down the lines which separate the States and compound the American people into one mass, all to be directed and governed from Washington? Do we intend to enact again upon this western continent the tragedy of Rome—the fearful, destructive, consuming tragedy of centralization which destroyed that nation? If so, are we fully advised of the consequences? Have we measured the step we are about to take, or are we simply moral delinquents fleeing before a revolution? Are we prepared to take the responsibility of such a course and to receive the final judgment of posterity? I recognize change as the law of life. I understand fully that a government without the power of change is without the means of life. But when a principle long fought for, long sacrificed for, comes at last to be established, and after more than a century of experience has proven itself to be wise and just, it seems intolerable, it seems a challenge to reason and a defiance of the first principles of human progress to disown and disregard it. Especially does it seem so when the thing we are seeking to accomplish can be achieved without such sacreligious iconoclasm.

I am told, I have been told over and over again, that we have outgrown these things and outlived the principles so dear and which seemed so vital to the fathers. We are informed that another age has come and we are moving forward under new duties and in accordance with the great law of change. But this principle of local self-government, of home rule, is not old; it is not and never can be antiquated. It is not one of those principles of government born of expediency and which passes away with time. You had just as well tell me that free government is old and out of date; that liberty is obsolete; that good citizenship is antiquated, as to tell me that this principle is no longer of sufficient moment to be preserved and vigilantly guarded. Like good citizenship which it helps us to build, it is just as imperative now as it was a century ago. It will only grow old and worthless when liberty and free government are rejected and disowned of men. It was the denial of this great principle that contributed so much to the bringing on of this war. It was the belief that it was to be vouchsafed to millions of people that helped to lighten its burden and assuage its sorrows. It will be the failure to grant the principle to those who are asking for it that will leave the world fallow for war again. But while this principle is recognized everywhere else, while millions have fought and suffered and sacrificed for it, step by step we are rapidly moving away from it; with an indifference incredible to every reflecting man we are about to abandon it. Not the stone which the builders rejected, but the stone which the builders put in and without which the temple could not have been reared we would tear away. They, the wisest in statecraft that the living God ever permitted to assemble for a common task, declared we will incorporate in this new scheme local government for local affairs, national government for national affairs; and I can not get my consent to destroy both or either. I have no reverence for things because they are old. I have no superstition for precedents. But I have a conviction which amounts to a religion that this Republic can exist only and alone upon the underlying principles upon which it was built.

Mr. President, the historian has told us that the halo of power played with peculiar brilliancy around the brow of the elder Napoleon the night he first wore the crown of emperor. But to the more thoughtful minds who looked upon the emperor as the salvation of France there was just appreciation also, even a more substantial glory perhaps for the common soldier, who, standing guard, protected the body of the emperor from the bullets and poisoned scimiter of the Bourbons. In these days of great moment when we are called upon to exercise vast and unusual powers, in these extraordinary times when the most stupendous problems that can vex and torment the minds of men engage our attention, and the most exalted energies of the Republic are being exerted, let us not forget that, after all, the life of this Government, the perpetuity of these institutions, depend upon the constant presence in the affairs of government of the average citizen from the common walks of life. Without his initiative, his self-reliance, his sturdy strength of mind, and his unswerving purpose, we can not succeed. Let us therefore never surrender the means by which he exerts this influence, the processes by which he is brought in contact with the Government and by which the Government is brought close to him. Without home rule, without local self-government, the average citizen soon ceases to be a law-abiding citizen and becomes an irresponsible factionist or revolutionist. These are his heritages, these are the things which make this Government his Government, and when we surrender them we signify our willingness to exclude him from the affairs of the Republic.

Therefore, viewing this matter as I do as involving a great and vital principle of government, much as I dislike to vote against the wishes of so many of the people of my State, I can not get my consent to record my conviction in favor of further destroying the fundamental principles upon which this Republic is established and without which it can not long endure.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I did not intend to discuss this joint resolution, as I am anxious, with others, for an early vote; but the argument of the distinguished Senator from Idaho has taken such a trend that I feel called upon to speak very briefly upon it, because there was a time when I held views very similar to those which he has just expressed, but which I was compelled to abandon if I would be consistent with the principles of popular government that I have long advocated.

Let me say in this connection, Mr. President, that I know of no man who has been more zealous or influential in advocating popular government throughout the land than the distinguished Senator from Idaho, and knowing that to be so, I have been very greatly surprised at some of the things which he has said in the speech which he has just concluded.

Before discussing that matter, Mr. President, I want to make just one brief reference to the minor objection that he makes as to the guaranty that is embodied in this joint resolution which he says the Congress never intends to carry out, because the guaranty contained in the fifteenth amendment has been ignored and abandoned.

The Senator knows full well that the fifteenth amendment embodied the color question, and the Senator knows just as well that there is no color question at all embodied in this amendment. It relates only to sex. There is no one in the South who will attempt to differentiate between a black man and a black woman; and if there were, either in the South or in the North, Congress would not hesitate to enforce the terms of this constitutional amendment, because that peculiar Negro problem would not be involved in it at all. I am not going to discuss at this time at any length the merits of the fifteenth amendment or the failure of Congress properly to enforce it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho takes the position, carried to its logical extent, that if there be 33 United States Senators who believe that a proposed alteration of the Constitution of the United States is not for the best interests of the people of the United States, notwithstanding all of the other people of the United States may be in favor of it, it is the duty of those 33 Senators to prevent the people of this Republic from securing such alteration of their Government as they desire.

Mr. President, I can conceive of no more dangerous attack upon popular government than such a theory as that. Why, especially during the past year or two, there is not one of us upon this floor this afternoon who has not said, in hundreds of speeches, that under our form of government the people have the right in an orderly way, through the means provided by the Constitution, to secure such alterations in the form of their government as they desire, and that in this Republic, whatever may be said of other lands, there is not the slightest excuse for the presence of the anarchist or the man who advocates "direct action"; and yet the Senator's argument is that if 33 Senators believe that an alteration in our Constitution is not for the best interests of the country, public opinion, however settled, however deliberately formed, shall be flaunted and cast aside.

Mr. President, because I believe in popular government, because I believe in the right of the people to rule, because I believe in their right to secure any amendment to the Constitution that they desire if they go about it in an orderly way by using the methods provided by the Constitution, I can not subscribe for a moment to the theories or the arguments advanced by the Senator from Idaho; and in this connection it might not be out of place to read just a paragraph from the Declaration of Independence:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

I believe that is good doctrine to-day, Mr. President, and I believe that when the people of the United States form deliberately a judgment as to an amendment or change in the Constitution it is our duty to permit them, in the form provided by the Constitution, to act upon it.

The Senator from Idaho talks about Prussianism, about three-fourths of the States being able to enforce their will upon one-fourth of the States that may be unwilling. But the Senator forgets that in this Constitution, to which we are now proposing an amendment, express provision is made for amendment, and when ratified by three-fourths of the States after having been adopted by two-thirds of the Congress, it becomes a part of the Constitution, and is as much a part of the Constitution of the United States as are any of the other provisions.

Prussianism? There can be no Prussianism in according to the people of the United States the right to secure such alterations in their government as they desire to secure. Prussianism is a thing upon the side of the Senator from Idaho in the argument he makes. Prussianism, indeed, it would be if 32 Senators against the will of the people of the country should, because they thought they were wiser than all the people, denied to them the right to secure such alterations in the Constitution as they desire.

Mr. BORAH. I doubt if there is very much difference of opinion between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Idaho with reference to fundamental matters. He makes use of the word "people" as against 33 Senators who may have the view that this ought not to be submitted. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin when the people are going to get a chance at this amendment? Will the Senator from Wisconsin vote for an amendment providing that before this constitutional amendment shall be made a part of the Constitution it shall be ratified by popular vote in each State of the Union?

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will say that we have no power to attach such a condition to the amendment. The Constitution itself provides how it shall be ratified, and there is no other means that can be provided. But I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I will gladly vote for the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] a day or two ago providing for a popular vote upon all constitutional amendments.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator agree to an amendment which will provide for the election of delegates to popular conventions to ratify it? That is, of course, what I meant when I spoke of a popular vote.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will say with reference to that, no; and for this reason: There are only two or three legislatures now in session. Before the great mass of the legislatures will have an opportunity to vote upon ratification they will have been elected by the people, and there is no occasion for holding two elections for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, they just had an election in Texas upon this question, where the people were permitted to vote. There are about 800,000 voters in Texas. Two hundred and fifty thousand of them voted, and about 110,000 of them voted for woman suffrage. When the legislature meets in Texas the legislature can ratify this amendment without any expression from the popular will at all, and yet according to the present status of popular sentiment in Texas it is overwhelmingly against suffrage. I think there have been two votes on woman suffrage in the State of Iowa, where the majority rule obtains. In both instances it has been voted down. The majority of votes which have been cast against suffrage in this country in different States is something over a million, as against a majority of about 254,000 in the States where it has obtained. The popular vote as a whole has been against suffrage. It is not the intention under this provision to have a popular vote upon this matter. That could be accomplished by a convention to ratify, but that will be rejected. The women who have been playing politics around the city of Washington for the last five or six years have learned their lessons well.

They much prefer to reason with the Members of Congress and to reason with the members of legislatures than to undertake to control the citizen's vote when he enters into the secrecy of the voting booth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And they do not want it left to any State convention.

Mr. BORAH. We are more amenable to sweet reason than those who are in the voting booths. It is not intended that the people of whom the able Senator speaks are to be permitted to pass upon this question at all.

So far as the right of 33 Senators to hold up an amendment is concerned, the fathers provided that when two-thirds of the Senators and Representatives determined to submit an amendment it should be submitted. I assume that was intended to call forth the deliberate judgment and conviction of each Member of Congress as to whether or not it was wise to submit that particular amendment. Otherwise they would have said that when a certain number of petitioners came up from the people, it should be submitted. But the fathers so arranged that the judgment of the Senators and Representatives should be had upon the question, and I am exercising my judgment under the Constitution. I do not believe I would be performing my duty to vote for the submission of an amendment which I think ought not to be adopted.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. If it could be provided in this amendment that the amendment should be ratified by conventions elected by a popular vote it would go far toward ameliorating my opposition to the amendment. In fact, I think I may say that if the Senator will assist me in putting into this amendment the provision that it shall be ratified by conventions selected by popular vote I will withdraw my objection. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator differentiate at all between a Senator exercising his judgment as to the merits of a proposition and exercising his judgment as to whether the people of the country desire an alteration in the form of government, and therefore it becomes his duty to support it?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator again lays stress upon the people. As I said a moment ago, if the Senator will provide me with a method by which the people can express themselves on this question, I will withdraw my objection to the amendment. I do not believe the people want to provide for suffrage in this way; the fact is, those who are advocating it are not willing to leave it to a vote of the people; that is precisely what they are seeking to avoid. I am willing to take the people's vote, but I am not willing to accept the legislatures' as a vote of the people.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say in reply that the States did not make the Constitution. The people made the Constitution and provided how amendments to it should be proposed and ratified.

Mr. BORAH. The Constitution provides two ways. The framers undoubtedly believed that there might come a time when it would be desirable to have a more direct voice of the people, so they provided ratification by legislature and ratification by convention. It has been a long time since the people have had a say about it. Let us give them an opportunity to have a say and provide a convention elected by the people.

Mr. LENROOT. The people will have exactly the same kind of say in the legislatures to be elected next year that they have on any question, some of them, I think the Senator will admit, even more important than this question.

Mr. BORAH. I understand; in other words, the Senator is not willing to have a convention?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator knows if a convention is held the delegates will be elected upon that issue alone, and there would be no other question involved. The thousand questions which enter into an election of a legislature, the question of partisanship, the division of parties in the State, and so forth, would subordinate the suffrage question until perhaps it would not be considered at all in the question of the election; but if a convention were held and that were the reason for adopting the convention alternative, the people have but one issue before them and that is the ratification of the amendment. In that way a vote of the people could be had.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator whether he urged a constitutional convention to ratify the amendment proposing the election of Senators by direct vote, and if not why not, if his position now is well taken.

Mr. BORAH. I do not recall that that question was ever raised. I certainly should not have been afraid of the popular vote in that instance.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator could have raised it upon that matter as well as upon this.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has raised a question here that the people are arrayed against these 33 Senators, but I see that the Senator is not willing that the people should have a voice in this question, because this suffrage matter has been defeated over and over again in the States by majority votes. I am led to urge a convention because of the argument of the Senator that the people will settle this. I say the people will not in any true sense, if ratification by the legislatures is had.

Mr. LENROOT. I take it that my own State of Wisconsin is one by which the Senator makes up that majority. It is true that some years ago the suffrage amendment was defeated by a very large majority in the State of Wisconsin—if I recollect rightly, by nearly 100,000 majority, and yet in the last campaign both the great parties declared for it in their State platforms.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly, just as a distinguished Senator on the other side of the Senate told me a day or two ago that all the people of his State were against it, and all the politicians in both parties were in favor of it.

The Senator says that no one has been a more arden advocate of popular government than the Senator from Idaho. I desire the Senator to understand that my conception of popular government is that there is no such thing as popular government unless the people are permitted to control their local affairs. If home rule or matters which concern communities in their several localities are brought here to Washington and settled by the Congress of the United States, it is the most deadly method by which we could possibly attack popular government.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think we have attacked popular government in the wet States in the prohibition amendment?

Mr. BORAH. In a measure; yes. As I said a few moments ago, if the State of Idaho, for instance, could have voted dry and have been protected as against the National Government there would have been no reason in the world for the adoption of the national amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that prohibition is more important than popular government?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it is; but the National Constitution has provided, and it was not within our power nor would it have been wise to repeal the commerce clause of the Constitution. The prohibition amendment was necessary in that instance to enable the States to have what they wanted. Now, I want to be frank. If the Webb-Kenyon law and the Reed amendment could have been relied upon as standing the final test of the courts or the test against repeal, I should not have felt that prohibition was justified. But for 40 years States had been voting dry and yet could not be dry, because under the commerce clause the liquor could be shipped in. That led me and others to support the amendment. If a State could adopt suffrage, and yet the National Government could interfere and prevent its enjoying suffrage, then I would vote for this amendment. But a State may have suffrage or may reject it, and no power may say nay. I see a wide difference.

Mr. WATSON. Did not the Webb-Kenyon law protect the people of Idaho in their choice on the temperance question?

Mr. BORAH. It did; but, as I said a few moments ago, the constitutionality of that law was disputed by some of the ablest lawyers in the Senate at the time it was passed, and at the time the constitutional provision was first advocated by those who were urging it. It is true that before the amendment was finally submitted that the Webb-Kenyon law had been upheld. At least, that is my recollection. But some of the ablest lawyers in this country still contend that decision was unsound and will ultimately be modified or overruled. I have no doubt at all but what if the Webb-Kenyon law and the Reed law had been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States before the campaign had committed the country to prohibition even the advocates of prohibition would not have been in favor of the national amendment. The advocates of prohibition were driven to it by reason of the fact that States like Maine, or other prohibition States, which had been prohibition or dry for years, were supplied with liquor under the protection of the national law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In aid of State rights?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. It was for that reason that the States were not permitted to settle the question and that the prohibitionists of the country were driven to protect themselves by a national amendment. Local self-government was denied to the States already by virtue of the commerce clause and especially by its abuse. I have never felt under the circumstances that I was untrue to this principle, in which I devoutly believe. But if I erred in that instance, I have repented, and I do not propose under any pressure that may be exercised to err again. And there has been some pressure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, we have heard it repeatedly said that this and other amendments to the Constitution should be ratified or submitted because there is a popular judgment in their favor. Of course, I recognize if I were to propose an amendment to the pending resolution to submit the resolution to popular vote in the States, it would immediately be said that the purpose of the amendment was to defeat the resolution, because there is no such method of submission provided in the Constitution of the United States; and that might properly be said. But the Constitution does provide a method that is analogous to a popular vote, just as close to a popular vote as the election of a President of the United States is by a popular vote.

In the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of a President, an electoral college was provided, in which the electorate selects certain men to cast their vote in the electoral college for their choice for President. I do not suppose there is a man or woman in the United States who really differentiates between the election of a President by the electoral college and a direct election of a President by the people of the United States, except in so far as representation in the electoral college limits the right of suffrage or the power of the people of each individual State to act. Otherwise, the election of a President of the United States is directly by the people.

The Constitution provides a method that never has been exercised in the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution, and that is to authorize the Congress to submit amendments to the Constitution to conventions called for the purpose of ratification and for no other purpose. We hear the appeal resounding through this Chamber that the people of the United States have a sovereign right to pass on this question. I am no prophet nor am I the son of a prophet, but I am willing to stand here and prophesy that a most pronounced vote in this Chamber against an opportunity for the people of the United States to pass judgment on a proposed amendment to the Constitution will be cast by those who have cried the loudest that the people of the United States should have the opportunity given them. But to give those Senators a chance to voice their sentiments I propose the following amendment to the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, strike out the words "the legislatures of" and in lieu thereof insert the words "conventions in," so that the paragraph will read:

Resolved, etc., That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The language of the Constitution is familiar to the Members of this body, but in order that it may appear in the RECORD I will read Article V of the Constitution of the United States, which says:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article, and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

It does not take a revolutionary method to accomplish this result. The opportunity has been here from the beginning. There is not a Senator in this Chamber who does not know that if this amendment is adopted to the pending resolution conventions will be called in each of the several States for the purpose of deciding whether or not the woman-suffrage amendment shall become the supreme law of the land.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator in the beginning of his able speech stated that a convention for ratification of constitutional amendments had never been resorted to. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the Corwin amendment, submitted by Congress March 3, 1861, and which is still pending, by the way. It was ratified by the legislatures of two States, Maryland and Ohio, and the State of Illinois in 1862 called a convention and delegates were elected upon the specific question as to whether or not they would ratify the so-called Corwin amendment, and the convention was held, which ratified or attempted to ratify that proposed amendment. For myself I do not believe that particular convention was of any efficacy, because the amendment was not submitted to conventions, but there was a convention called to consider the amendment in that form.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator for his contribution to the history of the matter, but what I referred to was that the Congress of the United States had never submitted an amendment to conventions for ratification.

Mr. ASHURST. That is quite true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Congress must select one or the other method. I do not believe if we referred this amendment to the legislatures of the several States for ratification, a State could call a convention to ratify it by that method. On the other hand, if we submit it to conventions of the several States, the action of the legislatures in reference to the matter would be null and void. Yet Congress in submitting an amendment must first determine by which method it proposes to have the process of ratification take place.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator's amendment were adopted, would the Senator then think it necessary for Congress to enact legislation to carry it out or would it be self-operating?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think myself it would be self-operating, but I believe the power would still rest in the Federal Government, if it desires to do so, to provide the method by which the conventions should be called.

Mr. FALL. In the event the Senator did not go further and follow his amendment, if adopted, by legislation, how would conventions be called?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They would be called by the several States.

Mr. FALL. But the constitutions generally of the several States provide how a constitutional amendment, for example, shall be adopted and how a convention shall be called.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; for an amendment to a State constitution, but not for an amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Mr. FALL. No; and they are silent upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Therefore, you are up against exactly the reason why Congress has never submitted an amendment for approval by conventions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No one knows better than the Senator who has just addressed me that because the State constitutions are silent the legislatures of the several States have full power to act in the matter.

Mr. FALL. Under the contention of the Senator from Alabama it would be necessary, if any amendment is adopted, for the legislatures then to meet and pass upon the proposition as to whether or not they would call a convention and provide for a method of calling it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. FALL. How would it be done, then?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It would be necessary for the legislatures to provide for the calling of a convention, provide the machinery for calling it, unless Congress itself, after the submission of the amendment, chose to provide the machinery for the conventions to meet.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator think that State rights would not be violated if the Congress of the United States submitted an amendment to be passed upon by the State conventions and proceeded to say how a State convention should be called and to call it itself? Does the Senator think that would not be a violation of State rights?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am surprised that the able Senator from New Mexico should inject such an argument. I expect next for the Senator to charge me with being derelict to the principles I believe in, in local self-government, because at one time in my life I dared to bring before the Congress of the United States a revenue bill raising revenue for the Federal Government or, perchance, that I voted for a bill to raise an army. The Senator has not forgotten, but his argument would lead us to suppose he has forgotten, that there are certain delegated powers to the Federal Government that it has the right to exercise, and one of those delegated powers is the right to propose amendments to the Federal Constitution, and the power to propose them carries with it the incidents to see that the proposal is carried into effect. The Senator from New Mexico is too good a lawyer not to know that conclusion and to believe in it. But the Senator proposed to have a little fun with his colleague, and I understand his jokes.

Mr. FALL. No; if the Senator will permit me, the Senator has simply placed himself in the position I knew he would be compelled to occupy. In other words, if his amendment is adopted, then we proceed to fight over the question as to how he proposes to carry it into effect, as to how he proposes to submit it. You have to put all the machinery into operation, the machinery of the National Government into the different States, to call the very conventions which the Senator is now calling for.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; not at all. There is no doubt the Federal Government has the power to fix the time and place of the election of Senators or Representatives in Congress. For many years it failed to exercise that power and left it to the State laws and the State legislatures to exercise the power; but in its wisdom and judgment it finally concluded to pass a law and define the time when Members of Congress should be elected. Yet, if my memory serves me right, even as to that Federal law, providing for the election of Members of Congress and fixing the date on which all Members of Congress shall be elected throughout the United States, there is one State in the Union that continues to follow its old laws and elect its Members of Congress on a different date, and their places in the Congress have never been opposed or contested on that ground.

If you adopt this amendment, I do not hesitate to say that there is not a State in the Union whose legislature will not provide for a convention and hold the convention in proper form. The power to make quarantine regulations against disease coming from abroad rests with the Federal Government. As long as the National Government failed to act the courts sustained State quarantine laws, but when the Federal Government finally concluded to exercise its jurisdiction its laws superseded the laws passed by the States. In the failure of the Federal Government to act the States can act, and they will act. There is no necessity for any further legislation if this amendment is adopted, because we can safely leave it to the States to call conventions that are in favor of woman suffrage, and if they are not in favor of woman suffrage it would be futile to call the convention, because the assumption is they would not ratify it.

But Senators on this floor say the people are for it. If the people are for it in the several States, I think we can safely indulge the presumption that the people of those several States will provide conventions for its ratification. The only answer I make to the Senator in reference to the reserve power of the Federal Government in this matter is that I do not propose to admit the condition that neglecting exercising the Federal power, not the State power, the Federal Government does not lose the opportunity to act and protect itself.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will allow me, in the first place, I will say to the Senator that I have not made an argument either in favor of or against woman suffrage. I am simply trying to get at the legal conclusion that the Senator has undoubtedly reached in his own mind, I presume, prior to offering this amendment, as to what the status will be afterwards.

First, as I understand him to say—and I agree with him—the Congress of the United States may have the power to put in operation the machinery for calling these conventions. I believe he agrees to that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do; Congress has the power; but I do not think it is necessary for it to exercise it.

Mr. FALL. But the Senator says that in the absence of that undoubtedly the States would call conventions, and that, therefore, there would be no necessity following his amendment for congressional legislation, as I understand?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly not.

Mr. FALL. The Senator has stated, I think—at least, that is what I have understood him to say—that the States must act through their legislatures in calling a convention.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know of no other power of the States that could appropriate the money, call a convention, prescribe how many delegates there should be, and pay them their salaries. If there is in some State the power vested in the governor already—I know of no such condition, but it might be—then it would not require the action of the legislature.

Mr. FALL. I think there is no other power, as the Senator said awhile ago, to call a convention for the amendment of the State constitution; but I do not think that there is any provision in the constitution of any State in the Union for calling a convention to ratify an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Therefore, it would require legislation to be adopted at once by the State legislatures. Those of us who propose to vote for this amendment are proposing to submit it to that very State legislature. The Senator has said that if the legislature was not in favor of the amendment, possibly it would not call a convention; and that, if it were in favor of it, that it would call a convention. If it is in favor of it, it will ratify the amendment; and if it is not in favor of it, doubtless it will not. Meanwhile very much time and a great deal of money would be saved.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, we all congratulate ourselves that our friend, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, after declining to be a Member of this body, was sent back here to be our colleague; but I fear that the war and the fight on the political hustings have become so closely allied with the Senator that since he has gotten back to Washington he can not forget it. Like the mustard gas of the battle field, it clings to him even after he has left the field of combat.

Of course, if we are looking at this question purely from a political standpoint, of the swinging tides of political opinion, the Senator may say, and truthfully say, that this method might cause delay, or that it might cause inaction; but I offer the amendment to sustain the great principle for which men have been contending here for an hour or more, that the people of the several States have the right to determine this question; and, I take it, there is not a State in the Union that, whether it be in favor of or adverse to the adoption of this amendment, when its legislature met would not provide a method by which the people of the several States might exercise their voice in this matter.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield to me for a statement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. FALL. The Senator has said that he is afraid that I came back here somewhat excited.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not excited; the Senator from New Mexico never gets excited.

Mr. FALL. However, that I returned at least yet influenced by the war which we have been through and by the political war in which I have just been engaged. I simply want to say to the Senator that my age precluded my entering the war, and that during the last political campaign I did not leave my ranch home and made no speech and no appeal whatsoever for votes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not refer to the Senator's personality.

Mr. FALL. No; I understand that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was referring to the atmosphere of a political campaign.

Mr. FALL. Well, in so far as the atmosphere of politics is concerned, it did not reach Three Rivers, I am glad to say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am always glad to have the Senator's interpretation of his own view.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator from Alabama leaves this very interesting question which has been precipitated, I desire to inquire of him whether, if the Congress of the United States has the right to provide the machinery through which the various conventions in the several States shall be called, it also has the right, as a part of that legislation, to prescribe who shall vote for the delegates to the convention?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not think it has, for the right of suffrage, either for a Federal or a State election, is now fixed in a definite way by the Constitution of the United States and could only be changed by an amendment to that Constitution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. To what provision of the Constitution of the United States does the Senator refer? The Constitution of the United States fixes the qualifications of the voters for Members of the House of Representatives, and that is all, so far as my recollection goes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the clause to which I refer; but if that clause does not apply——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It certainly does not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, of course, the Congress of the United States has no power; for this is a Government of delegated powers, and, as has been said by a very distinguished jurist in a decision some years ago in the Supreme Court of the United States, when you are asked whether the Government of the United States—the Federal Government—has a certain power, you must find that power defined in the Constitution; but when you are asked if a State has a power, you know that it has the power when you do not find it inhibited either by the Federal Constitution or the State constitution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So I understand; but I understand the Senator to say also that there is an implied power in the Congress of the United States to provide all the machinery by which the conventions are to be called and held.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; the Senator is inserting a few adjectives in my remarks that I did not place there. The Senator says that I stated that I could define all of the machinery. No; I did not say that. I said that the Federal Government would have the power to define the machinery for calling the convention as an incident to the power granted in the Constitution to propose amendments to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; but I inquire of the Senator where he draws the line? All the rest of the machinery, all the other provisions concerning the election, are to be prescribed by Congress, but Congress can not prescribe who shall vote at that election?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. How does the Senator draw that distinction?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not draw it. The Constitution draws it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. That is what I am asking the Senator. What provision of the Constitution draws it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When the Constitution prescribes the terms and the qualifications of the electorate for Members of the House of Representatives and of the electors for President and now for Senators of the United States, and thereafter is silent, unquestionably the power of the Federal Congress, in reference to the electorate, is exhausted, except when it is revitalized or vitalized anew by an amendment to the Constitution. But the Senator from Montana knows even better than I do—for I yield to his premiership, so far as I am concerned, as a constitutional lawyer—that the courts of the land have always held that a grant of power to the Federal Government carries with it all of the incidents that are necessary to put that power into effect.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is just the point for which I am contending.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely, but it does not carry the incidents that are not necessary. It will be necessary, if this amendment is adopted, for some provision to be made as to the time and place and manner of holding conventions in the several States for the ratification or rejection of this amendment, but it is not necessary as an incident of that power at all to define who shall be the electors to vote for delegates to that convention, because the electorate is already provided for by the several States of the Union. I take it that the fathers who wrote this Constitution did not intend to do a futile thing when they provided for the holding of these conventions. They certainly did not propose that the qualification of the electors of the several States should be changed, but they assumed that, if these conventions were held, those who have the powers of the electorate in the several States to-day would select the delegates to this convention.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Just one more question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator will remember that different qualifications are prescribed in the various States for different elections. For instance, in my own State, for many years before we had woman suffrage, women could vote on certain subjects. So when the Constitution provided in relation to the election of the Members of the House of Representatives, it provided that any person who had the qualifications of an elector of the most numerous branch of the State legislature would have the qualifications of elector for Representative in Congress. But what are the qualifications prescribed in the various States for electors or delegates to a convention to ratify or reject a constitutional amendment? Are there any such?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, there is an electorate in all the States. There is an electorate, and also a limited electorate, in some States. I take it that when in any State a constitutional amendment is to be submitted to the electorate it means the general electorate and not the limited electorate. There is no real difficulty about this proposition.

I realize that this amendment may be embarrassing to some gentlemen who have contended that this resolution should pass, because the people of the United States have a right to have their voice reflected in the Constitution. I realize further that it is possible that many men have on the hustings promised their constituents or have pledged themselves to vote for the pending constitutional amendment, and they fear the criticism of those to whom they have rendered those pledges, unless they dot every "i" and cross every "t" in the submission of this amendment as originally prepared.

I never criticize my colleagues. I realize that there are abler men than myself representing the people of the United States in the Senate. There is only one thing that I claim for myself, and so long as I have the right to represent my State in the Senate I shall exercise that right independently of every man and of every woman. I conceive that it is my duty to retain unto myself the high privilege to represent what I believe the best interests of my people; to reflect their views in this Senate; and, whenever I think that the existence of the Government or the liberties of the people may be endangered, to change my viewpoint and exercise my own free will on all questions that may come before this body at all times.

I think one of the most unfortunate things that happen in a legislative body is the modern tendency of men to commit themselves on public questions before they come to the final day of submission in the legislative body, and therefore unthinkingly and ill-advisedly sometimes they shackle their hands so that in the end they find themselves in embarrassing situations. I think that if we could free this question from all considerations of that kind this great issue could well be submitted, not to the people of the whole of the United States but to the people of the several States in the manner and form where the final decree of the electorate could be registered without any other conflicting interest to carry the question away from the real principles involved.

I do not know that I can hope or expect the Senate at this late hour to modify the proposed constitutional amendment, but I do know that if we want to read this proposed amendment into the Constitution so that it will really receive the approval of the American people at heart, then we had better adopt the amendment I propose and give the people of the several States a free and full opportunity to act in this matter.

Other Senators know as well as I do that there are legislatures of the various States in session now which if this proposed amendment were submitted to them within this week, or within the month, would act on it, ratifying or rejecting it. Why should that power be taken away from the sovereign people of the States? Why should they not have a full and free opportunity to act? I know of no reason except that it might cause delay. Well, there will be delay before this proposed amendment to the Constitution is ratified, but if it is delayed long enough to give the electorate a full and fair opportunity to reflect their sentiments in the final law of the land it will be far more satisfactory to all concerned.

Now, I wish to say on the main question that I am not opposing the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment giving the women of the United States a right to vote because they are women. There are far more disastrous powers to place in the hands of women than that of the exercise of the elective franchise. As a distinguished Senator said here this morning, in my study of this question I do not find that the high standards of the States that have given to women the right to vote for the past decade or two have been pulled down because the franchise has been granted to women; neither do I find, in my study of the question, that the States wherein women have had the right to vote for the last quarter of a century have risen above the standard of their sister States where men alone exercise the franchise. It is not from that standpoint that I view the issue. If the women of America were a separate people there might be some question as to whether their views are reflected in the Government, but the women of America are a part of the American people; they have certain votes in their family circle, and those votes, whatever they are, whether they be cast by father and son, or hereafter whether they be cast by mother and daughter, will continue to reflect the sentiment of that family circle, whether it be for the good or the ill of the Nation. That is not the question about which I am concerned.

I hear men justify themselves in voting to submit an amendment to the Federal Constitution because they say the Constitution itself provides for its amendment, and therefore we are justified in proposing the amendment. That is an argument in a circle that continues to chase itself around the horizon without a place to alight. It is not the amendment of the Federal Constitution that is involved here; it is a great fundamental principle of government that we are considering to-day in the Senate. Yes, we can propose amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution provides for a President of the United States to serve for four years. We could submit an amendment to it providing that the tenure of the President shall be for life; aye, if the votes could be obtained, by constitutional amendment a king could be enthroned at the White House; but would you be justified in doing that because you had the power to do so? No man can justify himself in voting for this amendment because we have the power to submit it. The real question involved is the fundamental principle of government.

The great diversity throughout the United States of race, of climate, of geography, of business conditions, is such that, except for the great laws that are necessary for the Federal Government to enable it to uphold its strong arm, the central Government at Washington is incapable of making laws for all of the people of the United States. There is no more possibility of the Legislature of Alabama being able to make just laws for the people of Maine than there is for the people of Maine to make just laws for the people of Alabama. Not that the people of the two States are not akin; they are closely akin; in those two States they come primarily from the same original stock, without much influx of alien blood, and yet, living in two different communities, in two different sections of the United States, they think along different lines, they act along different lines, they live along different lines, and it would be impossible for the legislative body of one State to reflect into law the matured wishes of the people of the other State for a government that responded to the will of the people. That is true of the Federal Government. Our greatest differences upon the floor of the Senate grow out of geographical conditions. The interests and the wishes of our people are diversified, and because of that we clash here. The stronger succeeds, often to the material detriment of the weaker side.

So far as the exercise of the delegated powers of the Federal Government is concerned, the great powers of war and peace, the control of our foreign affairs, the collection of taxes at the customhouse for the support of the Government, all of these great questions we must intrust to the Federal Government at Washington; but when it comes to those powers of government which invade the family home and the fireside, that welcome the infant into life and carry old age to the cemetery, those laws of our intimate life and living, if we want just government, must be determined by the local people who live under them. That is the only way we can accomplish the desired result.

You may say that this proposed constitutional amendment does not tear down the superstructure of local self-government. It may not tear down the principle at one fell swoop of the ax, but each time the ax stroke cuts the block from the tree the superstructure is growing weaker at the root. This proposed amendment involves the real pyramid of local self-government, because whenever you destroy the power of the State to control its electorate the day is at hand when you destroy the State itself.

But more than that, you may say that this proposal only affects the electorate by adding voters to it. So might an amendment providing for universal suffrage, an amendment providing for suffrage of all ages, all conditions, all races, and all kinds of people only affect the electorate, but it is drawing that power that remained in the States, that reserved power, away from the States to that extent and placing it here in Washington for final determination. What effect does that have on the voter? The more you centralize that power in Washington the more you diminish the reflected power of the individual citizen of the Republic and of the States. If you had a plebiscite, and submitted your laws to the will of the electorate, to all the people of the United States, you might have 10,000,000 people voting at the election. If you submit them to the people of Alabama, you may have 100,000 or 150,000 people voting at the election. If you submit them to some smaller county in some State of the Union, you may only have an electorate of 1,000 people.

So far as the great powers of the Federal Government are concerned, of necessity they must be determined by the larger electorate; but when you come to the local questions of government, the questions that are in the home of every man and a part of his daily life, do you want those powers concentrated in the city of Washington, where the voter, the citizen, only reflects one part in ten million; or do you want him, as to local conditions, to reflect the voting strength of 100,000 or 200,000 people in the State? Or, if it comes down to a minor question in each county, do you want him to have his reflected strength in that electorate of one in a thousand or two thousand or five thousand people, instead of the ten million of which his vote is only a part, if the decisions in the last analysis be rendered in Washington?

Where are we going to stop on this downward road of popular government or this upbuilding of centralized power at the seat of the Federal Government? The proposal of this amendment not only works an injury in itself, but it reflects the injury in its method of submission. Until the time came when those seeking additional power for certain purposes commenced knocking at the door of the Congress to accomplish results, rather than working out their accomplishments through their own State legislatures, the question among the people of the several States of breaking down local self-government was far afield. But now that certain great interests have determined that they must work out their plans through the power of the Federal Government, we hear the orator on every stump denying the protection of the Constitution of the United States, some even going so far as to proclaim that it would be better for these people if we had no Constitution at all, overlooking the fact that the brutal will of a majority is a soviet government; that the brutal will of the leader of that body is anarchy; that the protection of our liberties and our rights grows out of the protection of law; that our freedom is not guaranteed by men, it is guaranteed by constitutional enactment; and where you tear down that Constitution for the purpose of writing the will of a brutal majority into the law of the land you destroy the minority. You need no protection, if you be in the majority, against the will of that majority, because that majority is your will; but who knows but perchance to-morrow you may find yourself in the minority? And when that hour comes, without a government of law, without a constitutional restriction for the protection of your life, your home, your property, or the integrity of your family itself, tell me whence the protection will come to you that you inherited from your fathers of old.

No, Mr. President, it is not a question to-day as to whether the women of America should have the right to vote. It is a question of whether, in the end, our Government shall live. It is a question as to whether the fundamental principles that are necessary for the life of this great Republic shall survive.

There can be no doubt in the mind of any man who has studied the fundamental question that when you destroy the principle of local self-government and center the powers of government under the dome of this Capitol, then the disintegration of this great Republic has begun and the hour of downfall is only a question of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I understand there are several Senators who desire to be heard on this question, and it is not possible to get a vote on it to-night; and I understand that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to make a statement.

Mr. SMOOT. It will take just a few moments. I will say to the Senator that I also understand that an executive session is desired.

Mr. WATSON. As soon as the Senator from Utah shall have finished his statement I shall move for an executive session; and then, at the end of the executive session, I desire to say to the Senators present that I shall move a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, and when we convene to-morrow I shall insist on the Senate remaining in session until this question has been finally disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield to me to make a brief statement?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I had very much hoped that there could be a vote upon this matter to-day. I am very anxious to have my vote recorded, but I am simply obliged to leave on the 5.50 train this evening, and I shall not be able to be here to-morrow.

Mr. WATSON. I very much regret the situation, Mr. President, because I know that the Senator from Ohio is quite anxious to be recorded on this question; but a number of Senators were compelled to leave this afternoon, and it was not possible to hold them here in sufficient numbers to have this vote. Therefore, out of deference to their wishes, I consented earlier in the afternoon that the matter might go over for a final vote until to-morrow.

I very greatly regret the situation, and I trust the Senator from Ohio will be able to procure a pair.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was informed, either yesterday or this morning—I have forgotten which—that pairs would be arranged for; and, in view of that fact, I certainly hope that one can be arranged for me. I am not in the habit of being away when it comes to voting upon matters of this kind, but the circumstances are such that I am simply compelled to go.

THE SINKING FUND.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on last Saturday, in an interview with Mr. Welliver, for the New York Sun, I discussed the question of the obligations that the Government of the United States will be under June 30, 1920; and I also referred to a proposition of providing for a sinking fund for the purpose of refunding the obligations of the Government. Mr. Welliver reported that correctly in the New York Sun.

When the last session of Congress opened I took up the question of a sinking fund with officials of the Treasury Department, and also made public statements as to what I thought the plan ought to be to refund the public debt. I had in mind at that time a plan of doing so, and repeated it to Mr. Welliver last Saturday, hoping that it would be the policy of the Government to adopt a plan by which the obligations of the Government could be paid within a reasonable time.

Yesterday I looked up the bill which was introduced in the House at the last session of Congress covering this question, knowing it passed the House, came to the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and was reported from the Finance Committee to the Senate. On the 2d day of March the bill passed the Senate. It passed without an amendment to the House bill. My recollection was that in the closing days of the session that bill failed of passage; but I find that the President approved it on the 3d day of March, 1919. So that the country may know just what provision is made under existing law for providing a sinking fund for the retirement of the bonds and note issues of the Government, I ask that section 6 of that act be incorporated in the RECORD now.

I have received so many letters from all over the United States in relation to this matter that evidently its passage is not widely known. I am pleased that the act is now in force. If the rate of 2½ per cent proves too great a burden, it can be reduced by future legislation. I thought myself that the bill had failed; and now I ask that section 6 of that act be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of the remarks of the Senator from Utah.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEC. 6. (a) That there is hereby created in the Treasury a cumulative sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the first liberty bond act, the second liberty bond act, the third liberty bond act, the fourth liberty bond act, or under this act, and outstanding on July 1, 1920. The sinking fund and all additions thereto are hereby appropriated for the payment of such bonds and notes at maturity, or for the redemption or purchase thereof before maturity by the Secretary of the Treasury at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he shall prescribe, and shall be available until all such bonds and notes are retired. The average cost of the bonds and notes purchased shall not exceed par and accrued interest. Bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund shall be canceled and retired and shall not be reissued. For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and for each fiscal year thereafter, until all such bonds and notes are retired there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of such sinking fund, an amount equal to the sum of (1) 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920, and (2) the interest which would have been payable during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made on the bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund during such year or in previous years.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a separate annual report of the action taken under the authority contained in this section.

(b) Sections 3688, 3694, 3695, and 3696 of the Revised Statutes, and so much of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes as provides a permanent annual appropriation of 1 per cent of the entire debt of the United States to be set apart as a sinking fund are hereby repealed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 3, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we pray for a wider distribution of common sense versus unreason and wild speculations; freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religious convictions, based upon truth versus anarchy, Bolshevism, and the unreasonable demands of the uneducated.

The bomb thrower is not so much to blame as the unbridled tongue which arouses the worst passions of men and incites them to violence.

Strengthen, we beseech Thee, the arm of justice against license used to excite and encourage the ignorant to violence.

Grant that the laws passed by reasonable men may be prosecuted by the agents of justice to the last degree, that peace may come, and safety reign in our land and throughout the world. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that the credentials of R. WALTON MOORE are on the Speaker's desk certifying to his election to the vacancy in the eighth Virginia district caused by the resignation of the Hon. Mr. Carlin. Mr. MOORE has been elected in that district to serve in this Congress. He is present, and I ask that he may have the oath of office administered to him.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia appeared at the bar of the House and the oath was administered by the Speaker.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I asked that the bill which I introduced to create a national park at Mammoth Cave, Ky., be taken from the Committee on Appropriations and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] objected. I have since consulted with the gentleman from Wyoming, and he thinks it is proper that the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and I move that it be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the bill referred to be taken from the Committee on Appropriations and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, very clearly the Committee on the Public Lands comes nearer having jurisdiction of a bill of this kind than any other committee of the House. Under the rules no committee of the House has a very clear jurisdiction over a matter of this kind.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman had better ask unanimous consent, as this is a little out of the ordinary.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a change of reference be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to make the motion, but he now asks unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

RENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Rent of buildings, Department of Agriculture: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, for use of the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture, $158,689.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over this item and recur to it later. This matter was referred to a subcommittee, which has not yet reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over to be returned to later. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATES RELATIONS SERVICE.

Salaries, States Relations Service: One director, $4,500; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk or chief accountant, $2,400; 1 financial clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk, $1,980; 1 clerk or proof reader, $1,800; 4 clerks, class 4, 11 clerks, class 3; 2 clerks, at $1,500 each; 13 clerks, class 2; 2 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,260; 36 clerks, class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,100 each; 39 clerks, at $1,000 each; 31 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk or lantern-slide colorist, $900; 3 clerks, at $840 each; 2 clerks, at $720 each; 5 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $600 each; 3 messengers or laborers, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $600 each; 13 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 3 messenger boys, at $300 each; 1 skilled laborer, $900; 4 charwomen, at $480 each; 11 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $203,840.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 67, to the item which was passed over temporarily for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 67, line 22, after the word "department," strike out the "$128,389" and insert "$100,000," and the following:
"Provided, That only such part of this sum shall be available to pay rent for space which can not be furnished by the public building commission of Government buildings located in the District of Columbia."

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this amendment come in after the word "agriculture."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to suggest that.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. This is a reduction which may please some Members on the Republican side of the House. The cause of the reduction is based on a survey which is being made by a commission now, finding space for the various departments, and they expect to furnish sufficient space to do away with many buildings which are being rented in the city at this time. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], chairman of that commission, informs me that he believes there will be plenty of space for all the departments in a short time. For that reason we are asking this reduction from the amount appropriated for rent in the District of Columbia be made at this time.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. As I caught the reading of the amendment, the reduction is about $58,000. What was the reason for the exact figures the gentleman put in his amendment?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I will confess that it is a plain guess. As a matter of fact, it is supposed there will not be any appropriation needed. The chairman of the commission informs me there will be plenty of space available for all departments which are now scattered around in different parts of the city that can be moved at this time, and there will be needed but very little extra rented space. I do not believe they will expend a dollar of the $100,000.

Mr. LEVER. Probably not; but it will be unfortunate if space should become necessary and no funds available for the purpose. There is no doubt about that, judging from all the investigations that I can make. I am not going to oppose the amendment, but I throw out the suggestion that it might be wise to leave it as it is, with a limitation of language.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman will recall the statement that was made by Mr. Harrison, that it is very much desired by the department that certain activities of the department be transferred. It is possible that temporary quarters are more suitable and acceptable than are some that are now being used. I know a number of them are housed in what I would call firetraps. With the assurance we have from the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], this seems the proper and wise thing to do.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I might say just one word further. Mr. CLARK stated that by the 1st of July they would have this question settled, he thought, so that they would know all about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cooperative agricultural extension work, to be allotted, paid, and expended in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and under the same supervision as the additional appropriations made by the act of May 8, 1914 (33 Stat. L., p. 372), entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," $1,500,000; and all sums appropriated by this act for use for demonstration or extension work within any State shall be used and expended in accordance with plans mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the proper officials of the college in such State which receives the benefits of said act of May 8, 1914.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 70, line 24, strike out "thirty-third" and insert "thirty-eighth."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $215,000, as follows: Alaska, $75,000, of which $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available for the erection of barns, purchase of breeding live stock, and other expenses connected with the stock-breeding experiments on the island of Kodiak and at the Matanuska station; Hawaii, $50,000; Porto Rico, $50,000; Guam, $25,000, of which $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available to repair damage due to typhoon; and the Virgin Islands of the United States, $15,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated for the experiment station in Hawaii $10,000 may be used in agricultural extension work in Hawaii: And provided further, That hereafter employees of the Department of Agriculture assigned to permanent duty in the Virgin Islands shall be entitled to the same privileges as to leave of absence as are conferred upon employees assigned to Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Guam by the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 441), and if any employee of the agricultural experiment stations of the United States in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands shall elect to postpone the taking of any or all of the annual leave to which he may be entitled under the said act of June 30, 1914, he may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, subject to the interests of the public service, be allowed to take at one time unused annual leave which may have accumulated within not to exceed four years, and be paid at the rate obtaining at the time the leave is granted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the last proviso of the paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. The purpose of the proviso is to extend the same privilege to these people that is extended in the United States. I concede the point of order. It is new language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the relative utility and economy of agricultural products for food, clothing, and other uses in the home, with special suggestions of plans and methods for the more effective utilization of such products for these purposes, with the cooperation of other bureaus of the department, and to disseminate useful information on this subject, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $46,280.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 17, page 73, the figures "$46,280" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$26,280."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 73, line 17, strike out the figures "$46,280" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$26,280."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment is to call attention to the wide diversity of work being carried on in the Department of Agriculture.

I have read the testimony in the hearings before the committee, and I must confess that it seems to me pretty far-fetched to include an examination of cloth and that sort of thing in any agricultural activity that may exist. Further than that, there seems no good testimony given by anybody, so far as the hearing is concerned, as to the reason for increasing this appropriation from $26,280 to $46,280. In other words, my amendment simply removes the additional amount asked for in the appropriation, restoring the amount to that now carried, viz, $26,280.

In this connection I think it would be very acceptable, indeed, to the Committee of the Whole if we could have some explanation of what has been accomplished by this appropriation in previous years. I find no record of any such. The item is very plain, looking to the employment of more people in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to the extent of the additional $20,000 of the people's money. We are criticized by the members of the committee and our friends on the opposite side of the aisle for endeavoring to find some possible economies. I think that is an unfair criticism, so far as any points I may have raised during the past two days are concerned. They have been very few, but such as I have raised have been very largely for information. That is my reason at this time. I would like an explanation and a reason for this increased appropriation, and likewise information as to what has been done with the previous appropriation.

They are continually getting in little wedges here and little wedges there of small amounts, largely increased as the years roll by, and that accounts for such a bill as that before us to-day, carrying very large items, and for a very large aggregate amount in comparison to the needs of the department in previous years. All of the time some slight increases are made here and there, putting more and more men, as this item does, on the statutory rolls. I think the inquiry I am making is justifiable and fair. I also feel that unless the very best explanation can be given my amendment ought to be adopted, reducing the amount carried by this item to that which has been previously in the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the estimate was $76,280, the committee has reported $46,280, a cut of $30,000. Here is the reason given by the department:

During the past two years the public demand for reliable information on the scientific and economic aspects of the home problems has increased greatly. This has been due to the increased cost of living and a shortage of many materials consumed in the home.

If the gentleman will refer to the hearings and the Book of Estimates, he will find that there is a very urgent request made for the $76,000. This work has been going on for a number of years. It is not new work. The committee believes that it has brought results, and in view of the high cost of living and of the number who are interested in that cost of living and the interest taken in the matter generally it seems proper that a small amount like $46,000 should be allowed at this time.

I think in view of the fact the committee cut the appropriation nearly 50 per cent it shows the committee has exercised great care, in its judgment, in recommending the $46,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood the chairman of the committee to say there is very great demand for this. Does that demand come simply from the man in charge of the bureau? There has been no great public acclaim for such an appropriation as this.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was reading from the statement contained in the Book of Estimates which comes from the department. That estimate was reduced to this amount.

Mr. TREADWAY. Can the chairman of the committee furnish any explanation of the work that has been done by the previous appropriation? There is nothing in the report, there is nothing in Dr. Langworth's testimony, and there is nothing in the committee's report.

Mr. HAUGEN. He says:

A primary purpose is to collect subject matter for use in the extension work under the Lever Act. This would also be of value for the work carried on under the Federal Board for Vocational Education and for other workers in home economics—

And so forth.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does not he say:

We wish to study problems which have to do with the wearing quality of textiles used for clothing—

And so forth?

What problems have been studied with the previous appropriations? They wish to study in the future some problems. That is the way our appropriations are being made, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think that is a good problem to solve.

Mr. TREADWAY. But what results have been accomplished with the money that has been appropriated by the Congress?

Mr. HAUGEN. This is $46,000 out of $32,000,000. We can not expect a great deal for $46,000, if you cover the whole country; so with this item, in line with others, it is regrettable that we have no results.

Mr. TREADWAY. No results. I wanted to know that, Mr. Chairman. That is the information I wanted.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, the fact we have no results is no reason why we should discontinue the appropriation. If we are looking for results in every item in this bill we might as well cut much of the bill out.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the chairman of the committee in all respect how long this item has been carried without any results?

Mr. HAUGEN. It started July 2, 1862, authorized under the act——

Mr. TREADWAY. No; it could not have been that long ago without any results.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. At any rate, it has been carried for a number of years.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, it was very hard to hear the statement made by the chairman of the committee when he was talking in the other direction unless you were very close to him. I did not hear the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, but I caught the reflection in the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that there has been nothing accomplished under this item. I hope the gentleman from Iowa did not make that statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. I said we had not had the results we looked for.

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact——

Mr. TREADWAY. As a matter of fact, if I may be permitted, that is what the gentleman from Iowa did state—that there had been no results.

Mr. LEVER. Well, let me make this statement about it and let the committee judge for itself.

Mr. HAUGEN. I read from the hearings. They say:

We worked with new foods and also found new uses for well-known ones. These have included potato flour, sweet-potato flour, as well as soy bean and peanut flour, fruits and vegetables, dairy products, oils, and fats. We have also given much attention to the use of corn, grain, sorghums, rice, barley, and other cereals.

Mr. LEVER. Now, let me say this: This is one of the oldest items in this appropriation bill. This item covers the investigational work of the Department of Agriculture on food and diets, and so forth. I regard this item, while small, as one of the most important in this bill. I venture to assert there has been more interest in the bulletins issued, more bulletins read that have been issued by this work, than any other branch of the Government service. I could read the gentleman from Massachusetts a list of them dealing with the effect of certain foods upon the human body, dealing with the effects of foods canned, and information of that kind that is of immense interest and value to the general public, and that is especially true with the work under the Smith-Lever Act in home economics, which is constantly growing. There are some several thousand women employed under the provisions of this act whose business it is to teach home economics, and this item furnishes them an opportunity to disseminate the best information to the farming women of the country. I would dislike very much, indeed, to see the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts prevail, and I am speaking in very great earnestness about it, because I have followed this item very closely in my service on the committee, and the man in charge of it is one of the most earnest and indefatigable men I have ever seen. I think there is not a dollar being expended or has ever been expended under this item that has not brought a genuine return to the people of this country.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman refers to very interesting bulletins being issued under this appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. I say many of them have been issued.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I call the gentleman's attention and that of the committee to this interchange between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr HAUGEN] and Dr. Langworthy:

Mr. HAUGEN. Do not you think a bulletin on fashions would be more attractive than on the wearing qualities?

Dr. LANGWORTHY. Perhaps it would; and we will do our best to write good ones if the committee authorizes us to prepare them.

Is any of this extra $20,000 to go to the preparation of a bulletin on fashions?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Massachusetts this morning is not able to comprehend the witticism of the chairman of the committee, and the reply of Dr. Langworthy to it. Of course, we are not going to prepare a bulletin on fashions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina is extremely interesting, in which he suggests that under the Smith-Lever Act they have several thousand women employed. Am I right about that?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Several thousand women were employed to go about the country instructing those who are interested in home economics, and that they obtain most of their information through the operation of this paragraph. Am I right as to the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]?

Mr. LEVER. I will say that a great deal of the information which these people disseminate among the people of the country is fundamental and scientific information, and provided for by this paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, if this paragraph should fail, we would probably throw out of employment 3,000 women who are teaching farmers' wives under the Smith-Lever Act?

Mr. LEVER. It would not affect them a particle.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman said they were relying on the information they obtained through the operation of this paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. I said that they could obtain technical and scientific information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, that this would set experts at work, theoretically and practically, to obtain information which these 3,000 women, employed under the Smith-Lever Act, could disseminate to the farmers' wives. That is about the situation, is it not? In other words, those 3,000 women are largely dependent on this $46,000 to get their primal ideas, so that they may go out into the farmers' homes and talk to the farmers' wives about the things they should do. I would like to know, because neither the gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Wait just a moment. I want to get this information. I would like to know what all of these 3,000 women who are employed under the Smith-Lever Act would say to a farmer's wife about the utilization and economy of agricultural products in the matter of clothing?

Mr. LEVER. Let me show the gentleman how inconsistent is his attack on this item.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not attacking it. I want information.

Mr. LEVER. This is for increasing an appropriation under which women can obtain this technical and scientific information. Now, because somebody makes a funny remark, the gentleman would shut from these women the technical and scientific information that has been gathered in the department and is being gathered from day to day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why does the gentleman refuse me the information he seems to possess? I want to know what it is, in a practical way, that these women tell the farmers' wives about the utilization of agricultural products for the production of clothing?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman, of course, does not expect me to read all these bulletins myself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, I do not want the gentleman to side-step, like some others do when they are brought face to face with a problem.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania expect those home-economic teachers to teach me? They might teach Mrs. Lever. I do not know about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He appropriates the money of the taxpayers to employ 3,000 women, and then he states that those 3,000 women, after we appropriate the million dollars he speaks about to pay their salaries, are reliant upon a $46,000 appropriation to get technical information that they are to give to the farmers' wives. I would like to know what information they give to the farmers' wives with regard to the manufacture of clothes from agricultural products.

Mr. LEVER. I will promise to send to the gentleman a list of bulletins, so that he may read them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I see that the gentleman is getting further and further away from the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. What does his information about the subject he is discussing——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am seeking information. Up to date we have not much.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the gentleman ever attended what is known as the farmers' institutes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what this applies to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not see that that has anything to do with the question I raise. That is provided for by a large fund under the Smith-Lever Act and is wholly educational. I want to know, and particularly from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], what kind of information these 3,000 women are able to give the farmers' wives with respect to the utility and economy of agricultural products in the matter of clothing, and the gentleman from South Carolina has side-stepped that every time the suggestion is brought up. Here is $46,000 gone glimmering if we vote it for the purpose of hunting information. I do not see that we are helping these 3,000 women to help farmers' wives unless we know what they are going to teach. The gentleman from South Carolina does not say. Somebody may know whether we are teaching the farmers' wives how to make homespun garments out of alfalfa or sisal grass, or something of that kind. If that is it, it is a practical proposition. But all we know is that year after year we dump down in the department, for the purpose of spending the money with somebody there, a certain amount in order that they may study the utility and economy of agricultural products with respect to food and clothing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield his time. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the lines of work of the States Relations Service, including the offices of the director, the chief clerk, the officers in charge of publications, library, accounts, records, supplies, and property, and for miscellaneous expenses incident thereto, $14,180.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ELSTON. I make the motion for the purpose of referring to the appropriation of $1,500,000 for cooperative agricultural extension work. In that connection I have received a statement from Prof. Thomas F. Hunt, dean of the department of agriculture of the University of California, bearing on this appropriation. He presents a very strong statement here in a few words, showing that this appropriation is entirely inadequate. He wishes to have it increased to the amount of $4,500,000, which I understood was the amount approved by the Senate committee at the close of the last session. I am informed that the amount named was the amount recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement of Dean Hunt may be included as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, yesterday a request was made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to print certain letters in the RECORD. This is not the same matter?

Mr. ELSTON. This is not the same matter. It is not a letter. It is in the nature of argument for the increased appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not going to object, but I want to know if it is a duplication of the matter already presented.

Mr. ELSTON. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] asks unanimous consent to include in his remarks the paper he has referred to, and the Chair hears no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

Cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics has been carried on in California and all the other States under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 8, 1914, known as the Smith-Lever Extension Act. This has been supplemented by a direct appropriation to the United States Department of Agriculture and during the past two years by war emergency appropriations under the food-production act.

The original intention of the Smith-Lever Act was to build up year by year an increasing organization until it should function in every agricultural county in the United States, reaching its maximum in 1922. The act did not, however, anticipate the large response of the farmers to the work nor their demands for an increasing number of men and women which have made the original provisions of the act inadequate to meet the demand.

During the war, under the food-production act, the number of county agricultural agents and home-demonstration agents has been greatly increased, and farmers' organizations known as farm bureaus have been formed in most of the agricultural counties of the United States. The question at issue is whether such of this organization which is of a permanent and necessary character shall be kept going or whether it shall be reduced to the original basis contemplated in the original Smith-Lever Act.

The Secretary of Agriculture recommended to Congress that in lieu of the last year's appropriation of $7,304,940 for farmers' cooperative demonstration work and emergency work an appropriation of $5,670,000 should be made at this session of Congress for farmers' cooperative demonstration work during the next fiscal year, which is a gross reduction of $1,634,940; but since the Smith-Lever Act will increase next year by $500,000, it is a net reduction of $1,134,940. This reduction had in view the elimination of temporary employees and those that had proved unsatisfactory and would result in the establishment of the extension work on a reasonable and permanent basis. The House Committee on Agriculture for the last Congress, however, reduced this amount in the bill by $2,973,680, making a total reduction of about $4,500,000 from that of the present year, and this reduction was accepted by the House.

When the bill reached the Senate, however, their committee on agriculture increased the item for cooperative extension work from $1,560,000 to $4,500,000, which, together with the amounts derived by the other items, practically brings the bill back to the amount recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In addition to the regular Smith-Lever funds appropriated to all States in proportion to their rural population, California received for agriculture extension during the past year under the food-production act $148,560. This amount was allotted by the Secretary of Agriculture without apparent regard to the rural population of the State, but rather on its agricultural necessity. Since the new appropriation is proposed to be based on rural population and since California has only 1.8 per cent of the rural population of the United States, it will derive from the larger appropriation as recommended by the Senate and Secretary of Agriculture only an appropriation of $82,293 to take the place of the $148,560 which it received during the present fiscal year. To offset this expected reduction and in order to meet the Federal Government on a dollar-per-dollar basis as originally contemplated in the Smith-Lever Act, the State legislature has passed a bill appropriating $166,994 for two years, or $83,497 per year, which is now before the governor for signature. If the larger appropriation is passed by the Federal Government and the governor signs the bill of the last legislature, California would be able to derive about the same funds for agricultural-extension work which she has had during the past year.

If, however, the smaller appropriation as passed by the House were to be enacted, the appropriation for California would be reduced by $54,700 per year. The fact of the comparatively small rural population of California in propertion to its large agricultural area and the diversification of its crops is the particular reason why all Federal and State appropriations under this manner are urgently needed.

In California agricultural extension funds have been used exclusively for the three types of resident agent work, namely, farm advisers (county agents), home-demonstration agents, and boys' agricultural-club leaders. California has never had sufficient funds to build up a State organization of specialists and therefore can not lop off any of the work without directly affecting the resident agents in counties where they are immediately felt by the farmers. If the smaller appropriation before Congress were to be enacted, it would apparently require that at least six counties in California have their county agents discontinued as well as most of the home-demonstration agents and practically all the agricultural-club leaders.

Whereas at the beginning of the war under the regular Smith-Lever appropriation only about 6,000 farmers in California had joined the county farm bureaus and the work was only inaugurated in 15 counties of the State, the farm bureau organiaztion has now grown so that it covers 35 counties which cover 85 per cent of the farms of the State and there are about 25,000 farmers who pay annual dues to belong to this organization which is for the purpose of cooperating in agricultural-extension work and making it effective. These have become alarmed at the possibility of reduction of the Federal appropriation and the possibility that the service to them can not be maintained.

Last year over 19,000 different farmers sent for the farm adviser to visit their individual farms and give them specific advice on the growing of crops; a total of over 250,000 people attended 4,596 meetings held under the auspices of the resident farm advisers. The activities which have been conducted are almost too numerous to mention, but it may be said that the results have been of enormous advantage in enlarging agricultural knowledge and production in California.

Mr. BARBOUR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD, as part of my remarks on the same paragraph just mentioned by my colleague from California [Mr. ELSTON], a telegram which I have received from George Feaver, jr., president of the Fresno County Farm Bureau, Calif. It is a matter of only a few lines, and I shall not take the time to read it if it is not objected to.

Mr. LEVER. I do not object, but I want to say that I shall object hereafter to printing letters on this subject, for the reason that I presume all other Members of Congress are flooded with letters as I am. I have got 50 of them myself. Those letters ask for a large increase of this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks a telegram as indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the telegram referred to:

FRESNO, CALIF., May 28, 1919.

Congressman H. E. BARBOUR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Our board of directors, in session to-day, learned that House Committee on Agriculture has reported out Agriculture appropriation bill at smaller amount than that recommended by Secretary of Agriculture. We earnestly request your efforts in any way possible to secure amount originally recommended by Secretary for maintenance of agricultural extension in connection with Smith-Lever Act. We believe curtailment of the county agricultural agent system is false economy.

FRESNO COUNTY FARM BUREAU,
GEO. FEAVER, Jr., President.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is due the House that it should have a little information on this item. Certain communications concerning this appropriation have gone into the RECORD. It is due the House to state that the estimate was cut considerably. The estimate on this item was cut about $3,000,000. Under the Smith-Lever Act $3,080,000 will be available, and this money will be matched by the States dollar for dollar, except for this $480,000. We also appropriated $645,040 to carry on the work with respect to the cotton-boll weevil, and $551,280 to be used outside of the cotton belt, making a total of $5,776,320. If you deduct from that $480,000 to be paid to the States, there will be available $5,296,320 to be matched by the States, which will bring the total amount up to $10,592,640, which will make available for 2,400 counties an average of over $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for States Relations Service, $4,705,820.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I sort of anticipated the offering of an amendment by my friend from the other side this morning to increase this appropriation, to the end that we would get what was actually needed. I should have offered the amendment myself, but, the other side being in the majority. I felt it would come better if they made the motion, because they could then have secured its actual adoption, and I am a little disappointed that the motion to increase the item was not made. It is absolutely necessary, and it ought not to be passed over. The work is needed; the money is needed; the cooperation is needed; and the department is calling for this appropriation to carry out the actual work that is being done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has reference to the item of $1,500,000 for extension work under the Smith-Lever Act?

Mr. RAKER. This goes to the entire item now; in all, for general expenses, $4,501,980.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought the gentleman was talking about the Smith-Lever Act?

Mr. RAKER. No; I am getting right down to the real gist of the thing. This is the entire appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That paragraph was passed some time ago.

Mr. RAKER. It is all in this paragraph, and it is all under this subdivision.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the gentleman had a letter read on the subject?

Mr. RAKER. No. You are right upon the subject now. You are hitting the nail right on the head. You are appropriating over $4,000,000. I am surprised that my friend from Pennsylvania did not offer this amendment, because he could have succeeded in the Committee of the Whole in having it adopted, and I was looking to him to raise an amendment, and I am disappointed that it was not raised as it should have been.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This paragraph carries $1,500,000, and the gentleman desires to raise it to $4,000,000. Do I so understand the gentleman?

Mr. RAKER. I would raise it to $5,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is, the gentleman from California would have no compunction of conscience if we moved this item up from $1,500,000 to $5,000,000?

Mr. RAKER. I surely would not have compunction in providing a service with necessary funds after we have provided the service. I believe in economy and in getting every dollar's worth from the money expended, but I do not believe it is extravagant to provide a sufficient amount for these useful things; and while we have provided in this bill for every conceivable kind of investigation and disease, when it comes down to providing proper education and assistance and advancement for the women and children through proper legislation to carry into effect this law that is now on the statute books, a failure to provide an adequate appropriation would be indefensible from every conceivable standpoint.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much money does the gentleman think we ought to appropriate?

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. What amount does the gentleman suggest to be made available for each county?

Mr. RAKER. That is a matter of division that you can not in a moment determine.

Mr. HAUGEN. How many agents would he suggest for each county? More than one?

Mr. RAKER. I think one agent would cover it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Would he be satisfied with one for each county; an average of one?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask an extension of time so that I may answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RAKER. I should like time enough to read this letter—10 minutes. I do not believe gentlemen will object to having a letter read that shows the necessity of this appropriation. I can not understand why they should.

Several Members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I am sorry.

Mr. HAUGEN. If I may be recognized, I will ask the gentleman from California if he would be satisfied with one county agent for each county?

Mr. RAKER. I think that would be very good.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then for the expense of each county agent about $2,500, with $4,300 made available, there is enough here to go around. There are 2,400 counties throughout the United States where we are operating to-day, and in a number of counties, as the gentleman knows, they have held elections and have turned down the proposition, so the number will be reduced, and as the number is reduced the amount for each county can be increased.

Mr. RAKER. I am talking about the main appropriation provided for in this bill under this provision, where we fail to appropriate $2,000,000 necessary to carry the Smith-Lever Act into effect, and the Department of Agriculture says that the work will have to cease unless the appropriation is made.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has the floor.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman from California know that the appropriation exceeds that provided for under the Smith-Lever Act?

Mr. RAKER. No, it does not.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, it does.

Mr. RAKER. No, it does not. It falls $2,000,000 short of carrying it out.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. RAKER. May I read this letter, Mr. Chairman, to show that I do know what I am talking about?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension, and I believe if he had the facts before him he would not contend for what he is now asking.

Mr. RAKER. I have the facts before me now, and I can not get time before the House to have them put in the RECORD or to read them to the committee. That is what is hurting me.

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe the facts should be stated, and I believe if the gentleman had the facts before him he would not argue as he is now doing.

Mr. RAKER. In view of the gentleman's statement, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes to read this letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I stated before that if the gentleman had the facts before him he would not argue as he is now doing. The appropriation has been increased more than one and a half million dollars more than the amount carried in the Smith-

Lever Act for the next fiscal year. Besides that, we have the $651,000 to meet the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil and $545,000 outside of the cotton belt. We have an increase then of $1,500,000 in excess of the amount which the Smith-Lever Act ordinarily would provide for the next fiscal year. Yet the gentleman is saying that we have cut this appropriation.

Mr. RAKER. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes in which to read this letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has the floor.

Mr. HAUGEN. I demand the regular order.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that I may read the letter showing the facts upon which I have based my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. RAKER. You do not want the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. EDMONDS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 79) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Dawson, Ga., tents and cots for use of Confederate veterans in their State convention June 17 and 18, 1919.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 4.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress be prepared and published, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in section 73 of the printing act approved January 12, 1895, and that the sum of $800 be paid for preparing, compiling, and indexing said edition, one-half of the said fund to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. FRANCE and Mr. WALSH of Montana members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Civil Service Commission.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS.

Salaries, Bureau of Public Roads: One chief of bureau, $6,000; 1 editor, $2,500; 1 draftsman or clerk, $1,920; 1 clerk, $1,900; 1 instrument maker, $1,800; 1 model maker, $1,800; 4 clerks, class 4; 6 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk or editorial clerk, $1,600; 2 clerks, at $1,500 each; 1 clerk or photographer, $1,440; 1 clerk or instrument maker, $1,440; 1 clerk or tabulator, $1,440; 1 clerk, class 2; 2 clerks, at $1,380 each; 2 clerks, at $1,320 each; 4 clerks, at $1,260 each; 6 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk or editorial clerk, $1,200; 1 draftsman, $1,320; 1 clerk or draftsman, $1,200; 1 clerk or draftsman, $900; 1 clerk or photographer, $1,200; 1 clerk or photographer, $1,000; 2 clerks, at $1,140 each; 1 clerk, $1,100; 2 clerks, at $1,080 each; 1 clerk, $1,020; 9 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk or skilled laborer, $1,000; 4 clerks, at $900 each; 1 mechanician, $1,680; 1 clerk or instrument maker, $1,200; 1 lantern-slide colorist, $1,320; 1 mechanic, $1,500; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 1 skilled laborer, $1,200; 1 laboratory aid, $960; 2 laborers, at $900 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $840 each; 2 messengers, laborers, or laboratory helpers, at $720 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $660 each; 4 messengers or laborers, at $600 each; 3 messenger boys, at $600 each; 1 fireman, $720; 8 messenger boys, at $480 each; 8 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $113,640.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I make a point of order on the increase of the salary of the chief of the bureau from $4,500 to $6,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided the question. The Chair does not think the gentleman can reserve it after the Chair has decided it.

Mr. WALSH. The chairman of the committee was on his feet asking leave to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is recognized.

Mr. HAUGEN. Two hundred and sixty-six million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars of Federal funds will be available, and the States will spend an amount which will bring it up to $666,750,000. It seems that anyone in handling $666,750,000 is entitled to a small increase of $1,500 a year; or, in other words, that a $6,000 man will be required. For that reason the committee has recommended an increase of salary from $4,500 to $6,000. It is subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. WALSH. We have been spending millions under the road act, under a director who has recently died, who received $4,500.

Mr. HAUGEN. And he was worth much more.

Mr. WALSH. He was worth much more, but we were getting very efficient work. Now, the title is changed. The other man was required to be a scientist. He got $4,500. Mr. Logan Waller Page, who had charge of this Federal road work, has conducted it very efficiently. Now, I do not know who his successor is, but I am opposed to increasing salaries of chiefs of bureaus in this bill, and have objected to it all the way through, and I do not think we ought to make this enormous increase to this particular bureau under these circumstances.

Mr. HAUGEN. The statement of the department is that a competent man can not be had for less than $6,000. It was even suggested that a salary of $12,000 be fixed. The gentleman referred to Dr. Page, who was paid $4,500, and probably was worth twice that amount; but Dr. Page is not here. It is necessary now to secure the services of a competent man to handle this $666,750,000 fund, and it would seem as if it would require a man of some business ability and capacity to conduct the work, and that $6,000 is a reasonable salary. It is with the gentleman whether he wants to make the point of order or not, and it is then for the House to determine whether this salary shall be increased. Shall we have a $6,000 man or a $4,500 man to take care of this office?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, Secretary Houston called in the advice of the very best road engineers in this country and asked them to suggest three or four road engineers that they thought competent to handle this enormous sum of money available under the Federal road act. The fact is the late chief of this bureau did not administer that, because no work was done during the war out of this fund. These men submitted to the Secretary a list of names. He took the matter up in the order in which the names were submitted. He wrote to the first man, and I believe had him come on here. I do not mind saying that he was the road engineer of the State of California, who is at present drawing a salary of $12,000. The Secretary put the matter up to him as a matter of honor, said it was a great position, but the man said that he could not afford the sacrifice, that he had a family and no special means.

He put it up to the second man, who turned it down. It turned out that his salary was larger than the $6,000, and then he put it up to the third man, and finally after long persuasion he consented to come here at $6,000 a year, but he told the Secretary under any circumstances that he would not come for $4,500, because he could not afford it. He is a road engineer of the State of Iowa. I never met the gentleman and I had forgotten his name, but a Member suggests that it is Mr. McDonald. He is said to be a great road engineer in this country. It is a question of getting an able and a good man to distribute this tremendous fund.

Mr. WALSH. How much does this gentleman get in Iowa?

Mr. LEVER. The Secretary informed me that, including his place of residence and salary, it is about $6,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in accord with the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from South Carolina on this proposition, and I trust that the gentleman from Massachusetts may think the matter over carefully before he makes the point of order. If there is one instance in which a salary should be raised in this bill this probably is that instance, since the former salary of $4,500 is certainly not comparable with the services required of a man able to fill the position of chief of a Federal Bureau of the Public Roads.

In the various States which are looking out for their own roads, in New York, Massachusetts, Illinois, and Pennsylvania, with which I am more familiar, the salary of the road commissioners is double if not three times as much as that heretofore paid for the Bureau of Roads in the Federal Government. I believe that the salary paid to Waller Page was not commensurate with the dignity of the office nor the services performed.

Moreover, there is this to be said about the position of this chief: If it is true that that $660,000,000 for good roads which has finally been saddled on the Federal Government is to be spent through this Bureau of Good Roads, surely we should have a man in charge of that bureau who is above suspicion. There will be many contracts let and a tremendous amount of the money spent in the various States. I would like to see at the head of the bureau a man such as the gentleman from South Carolina has described as being able to perform these duties with dignity and efficiency. I do not believe that we should put a man into this office because he has money enough to enable him to take a lower salary. I think the laborer is worthy of his hire. I do not want to see a dollar-a-year man there, because the temptations might be so great that he would fall by the wayside and bring disgrace on the Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman stated that if there was a $4,500 man here he might be under suspicion. Does the gentleman measure a man's honesty by $1,000 or $1,500?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; but I have heard of men in the great Empire State of New York who have been perfectly willing to serve the State for nothing, provided they could deal out the appropriations. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is wrong in his geography; was not that Pennsylvania? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; the reply of the gentleman from New York is too late. I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to mention that recently a man was appointed to a position as supervisor of accounts in the State of Pennsylvania at a salary of $10,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. Chairman; I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that, so that we may again test the proposition before the House. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the figures "$4,500" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$6,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 3, strike out the figures "$4,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$6,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do I understand that the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was exactly upon the point of order that the Chair just ruled upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out certain figures which were inserted by an amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and insert certain other figures. No point of order was made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It was not the business of the Chair to refuse to recognize the gentleman or to refuse to entertain the motion that he made. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] slept upon his rights, that was not the business of the Chair. The matter is now disposed of.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York made the point of order against this very provision.

The CHAIRMAN. No; he made the point of order against the provision originally in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the provision against which the gentleman from New York made the point of order was to provide a chief of bureau at $6,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Texas? He is not stating a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order that I am stating is that the Chair immediately thereafter, after sustaining the point of order of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], entertained a motion to insert the very provision which had been knocked out by the point of order of the gentleman from New York, and I submit the point of order that that is improper.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a statement of fact; it is not a point of order. In order that the matter may be clear, let the Chair state the situation. The Clerk read the paragraph, beginning on line 1, page 74. At the conclusion of the reading of the paragraph, which provides for one chief of bureau at $6,000, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] reserved the point of order against the figures "$6,000." The matter was discussed. The gentleman finally withdrew the point of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] then renewed the point of order, and the Chair sustained the point of order. Later on the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] offered an amendment to restore the position of chief of bureau at $4,500. That amendment was adopted. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] later on moved to amend by striking out the figures "$4,500" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$6,000." That amendment was adopted. The Chair could not refuse to entertain the motion. If any gentleman wished to make the point of order against it, the Chair would have entertained the point of order, and would have sustained the point of order; but no one did, and the result is that it is now too late to make it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a point of order is made against the item of $6,000, which was improperly in the bill, and then thereafter a gentleman attempted to place the amount back in the bill by an amendment, does the Chair hold that it could be properly done? Does not the point of order still lodge against the amendment just as long as the bill is under consideration by the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that it is within the province of any Member of the House to rise in his place and offer an amendment to the bill, and it is the business of the Chair to entertain the motion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment. Permit the Chair to make his own statement. It is the business of the Chair to entertain the motion, but if any gentleman on the floor of the House fails to make the point of order to the amendment, if it be subject to the point of order, then the matter is disposed of—he has lost his rights.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I raise the point of order that the amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late. The amendment has already been agreed to. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Clerk will read.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk begins to read, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question with regard to the road-building proposition. The statement has been made here by the chairman, or by somebody, that there is $666,000,000 available. I think that must be a mistake. It is only $266,000,000 available under the various appropriations.

Mr. HAUGEN. Two hundred and sixty-six million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars of Federal funds. The aggregate expenditure of about $666,750,000 is proposed, of which the States will furnish about $400,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. How much of that fund is absolutely available now?

Mr. HAUGEN. Two hundred and sixty-six million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. Available to-day?

Mr. HAUGEN. Available to-day, and the States will be required to raise about $400,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. How many miles of roads has this bureau already constructed?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not say. The Federal Government is not engaged in the building of roads, except a few experimental roads.

Mr. SNELL. How many miles have been constructed under the provisions of this act?

Mr. HAUGEN. As the gentleman will recall, I believe $200,000,000 were added on the Post Office bill last year, and other millions have been accumulated under the Shackleford bill.

Mr. SNELL. Well, I think the House ought to know at this time how much of the fund has been expended and to what extent they have succeeded in building roads under this fund.

Mr. HAUGEN. Available now, $80,000,000; available for the fiscal year 1920, $95,000,000; total, $175,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has just stated that there are $266,000,000 available to-day.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was giving the items making up this fund of $266,000,000. Three per cent deducted for administration, $5,250,000; approved contracts, $41,970,000; balance to be met by the States up to and including the fiscal year of 1920, $127,000,790. Present indications are the above balance will be covered by approved contracts on July 1. There is yet to be apportioned for the fiscal year 1921, $100,000,000, and after deducting the 3 per cent allowed for administration there will be a total of $266,750,000. As I stated, $400,000,000 will be appropriated by the States.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman has not told me how much money has been already expended under the Federal act?

Mr. HAUGEN. That will take some time.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has not the information at hand?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have not now, but I can get it.

Mr. SNELL. I did not know but what the gentleman had it here.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman put it in the RECORD?

Mr. HAUGEN. The department has not been expending the money that was available.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman put the amount actually expended in the RECORD?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. SNELL. And also will he inform us whether the 3 per cent of the total funds for administration purposes is in addition to the $520,000 appropriated for the general expenses of the bureau?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; in addition, that is to be taken from the other fund.

Mr. SNELL. What I am desirous of finding out is how much it costs for administration expenses to build 1 mile of road under Federal aid. I am asking the gentleman if he can give some information along that line.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am not sure the committee has ever been furnished with that statement.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman place in the RECORD the number of miles that have been made under Federal aid and the amount expended up to the present time, and the expense of the bureau up to the present time in building that road?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will take pleasure in doing it.

Mr. SNELL. All right; I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows :

For inquiries in regard to systems of road management throughout the United States and for giving expert advice on this subject, $38,240.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$38,240" and insert in lieu thereof "$38,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, line 22, strike out the figures "$38,240" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$38,000."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have been following with great patience the debate on this bill. We have been reading this bill for the last four days, and I have also noticed my friends at the table here make objection after objection, and when they arrive at the point where the objection might be sustained the objection is withdrawn. Now, what I would like to know is, are they talking against time or talking simply to hear themselves talk. I have heard the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] talk about the farmer to a degree that it has become nauseating and disgusting. I would like to know what the farmer thinks about it. You have talked about the farmer as if you were doling out charity to him and three-fourths of the items here do not affect the farmer at all. I would like to know just how many champions of the farmer really ever come in contact with the farmer. I am afraid a good many of those farmers whose interests you have in heart reside in my city and the only part of his hand you will find calloused will be the forefinger and the thumb of the right hand from cutting coupons. The real farmer, the real producer, gets very little, if any, benefit out of this appropriation. Now, I do not know anything about the merit of this place of $4,500, but if the gentleman from Massachusetts was sincere in raising the point of order he should not have withdrawn it, and it certainly comes with astonishing surprise that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who has been fighting every item in this bill, should put one over while I was talking with my colleague from Iowa. All I can see in this bill is jobs, jobs, jobs. I will join an opposition, but let it be sincere. If we are going to do anything about this bill let us quit talking, read the bill, and get through with it. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, well, I object to the gentleman withdrawing the amendment. Let it be voted down.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has a right to withdraw his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Not if objection is made.

Mr. DOWELL. I think he has a perfect right——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that he has not.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the rules he has the right to withdraw his amendment unless some action has been taken on it.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will consult the rules, he will find that in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union he can not do so if objection is made; in the House he can.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight gentlemen are present, a quorum. The gentleman demands a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 80.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Chair has just ascertained the presence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had just counted a quorum a few moments ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the gentleman is entitled to tellers under the rules of the House, and the Clerk will read.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For conducting field experiments and various methods of road construction and maintenance, and investigations concerning various road materials and preparations; for investigating and developing equipment intended for the preparation and application of bituminous and other binders; for the purchase of materials and equipment; for the employment of assistants and labor; for the erection of buildings; such experimental work to be confined as nearly as possible to one point during the fiscal year, $60,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to suggest that some of these employees engaged by the Government to carry on road building and experiments in road building, and helping develop the great road-building plan of the United States, pay some attention to the railroad rates fixed by the administration on sand and gravel. The United States is going into a great cooperative plan with the States to build roads, and in nearly all sections the railroad rates on sand and gravel have been increased to a prohibitive point, one-half of that rate to be paid by the Government out of its own pocket. I merely make this suggestion. The road building can not go on unless a proper freight rate is granted on the basic material, such as sand, gravel, and crushed rock. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigations and experiments, $16,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Unfortunately a statement was made awhile ago in regard to my being mistaken relative to the amount of money necessary to carry on the work of farm advisers and also the other law, and I think, in justice to myself and to the distinguished chairman, whom I know would not under any circumstances attempt to do an injustice to me or to anyone else, I should say something. It was just one of those things that was not quite understood. To the end that I may correct it and put the matter in shape, I want to just make a statement in a few words and read in connection with that statement the following letter written in response to a letter that I inserted in the RECORD yesterday:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, May 31, 1919.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RAKER: I have your letter of May 22 and thank you for your courtesy in sending me a copy of the resolution adopted by the El Dorado County Chamber of Commerce. I have noted the resolution with much interest.

Cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics, as you know, has been carried on in all the States, including California, under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 8, 1914, known as the Smith-Lever Extension Act. The funds provided under this act have been supplemented by direct appropriations to this department for farmers' cooperative extension work, and during the past two years by war emergency appropriations under the food-production act. The funds available for this work during the current fiscal year are as follows:

Federal funds:
Under the Smith-Lever Act	$2,580,000
For farmers' cooperative demonstration work	1,204,910
Under the food-production act	6,100,000
		$9,884,940
State funds:
Under the Smith-Lever Act	2,100,000
Miscellaneous	4,000,000
		6,100,000
Total available amount		15,984,940

The State funds are contributed by the legislatures, counties, farm bureaus, and other local organizations and individuals within the States. These funds are used for the employment of county agricultural agents, home demonstration agents, boys' and girls' club leaders, and specialists in various branches of agriculture and home economics, and the necessary administrative officers. At present about 2,400 counties have agricultural agents and 1,700 counties have home-demonstration agents. The people on fully half the farms of the country were reached by these agents last year and given practical instruction and advice regarding agriculture and household matters. About 2,000,000 boys and girls were organized in clubs for the growing of plants or animals, canning or otherwise preserving the products of the farms and gardens, etc. Garden work was also done in many cities, and home-demonstration agents worked in about 200 cities.

The organization for this work was built up very rapidly after the United States entered the European War, with the aid of emergency funds. Now that the war is over the question has arisen as to how far this organization should be maintained on a permanent basis. After careful consideration I came to the conclusion that the educational work which the extension forces are doing is very important for the promotion of our agricultural interests in times of peace, and also for aiding the farm women in solving their household problems, and for encouraging the boys and girls to remain on the farms. I therefore recommend to Congress that, in lieu of the appropriations of $7,304,940 for farmers' cooperative demonstration work and emergency work, an appropriation of $5,670,000 should be made at this session of Congress for farmers' cooperative demonstration work during the next fiscal year. This is a gross reduction of $1,634,940, but since the Federal appropriation under the Smith-Lever Act will increase next year by $500,000, it is a net reduction of $1,134,940. This reduction had in view the elimination of temporary employees, and also of those who had proved unsatisfactory, and would result in the establishment of the extension work on a reasonably permanent basis. The House Committee on Agriculture decided, however, to reduce this amount by $2,973,680. The House accepted the reduction when the Agricultural bill was under consideration in that body at the last session. The bill was then referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture, and this committee increased the amount carried in the House bill by $3,000,000. I recently renewed my recommendation to the House Committee on Agriculture and urged that the action of the Senate be accepted, but the committee in reporting the bill to the House on May 26 failed to increase the appropriation as suggested. The reduction that has been made will seriously affect the work throughout the country. It will be necessary to withdraw the agricultural agents from a large number of counties and the home-demonstration work, particularly in the Northern and Western States, where it is relatively new, will have to be largely discontinued. The boys' and girls' work also will be materially reduced. This would be unfortunate, to say the least, and I hope very much that the Congress will provide the requisite funds for the maintenance of this great educational system during the next fiscal year.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

During the reading of the letter, the following occurred:

Mr. HAUGEN. I think the gentleman should say $2,500,000 for the current year, and there will be over $3,000,000 for the next year.

Mr. RAKER. I thank the gentleman for the explanation. It will be made clear in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. RAKER. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The reading of the letter was concluded.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BAER. In regard to these 2,000,000 children that are in this garden movement, does the Secretary say that they are enlisted in the agricultural children's movement, or does he state it is in connection with some other movement?

Mr. RAKER. They have their garden and demonstration work going on, and they have this great body of boys and girls, 2,000,000 of them, that they are helping to educate in order to make them better farmers and farmers' wives, and to economize and help raise these products, which will add many millions of dollars to our produce in this country, instead of wasting it, and while we are providing the money for experimental matters in this legislation, ought we to forget to make the necessary appropriations for these things which will educate our children, which will make them better citizens, and will cause them to conserve and add to the products of our country? Why, there is no money that could be expended so wisely and so well and so economically as to educate our boys and girls in agricultural lines as well as generally. While the Committee of the Whole have not seen fit to include this on the bill, of course, we hope again the Senate will place it on, and that the House conferees will accept it and permit it to remain in our legislation because of its necessity.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I am a great believer in this school-garden movement, but I want to say that there is a great deal of duplication of effort and overlapping of duties in the work. The Bureau of Education now has a department called the "United States School Garden Army." Now, this is the army that includes the 2,000,000 children as members, and I think the Secretary of Agriculture in his letter to the gentleman from California, when he mentions these 2,000,000 children, must refer to the children in the United States School Garden Army and not to the Agricultural Department.

I read an article by Forest Crissey in the Country Gentleman recently, telling about the work of the department, and while we can compliment the Agricultural Department for the canning clubs and different organizations, he said it cost about 80 cents to enroll one child in the garden movement connected with the Department of Agriculture, while one of the officials of the Bureau of Education informed me it cost only 10 cents to enroll one pupil in the garden movement in the United States School Garden Army, as it is called. The point I want to make is, while I do not want to do away with it entirely, that I do not think that this school-garden movement should come under the Department of Agriculture. I believe it should be under the Bureau of Education. It is purely an educational matter. School gardening is being taken into the curriculum of our schools to-day. We are spending $200,000 in the Bureau of Education for this great work. It has literature which covers all the subjects about gardens being mailed out to all the teachers. The bureau in the Agricultural Department is sending out the same kind of literature. One can read paragraphs in both sets of pamphlets that are almost identical. I understand there is an independent school-garden movement in addition to the two departmental services. So we have three children-garden movements in the United States to-day. I think they ought to be coordinated under one department. Reports say the School Garden Army connected with the Bureau of Education has 2,000,000 children enrolled, and that they are carrying on educational work with the teachers, sending out lecturers and putting on pageants throughout the country, and are really getting somewhere. It is working in cities over 2,000 in population. This is where the work should be done, for it is in the congested centers that gardens are more necessary. The small towns under 2,000 and the farms usually have their truck gardens and sufficient supply of these foodstuffs.

I would like to have the chairman of the committee tell me how many members are enrolled in the school-garden movement connected with the Department of Agriculture, if he has that information at hand?

Mr. HAUGEN. I regret I do not have it at hand.

Mr. BAER. A great deal could be said on this particular subject, and I think it is time for this Congress, which is talking about economy, to coordinate these two or three different activities of school-garden movement under one head in one department, and make one appropriation to take care of it in one department.

Mr. HAUGEN. I might say to the gentleman that the trouble with the committee is that we have been criticized for not segregating items sufficiently heretofore. Now the gentleman is insisting upon merging the different items into one. The effort of the committee has been to segregate items, so that we might in that way check up the expenditures.

Mr. BAER. But that is aside from my point.

Mr. HAUGEN. I fully agree with the gentleman that some of these items might be merged——

Mr. BAER. In one department.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; in one department; and there should be coordination and cooperation to prevent duplication and overlapping. The trouble is that when we make appropriations for the Department of Agriculture another committee comes in and makes appropriations for another department, and some of these activities overlap. But the Committee on Agriculture is only responsible for what is done in the Department of Agriculture. There is apparently in the department a duplication of work, and the best we can do is to compromise.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman understands that my criticism is not against the Department of Agriculture at all, or against the child-garden movement, but I am opposed to several departments carrying on the same work when their duties overlap and send out the same reports, thus cluttering up the wastebaskets of every school-teacher in the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. I agree with the gentleman, and I hope committees of Congress may confer hereafter, with a view to securing some improvement in this regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Public Roads, $594,320.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. This total of $594,320 includes what percentage for administrative purposes under the appropriation?

Mr. HAUGEN. None.

Mr. DOWELL. What does it cover of the expense?

Mr. HAUGEN. Three per cent. I think it amounts to about $5,000,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Then what does the total for the Bureau of Public Roads, $594,320, include above the expenses provided here in these items? This has no reference to the 3 per cent for administrative purposes, as the gentleman indicates. What I want to inquire about is what does this $594,320 include of the expenses before mentioned?

Mr. HAUGEN. The items are set out above in the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. In the items preceding?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. And that is in addition to the 3 per cent for administration, which is not included?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF MARKETS.

Salaries, Bureau of Markets: One chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 administrative assistant, $3,000; 1 administrative assistant, $2,500; 1 clerk in charge of supplies and accounts, $2,250; 2 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 1 clerk, $2,000; 1 executive assistant, $1,980; 1 administrative assistant, $1,980; 11 clerks, class 4; 1 clerk, $1,740; 14 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,440; 35 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,380; 5 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,300; 163 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,140; 40 clerks, at $1,100 each; 88 clerks, at $1,000 each; 13 clerks, at $1,080 each; 7 clerks, at $1,020 each; 2 clerks, at $960 each; 24 clerks, at $900 each; 3 clerks, at $840 each; 2 clerks, at $720 each; 1 laboratory helper, $900; 1 laboratory aid, $960; 3 laboratory aids, at $900 each; 1 laboratory aid, $840; 1 laboratory aid, $720; 1 photographer, $1,400; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 superintendent of telegraph, $2,000; 1 supervising telegrapher, $1,620; 5 telegraph operators, at $1,600 each; 47 telegraph operators, at $1,400 each; 1 telegraph operator, $1,320; 7 telegraph operators, at $1,200 each; 1 telegraph operator, $1,080; 2 telephone operators, at $900 each; 1 telephone operator, $840; 1 draftsman, $1,400; 3 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 1 draftsman, $900; 1 map tracer, $900; 1 map tracer, $720; 1 map tracer, $600; 4 machine operators, at $1,200 each; 2 machine operators, at $1,100 each; 1 machine operator, $1,000; 3 chauffeurs, at $900 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 3 laborers, at $840 each; 6 laborers, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; 5 laborers, at $600 each; 2 laborers, at $540 each; 1 messenger, $720; 10 messengers, at $540 each; 1 messenger, $480; 6 messenger boys, at $600 each; 5 messenger boys, at $540 each; 21 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $420 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 1 messenger boy, $300; 1 charwoman, $540; 6 charwomen, at $480 each; 6 charwomen, at $300 each; 9 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $671,810.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SNELL. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that there is more increase in the general administrative expenses of this one bureau than in anything else carried in the whole bill. I looked through the hearings on this bill and I noticed from the questions that were asked by members of the committee themselves of the various experts of the department that the individual members of the committee feel about the same as I do in regard to this entire item. As far as I am able to learn, the people of the whole country look with very little favor upon continuing the war activities of the Bureau of Markets in time of peace.

I come from a rural district. There are no large cities in it, and the largest industry in my district is farming; and if I know the sentiment of my people at all they are absolutely opposed to a great many of the activities that are carried on by this Bureau of Markets.

I noticed in the report filed by the committee that 251 clerks are taken from the lump-sum amount and placed on the statutory list. As I understand, when you once take them and place them on the statutory list that means that it is the intention of the committee to carry these men along in the Agricultural Department. I would like to get some information from the chairman on that one line.

Mr. HAUGEN. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. SNELL. What is the intention of the committee when they transfer the 251 clerks from the lump-sum appropriation to the statutory list?

Mr. HAUGEN. That has been the practice heretofore. According to the interpretation of the law it is required to do so.

Mr. SNELL. That means that these additional clerks are fixed charges upon the United States Treasury as long as you and everybody else here lives?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is for Congress to determine. Congress passes upon the appropriation to be made and the number to be employed.

Mr. SNELL. Practically nobody is ever dropped from the statutory roll?

Mr. HAUGEN. Occasionally they are dropped, but we are expanding rather than contracting.

Mr. SNELL. We are expanding in this bureau by 251 clerks.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is a wonderful expansion.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman himself think that we are getting dollar for dollar from the expenses of this department?

Mr. HAUGEN. I would not like to say positively that we are getting dollar for dollar from this department or any other department. Candidly speaking, I do not think we get 75 cents on the dollar from any department. Take it, if you will, in the Post Office Department. I think an individual could conduct that business at 50 per cent of its present cost.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is a good time now, in the beginning of peace times, to cut to the very marrowbones the activities of the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. SNELL. I will permit.

Mr. HAUGEN. Only a few years ago Congress reported a bill appropriating $50,000 for this service. It has grown by leaps and bounds. This year the department estimates $3,131,000. The committee reports $2,689,365. The amount appropriated last year was $4,027,863. So we have a decrease of $1,338,498.

Mr. SNELL. Increase?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; decrease.

Mr. SNELL. Last year was for war-time activities.

Mr. HAUGEN. The regular appropriation bill carried $2,023,225, and the food production bill $2,004,608, making a total of $4,027,863, which amount is $1,338,498 more than the amount reported by the committee in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. What does it mean when you say you have dropped six telegraph operators at $1,080, and have added some more at $1,400?

Mr. HAUGEN. It was requested. I do not recall this item exactly, but it is requested that the salaries be increased.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. As the gentleman knows, an amendment to increase salaries has been held out of order, but an amendment to increase the number of employees is not subject to a point of order, and wherever we have found it necessary to increase a salary, under the rule of the House it is necessary to drop the employee at the lower salary and to increase the number at the higher salary.

Mr. SNELL. So that is the way it is done in this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the way it is done in this bill and in every other bill, and is the only way it can be done in any bill under the rules of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Do you not think it would be possible to cut $500,000 or $1,000,000 out of this general appropriation and get just as good service for the country as we will get this year?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I have not been very enthusiastic over these appropriations.

Mr. SNELL. I know the gentleman has not.

Mr. HAUGEN. And especially these increases. But bear in mind the committee spent days and nights for weeks in the consideration of this bill, and succeeded in cutting the appropriation $442,000, and another item $3,000,000. We thought we had done well. We have cut these items. We did our best; we reported the bill; I trust the House will sustain the committee.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the intention of the gentleman next year to try to cut down the appropriation and the activities of this Bureau of Markets to a still greater degree?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is my purpose to scrutinize every item and to allow every dollar that I believe can be judiciously expended, but not one dollar more, and I am pleased to think that the committee and the House are in accord with that sentiment.

Mr. SNELL. I think the country at large is very much in accord with the sentiment of greatly reducing the war-time activities of the Government in time of peace.

Mr. HAUGEN. I fully agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. We were very generous in our appropriations before, because we were afraid it might interfere in some way with winning the war if we were not; but the war is over, and now I feel that we ought to look into each one of these appropriations and prune them as carefully as possible.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am heartily in accord with that sentiment.

Mr. SNELL. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to amend, on line 22, page 79, by striking out the figures "$671,810" and inserting in lieu thereof "$387,850."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 79, line 22, strike out "$671,810" and insert in lieu thereof "$387,850."

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will this accomplish any reduction in the actual appropriation? Having made specific appropriations in the items on pages 78 and 79, will we not have the aggregate of those items anyway, whether you reduce the total or not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If we gave the Secretary $387,000 instead of $671,000, and left with him the discretion he seems to have to change these salaries as he sees fit, he could cut the garment to fit the cloth.

Mr. DOWELL. That is true, except for the fact that we have made the specific appropriations and fixed the specific salaries in each item on these two pages, and this is merely a mathematical computation and does not affect the actual appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think if the amendment is carried it will be up to the Secretary to readjust the force so that he can pay them out of the allowance we make. My point is that Congress ought to fix some limitation on the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. DOWELL. I agree with the gentleman's proposition, but I am calling attention to the position the gentleman is in, where we have made special appropriations, and then he attempts to cut down the aggregate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will explain why I made this amendment. I do not care to be put in the position of clipping a little bit here and a little bit there off the salary of department employees. A point of order would lie against the salary of the chief of the bureau being raised from $4,500 to $5,000 in the bill. If I was so minded, I could make a point of order against the increase of salary, and it would be sustained by the Chair, but I do not like to resort to that method of regulation. I would prefer to have legislation enacted by this body so that the Secretary of Agriculture would have his limit fixed. I do not care to get the reputation in this House, on this bill or any other bill, of taking advantage of a technicality to cut down a man's salary. In fact, there would be no actual cutting down, because the salary of the chief of the bureau is $4,500 and it is proposed to give him $5,000. I could save that extra $500 by making the point of order, but I do not care in this instance to do so.

If the committee should adopt the amendment and cut this appropriation down from $671,000 to $387,000, the Secretary could adjust these clerks, draftsmen, and others and their salaries to fit the situation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do we not legislate for all the positions and the amounts payable for salaries; and, assuming that the gentleman's motion should carry and that he is making the motion in good faith, would not the Secretary be authorized to continue the employees and pay them these amounts and then come in under the deficiency bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He might do it under a deficiency bill. Congress would then be better able to understand the peculiar privileges which the Secretary of Agriculture has and which no other Secretary has.

Mr. BAER. Would not the gentleman make another amendment adjusting these salaries according to the amounts mentioned in his amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have offered the amendment because it is a proper place to do it. I propose to offer others as we go along. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Iowa, has given some figures which I think the committee did not hear. The Bureau of Markets was started about six years ago. It began on the same pretense that all of these other bureaus begin, of furnishing information to the people, helping out the farmer with information. One pretense was that it would help city people by giving them information as to the markets and help them cut down the food prices. After two or three years it developed so rapidly that the chief wanted larger appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. His activities, due very largely to propaganda and the issuing of bulletins for which we were contributing the money, have advanced to such an extent that last year this bureau, which started with $50,000 six years ago, had at its disposal upward of $4,000,000.

I want you gentlemen to understand how these things grow upon us and fasten themselves on Congress from year to year. You give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to yield to the requests of his chiefs of bureaus, who are directly interested in advancing their own influence and power; and so it goes, new positions, advanced salaries, and so forth.

Bear in mind what you have done. In six years you have permitted this bureau in the Department of Agriculture to jump from $50,000 to $4,000,000. It is a terrific advance. If other bureaus are permitted to have this recourse there will be no way of finding the money. I am speaking as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, which has to find the means to run the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman think from what he has observed that in this sort of a thing we are getting anywhere near the value received for the expenditure?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not think so; and when we come to discuss other paragraphs I shall offer testimony from Chicago, from San Francisco, from New York, and Philadelphia indicating that the value of the publications sent out by the Bureau of Markets is negligible and becomes waste paper. It is charged that it is a duplicate of work already done by private agencies, without any expense to the Government. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] made reference to this yesterday and indicated that I was making a statement not in the interest of economy, but in the interest of boards of trade and chambers of commerce, which have an interest in not having the Government do the work. I am now calling attention to the fact, in view of what he said and what he may say, that the Bureau of Markets, which began with $50,000, has advanced and advanced until it now has $4,000,000, and is gradually absorbing war-trade industries and boards that did not want to go out of business.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman know how much additional expense has been entailed on account of this Bureau of Markets presumably as a war measure?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That I can not say; but this bill provides a total appropriation for the Bureau of Markets, on page 84, of $2,689,365. There are certain added activities which you will find as you read this bill—cotton futures, grain standards, and things of that kind—tacked on here and there as we go along, increasing the total appropriation enormously; but on page 84, although there are dozens of references to the Bureau of Markets elsewhere, you will find the total appropriation amounts to $2,689,365.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is that all the gentleman wants?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it would be best to get rid of it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The law last year carried a little upward of $2,000,000, so that in this bill we are providing for $666,000 more than we provided last year.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is correct; but I just want to observe that that does not all represent a transfer of items, representing more activities in the food-production act. Some of that represents increases in the items for the enforcement of the grain-standards act and the cotton-standards act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But there is no question about the increase of the appropriations for the Bureau of Markets this year over the appropriation made last year.

Mr. ANDERSON. Not in the regular bill; no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So far as this total on page 84 is concerned, the difference between this year and last year amounts to $666,000 more. One might ask how we are going to meet this situation. We tried to get at it by points of order, but the points of order are ruled out. We try to meet it by inquiring of the committee whether they have gone carefully into the matter, and they say they have and that they are all in favor of economy but desire to increase the appropriation this year because of these new things that have been tacked onto the Bureau of Markets. I find that the Chicago Butter and Egg Board of Trade and certain institutions in New York and San Francisco say that the publications that are sent to them at the expense of the Government through the Bureau of Markets are a real hindrance to business and an unnecessary expense, since private sources cover all that information now, and cover it better than the bureau does. The Philadelphia Produce Exchange has been protesting for some time against the activities of the Bureau of Markets, and in the time I have left I desire that the following communication be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, May 9, 1919.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Crozer Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MR. MOORE: We are inclosing you a copy of our secretary's address before the members of the Chicago Butter and Egg Board on April 22, and editorial comment thereon by the two principal dairy papers of this country. We also inclose you copy of resolutions adopted by the Chicago Butter and Egg Board on April 30. The memorial to Congress by the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, which you presented to the House on January 31, has been indorsed by the exchanges of New York and Boston. Thus you will see that the four principal markets of the country are opposed to the activities of the Bureau of Markets and consider much of the work which it does pure waste.

The authority under which this wasteful work is performed is to be found in Public, No. 40, Sixty-fifth Congress, which is called "An act to provide further for the national security and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products." Under this authority the Bureau of Markets has expanded its work into useless channels, increasing enormously the expense which the taxpayer has to provide for. It is difficult to understand how the Secretary of Agriculture could have been deluded into the notion that much of the work of the Bureau of Markets is of any value to anybody.

The final section of the act provides that its provisions "shall cease to be in effect when the national emergency resulting from the existing state of war shall have passed, the date of which shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President; but the date when this act shall cease to be in effect shall not be later than the beginning of the next fiscal year after the termination, as ascertained by the President, of the present war between the United States and Germany."

If much of the kind of work which the Bureau of Markets performs were necessary in time of war, it certainly now is not necessary, and its continuance is a sheer waste of time and money. And why should the treatment of butter, egg, and cheese distributors be an insult to their intelligence and a reflection upon their integrity?

* * * * * * *

We feel that we are entitled to more consideration in the premises, and trust that you will give your earnest attention to what is herein inclosed.

Sincerely, yours,

[SEAL.] THE PHILADELPHIA PRODUCE EXCHANGE,
JOHN S. MORRIS, President.
SAM'L S. DANIELS, Secretary.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in a great country like ours, with its diversified interests, with agriculture as one of the chief concerns of the Nation, the market becomes one of the interesting problems to every producer. The question of marketing farm products is not a question alone with the producer from the soil, but I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that the extremely interesting concern as to proper distribution goes directly to the congested centers of the Nation. His people are crying out now with regard to the high cost of living. Oh, I do not wonder that the sole objection that you have to this appropriation comes from the produce exchanges, just as read from that desk. [Applause.] They are the men who have handled the produce from the farms and have reaped where they have not sown. It was a condition that confronted this great Nation, and Congress has never done anything to relieve the abuses by produce exchanges until we created the Bureau of Markets. The produce exchanges held up the farmer and they held up the consumer; they would like to go back to the old days. It is true that a bureau set up in the Agricultural Department that has to do with the entire agricultural conditions of the Nation is going to cost money if it properly functions; but I do not care what it costs, it will never reach the loss that the farmer and the consumer sustains if you go back to the old system and let these leeches on society handle the produce from the farms and hold up both the producer and consumer in congested centers. [Applause.] This department deals with every product of the farm. The great wheat belt of the West looks to this department; the great cotton belt of the South looks to this department; the corn belt, the people who grow truck crops—and in my State we have a great industry along this line—look to this department. I know what has happened in the district from which I come and the adjoining district, the great tomato-growing section of the country. One year they would prosper and the next year the produce exchanges would bankrupt them; but now it is a stable crop, because their markets are looked out for by the Government and information furnished from this department; and so with the fruit belts of the Nation; so with the great cattle industry and with the hog industry. It is true some blunders have been made, and others will be made. This is a new piece of machinery set up, but are we going to abandon it at the behest of the men who want to prosper as against the producer and the consumer because we are just now getting the machinery in operation? [Applause.]

For one, coming from a great agricultural State where we have got to furnish my friend's constituency with his meat supply, with his cheap clothing, I do not want to be in the hands of the produce exchange, but I want my Government to furnish me with impartial information to help me reach a market that is open to the produce we make. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, we have reached a point in this bill where the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and myself have come to the earnest stage of discussion. The Morrill Act was passed in 1862. It was the first act of Congress recognizing that the Government had any substantial interest in the agriculture of the country. Under that act were established your great agricultural and mechanical colleges throughout the country. They are educational institutions that will compare favorably with any institutions anywhere in the world. Then it was concluded in 1887 that you could not teach agriculture unless you had scientific investigation to develop the facts and furnish the information and then was passed the Hatch Act. Later we passed the Nelson amendment, later the Adams Act, and then as a climax to all the acts and upon the theory that information gathered and stored up could be of no value to anyone, and upon the theory that this information distributed to the farmers by bulletins and pamphlets was probably not getting the best results, Congress in 1914, I believe it was, enacted the agricultural extension act providing for a system of itinerant teaching of agriculture. Up to this time, gentlemen, we had been going on the theory that agriculture as a profession must confine itself entirely to the matter of production, that it was a wise thing to teach the farmers to produce two blades of grass where only one grew before, and then some one suddenly discovered that there were other sides of agriculture, chief among which was the matter of the marketing of that which we produced. The experts in various agricultural colleges, notably in Minnesota, had been making some inquiry as to the cost of distributing butter, I think it was, and they found that there was an enormous difference between the price that the producer got and the price that the consumer had to pay. The result of these investigations was that there came up a demand from the producers of the country as well as the consumers for the creation in the Department of Agriculture of a Bureau of Markets. Various and sundry bills were introduced and referred to the Committee on Agriculture, most of them carrying large appropriations and most of them in their very nature being unworkable, socialistic in their tendency, and the Committee on Agriculture studied those bills, studied the problem of marketing, and came to the conclusion to write into the Agricultural appropriation bill language almost identical with the language of the organic act and carry with it an appropriation of $50,000. That was some six or seven years ago. That was the beginning of the Bureau of Markets. It has grown, it has grown rapidly. The Congress itself has put burdens upon this department and it is necessary that in carrying out the will of Congress this bureau must have the funds and the means with which——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. For a question.

Mr. VAILE. Can the gentleman elucidate why, in view of the activities of this bureau, there is still such a discrepancy between the price the producer gets and the price the consumer has to pay?

Mr. LEVER. Well, that is a problem that will take many years to solve, many years to solve; but I will say this, the theory of the Bureau of Markets is to furnish information, and accurate information, to advise the consumer where he may buy his butter, to advise the producer of butter where the market for butter is not glutted, and so with eggs, so with vegetables, so with fruits, so with meat, so with cattle, and so with hogs. When I first came to Congress there was no Bureau of Statistics furnishing accurate and impartial statistics of cotton. There were a dozen or more agencies in New York which were sending out all kinds of reports about the condition of cotton, making all kinds of guesses about the size of the crop of cotton, and whenever the bears were in control those agencies were influenced to send out bearish reports, and whenever there was a bull drive on you would find these agencies sending out bullish reports. There was no impartial person standing between the producer and those people who manipulated their reports and constituted the gambling element on the exchanges. Congress took the matter in hand and created a bureau which now furnishes accurate information, impartial information, the most accurate information that can be had as to the acreage, growing conditions of the crop, and finally the ultimate yield of the crop, with the result that these private agencies have been driven practically out of business. It costs money to do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. In just a minute. It costs money to do that, and I venture the assertion that the appropriation that we make for this purpose from year to year is a mere bagatelle compared with the amount we save to the producer of cotton by having an impartial report, and there is not a man here from the South who does not know that. This is true in reference to wheat and the staple agricultural products. This Bureau of Markets proposes to furnish accurate information on perishable products, just as other bureaus are furnishing them on staple products. There has been no attack on this bureau except such as inserted here by the gentleman from Philadelphia, and that comes from a produce exchange. If the gentleman will insert in the RECORD one protest from a producer of watermelons in South Carolina or Georgia, of cantaloupes in Oregon, or from the producer of onions in Texas, or the producer of cabbages in South Carolina, I think, after I investigate his honesty and his decency and his sanity, that I will withdraw my opposition to the amendment of the gentleman. I know he can not do it. Do you know about these produce exchanges? I have been looking into them a little myself. The market opens. Four or five big fellows get together and they sneak off to one corner of the room and they hold a whispered conversation, while the little fellows are looking on, most of them in dread and in agony, and they say, "The price of butter to-day in the city of Philadelphia is to be 68 cents per pound, and the price of eggs is to be 80 cents per dozen."

And then they issue their reports. This Philadelphia Produce Exchange issues a paper, and the editor of that paper has been the most vigorous opponent that this bureau has had. [Applause.] The gentleman has traveled the country. He has been to Chicago, arousing sentiment against the Bureau of Markets, and inducing other produce exchanges, controlled by the "Big Four" or the "Big Five," to send in resolutions of protest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman, if the bureau is functioning as the gentleman says, why it is that we in the cities are not deriving the benefit because of the control and from the information possessed by the bureau?

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman not know that, except for the bureau, the prices of these things might be 50 per cent higher? How can he tell? That is my answer to your question.

Mr. JUUL. They might be higher.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman receive support from this side as well as the other side in the destroying of iniquitous exchanges?

Mr. LEVER. There was no attempt to destroy them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There was an effort made to do so.

Mr. LEVER. But it was not my effort.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The power was entirely on the other side of the House, and he had the cooperation of this side.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is trying to put me in the attitude of trying to wipe out these produce exchanges. I am trying to wipe out their iniquitous methods. I am not opposing the exchanges. I am not opposing the cotton exchange; I am not opposing the grain exchanges, but I simply say to you, You ought to regulate them; you ought to squeeze out of them those things that are not proper and right. And, my friend, if you find, after a limited period of experimentation with the proper kind of regulation, you can not regulate the evils out of them, then I will go one step further and say abolish them by law. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is exactly what some gentlemen on the other side undertook to do. They did not get very far with that. Will the gentleman harmonize what he said about the exchanges with the lamentations of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] when he spoke of the injustice to the cotton man, notwithstanding you had the power to effect all the reforms you desired?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is talking about cotton, and I am talking about the Philadelphia Produce Exchange.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know. I am coming back home.

Mr. LEVER. Now, listen. The Bureau of Markets, I have had watermelon growers tell me, is doing more to stabilize the price of perishable products than it seemed possible when we started these small appropriations for it. Their purpose is to prevent glutted markets and glutted distributing points. Their purpose is to furnish to the producer information as to where he can send his goods and sell them at the best profit. Their purpose is to inform the consumer where he may look for the best products at the lowest price to himself. The whole theory is to strike out of the operation of distribution the wastefulness and corrupt practices that have grown up. There can not be, gentlemen of the committee, a more serious problem confronting the Congress than that. It is a neglected field. We have neglected it here since the foundation of the Government, and now we have begun it. The system is not perfect. There is a lot of waste, I have no doubt, though I do not know. I have not been able to discover it. They have made mistakes, and my friend from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] said that they were going to make more mistakes. But the business of Congress is to help these people overcome the mistakes, provide them with the money and the machinery, and tell them to go at this problem and solve it in the interest of the producing public as well as the consuming public.

Now, while I am on my feet, let me say that another feature of agriculture was neglected until a few years ago. That was the problem of finance. Agriculture, to my mind, is a tripod resting on three legs, one called production, the other finance, and the other distribution. And if you perform your duty to the public, consuming and producing, the Congress of the United States will look equally after all three of these legs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not all debate on the amendment exhausted?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted. The gentleman, of course, is recognized——

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no last word.

Mr. BLANTON. There evidently is a last word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing that inclines me to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and against the entire item, and that is to prevent these clerks from being placed on the permanent roll until there is a proper provision and restriction placed around them to prevent what I have called to the attention of Congress heretofore, and that is the vicious system which the Democratic administration has inherited from our friends the Republicans and which we have never yet been able to get rid of. I refer to the fact that we permit each year hundreds of clerks and employees of this Government presumably to work six or seven or eight hours for this Government on big salaries and at the same time be employed by big private concerns, firms, and corporations on big salaries, receiving double salaries at the same time. That is a system that we have inherited from the Republicans, and which both the Democrats and Republicans still permit to exist in this Nation.

You say, "Well, give us some names." I will give you a few names. Down here in the Bureau of Mines, for instance, we have a man, Mr. Charles L. Parsons, who is chief chemist of that department, and who is paid $4,800 a year by this Government and is presumed to be giving his time to the United States Government, and yet at the same time he is superintendent or manager for a private corporation—the American Chemical Association—which is housed in the Bureau of Mines, which has its office in the Bureau of Mines, which has its corps of employees in the Bureau of Mines, and in which position he draws from that private corporation an additional salary of $3,500 a year, in an office furnished by this Government, a free office, with free janitor service, free electric lights and fans, free ice water, free everything, furnished by the Government. In this office in that very department last year from some 13,500 members of this corporation there was taken into the coffers of this private concern $137,000 in dues to a private business enterprise. We permit that system to exist, and our joint congressional committee in their questionnaires which they have submitted to the employees of this Government absolutely refused to ask them the question, "Do you work for any firm or person or corporation other than the United States?" "Are you employed by any private concern?" No; they will not ask it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How long has this man Parsons had his office in the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. BLANTON. I am told, for years.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; but if you will get me time I will yield.

Mr. BAER. I will ask for five minutes more.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has not yet expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the gentleman is directing his remarks to the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. BLANTON. I am directing my remarks to the Congress of the United States, asking that we Democrats and you Republicans stop this practice. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I do. I will give you a lot more names if you will get me more time.

Mr. RUCKER. A few moments ago the gentleman made a criticism of the joint committee of Congress which is investigating the clerkships, and said that that committee has refused to ask certain questions.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I reiterate that statement.

Mr. RUCKER. Has that committee had its attention called to it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I have sent a letter, with a copy of my proposed questionnaire, to every member of that committee and implored them to submit my questionnaire to bring out the facts that I want to know as a Member of this Congress in passing upon the qualifications of clerks and the proposed reclassification of their salaries.

Mr. RUCKER. What reason did they assign?

Mr. BLANTON. One said they did not care what a clerk did after 5 o'clock in the afternoon. If he wanted to work——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for more time, since I have been interrupted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. BAER. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JUUL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. Is there objection to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] proceeding for five minutes?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall proceed, but I want to have some agreement as to the limit of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. BLANTON. I was going to give you the names of lots of them, but you do not want to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the figures "$671,810," on line 22, page 79, and insert in lieu thereof "$387,850."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products and the purchasing of farm supplies, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the department, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distributing of farm and food products, $317,520.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 80, line 11, by striking out "$317,520" and inserting in lieu thereof "$292,240."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 80, line 11, strike out the figures "$317,520" and insert in lieu thereof "$292,240."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this amendment can be voted on with a little more freedom by the Members who desire to promote economy, because it does not affect salaries and the places of clerks as the other amendment did. This paragraph is for acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information, and so forth. Last year we appropriated $292,240 for this purpose. This year, when we are supposed to be approaching a peace era, the appropriation is increased to $317,520. Now, this does not affect a salary except that it would provide for some new persons or some new publications. It can be stricken out, and very fairly so.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman if the item of $317,520 is not itemized somewhere?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not itemized here, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. I know; but can we not find out what consumes that difference between the item in the former bill and this one?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no way of informing the gentleman. I am moving to strike it out because what we appropriated last year was sufficient for the purpose, and we have been asked to advance that amount for this year when we ought to practice economy. It is for diffusing information. It may be that some more people want information, or it may be that some more people want jobs in the department. It may be that some of these war bureaus are being turned over to this bureau and that they must be taken care of.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield further in the short time remaining. In the two or three minutes left I want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] that I have no special interest in the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, or any other exchange in the country, except as they perform a useful purpose and are entitled to consideration on this floor if their business is legitimate. I want to say to the gentleman that this harangue against exchanges or against combinations intended to promote and advance the business interests does not go with me. I have been here while the gentleman's party was in power upon the other side, at least six years, while the gentleman was contending against exchanges, contending against combinations of capital in the name of the producer, but never in the name of the consumer, and I have observed that he still so contends, though he has had six years of opportunity to remedy the situation of which he complains. Witness, when the question of cotton arises, and I am not going to discuss it, except as I may very decently refer to a speech made on this floor the other day by a gentleman who has been contending in season and out of season against exchanges, against those combinations that are supposed to market the farmer's product, whether he is a planter in the South or whether he is a grain grower in the West. Listen to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], one of the chief exponents of cotton on this floor, and see whether what is sauce for the goose is also not sauce for the gander. The gentleman was complaining that the price of cotton was going down, complaining that the cotton grower was not getting his profit, and here is what he said, and think of "combinations" as you listen to him:

Now, gentlemen, let me ask you in all fairness and candor, what was the South to do under those circumstances? Would you have put your cotton on the market when it was going down like that and when to sell it meant the loss of all your profits?

He is speaking for the farmer now, who does not like combinations, who does not like boards of trade, who does not like means of exchange for distributing agricultural products.

No—

Said the gentleman from Alabama very emphatically—

You would not do that if you were a good business man.

What right has the gentleman to say what good business men would do, when he does not believe in business. The gentleman says:

We were forced to hold it and keep it off the market.

Yes; form a combination ourselves, as it were, and keep it off the market, so the price would go up and the consumer would have to pay more. The gentleman says:

If men by a combination in a gambling deal destroy the value of your property overnight, beating the price down and down, are you going to play into their hands and throw your produce on the market or are you going to say, "No; I will refuse to sell."

Cotton is not perishable. Cotton is not like the produce that comes from the West and from the farms of the North.

The law of supply and demand—

Says my friend from Alabama—

warrants a much better price, and I must have a better price or my year's work and investments are all lost.

Good sense and sound business judgment suggested to the cotton farmer to hold his cotton off the market.

Was there any combination in that? Was there any deal there? Was there any restraint of trade there that aggravated the feelings of the gentleman who stood by the farmer?

Now, what else was necessary? Concerted action.

Think of it! That may not be a combination, but it is getting together.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would not have risen at all, except that the gentleman from Pennsylvania insists on undertaking to put me in the attitude of opposing exchanges. I have repeatedly said I did not, and that I would not until I was convinced that you could not squeeze out of them their evil practices. When that time comes, if I am fortunate or unfortunate enough to be in this House, or wherever I may be, you will find my voice raised against them. But at this time I believe we can regulate them.

Some years ago we went after the New York Cotton Exchange, which had a contract which was costing the South millions of dollars. We did not undertake to destroy them. We undertook to regulate them, and we did regulate that exchange and the New Orleans Exchange, with the result that we added from 20 to 50 points, or from $1 to $2.50, a bale to the value of every bale of cotton produced in the South.

Then it was concluded, in the closing days of the last session of Congress, that they were still employing a contract which did not represent the true value of cotton, and we proceeded by amendments to the law to give to the cotton trade a contract which did represent as nearly as possible the true value of cotton.

Now, what happened? During the months of April and March, for purposes of liquidation, and as a matter of fairness, the exchanges were permitted to deal in two contracts, the old contract which they had heretofore been dealing in and a new contract recognized by the amendment to the act. And it is very interesting to any of you gentlemen who are opposing the proposition of regulating exchanges to know what happened and what value the farmer got out of this change of law, this regulation of the exchanges.

Here are the contracts and their value. April 1 it was selling for 24 cents per pound. The new contract of the same date was selling for 30, a difference in the value of the bale of $4.15. The farmers at that time were holding 5,000,000 bales. Multiply 5,000,000 by $4 a bale and you get the saving to the farmer and likewise the producer which this regulation gave to them.

For a week it stood at about that same figure. Then, on the 8th of April the difference per bale in the value of the two contracts was $7.80. On the 10th it was $8.10. On the 11th it was $8. On the 14th it was $8.10. On the 17th it was $8, and it is now, the 30th of April, $7 difference. The average is here figured out at $7.50 a bale difference in the two contracts.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman is making an interesting showing. If I understand the gentleman correctly he shows by his statement that he added $20,000,000 to the value of the bales of cotton involved.

Mr. LEVER. More than that.

Mr. JUUL. Does not that mean $20,000,000 put upon the shoulders of the consumers?

Mr. LEVER. Does not the gentleman know that we export two-thirds of the cotton produced in the United States? Does not the gentleman know that except for the export of cotton before the war the balance of trade would have been against us?

Mr. JUUL. But what I want to know is this, that in this Bureau of Markets it would seem to me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina have five minutes more. I want to get this thing straightened out in my mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina be given five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUUL. The Bureau of Markets, in so far as I have been able to understand its activities, is a mighty good thing for the producer. The gentleman has shown that on these two little items in the matter of cotton it added $20,000,000 to the price paid cotton growers. I am glad they had it, and particularly so when the gentleman states that a great portion of the cotton is exported and sent abroad. But what I want to know is, can not the great men sitting in the committee utilize the Bureau of Markets so that the consumer can get something out of it? We are paying the same exorbitant prices for everything we buy. How does the Bureau of Markets help the teeming millions in the big cities?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will try and answer the gentleman's question. For four or five years men on the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, for example, get together in the morning and say that the price of eggs shall be 80 cents a dozen, when the producer in the country is selling them for 40 cents. Now, when that occurs there is something wrong. One of the chief activities of the Bureau of Markets is to furnish to the consuming public in the cities what the producers in other parts of the country are selling eggs for. So that the public itself will demand that these leeches disgorge. In other words, I am a believer in the great principle of light. I do not believe that evil can long exist if you turn sufficient light on it. The Bureau of Markets under the present activity is furnishing the light. But you can not expect it to correct all the evils within four or five years, but if you will give the bureau proper support and proper sympathy on the floor of the House and the Senate, I believe I can guarantee to you that you will have an organization that will do more for society and the human family in the way of furnishing products at their true value than by any other method of legislation of which I am capable of thinking at this time. That is all there is in the various items here that my friend from Pennsylvania opposes. It is simply for the purpose of gathering information, furnishing it to the public, and undertaking thereby to stabilize prices and to see to it that no man is gouging the public. If that is not a reputable, laudable proposition, I would like to know what is one.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of my remarks the prices on the old and new contracts that I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the list referred to:

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to this discussion, particularly so as I come from a fruit-producing section, where we are vitally interested in the market conditions. I do not believe that farmers' combinations put the price up to the consumer, as has just been stated. That has not been my experience. The raisin growers of San Joaquin County, in California, are producing four times as many raisins to-day, are getting three times as much as they got before, and still the consumers of this Nation to-day are paying less for raisins than they did 10 years ago. Farmers' combinations do not raise the price to the consumer. The combination that raises the price to the consumer is the combination of men that get together and handle the farmer's products after they leave his hands. I never could see any logic why the farmer should plant his orchard, intelligently take care of it for 10 years, use the best years of his life diligently cultivating the soil, and then, when his fruit is ready, when it should be most carefully guarded on its way to the consumer, to give it over into the hands of the speculator, whose only thought is to get as much out of it as possible. Why should the man who raises beans, sugar beets, strawberries, apples, cotton, and corn inform himself as to the best way of making his acres produce, and just when the most money is to be made from his labor turn his product over to the man who sits in his office waiting for the time for the good thing to be ready to pick? Will you tell me if it is necessary for capital and labor to organize, if every business finds its success dependent upon organization, why, I say, should not the farmer organize? He has got to organize to survive. It is for the best interests of the consumer and the best interests of the producer that he organize speedily, that he thoroughly inform himself as to the market conditions, and it is the duty of this Nation to aid the great producing sections and to get the proper market reports, by which he can intelligently judge of the world's supply and the Nation's supply in the particular line of crop that he is interested in.

Under the old system that prevailed a few years ago when no crop reports were available the individual orcharder had no way of knowing correctly as to market and crop conditions; adverse reports could be cleverly circulated causing him to feel uncertain as to future prices, and as a rule the crop was often secured by the speculator at prices far below what should have been realized. The speculator himself who had the best information at his hand could not always be sure of profit because he was dealing in uncertainties. Profits had to be large in proportion to the chances taken. Brokerage was large, the packing charge was large; the speculator would have to take chances, and often made great gains, and so did the wholesaler and retailer. As a consequence of uncertain conditions on the market and the lack of information, the speculator was forced to hammer the price down to the producer. The jobber was forced to buy at as low a price as possible for fear his competitors might buy still lower, and so with the wholesaler and retailer. Each one was fearful of the market and afraid to lay in a supply without the possibility of large profits. The old system of marketing was the worst form of speculation. It was a gamble pure and simple. The system paid the orchardist the lowest possible price for his product and gave him neither advertisement nor standardization in return for the vast amount of money that it cost. The old and faulty system of marketing charged the consumer the highest possible price to cover possible loss in future years. The "tax in transit" from grower to consumer was very great, often four times what the product of the soil brought the producer. Under the old and faulty system of marketing the man who did the work did not get the money. The orchardists of California have lost each year millions of dollars by early and unwise selling, because they had no way, individually, of telling as to the actual condition of the market. The Government of the United States should aid to the fullest this great producing class of its citizens to properly market their products, and this House should maintain the appropriation for supplying the Department of Agriculture with the necessary funds to inform all growers and consumers of our Nation as to the actual conditions of the world market.

When the Government fully cooperates with the farmer in his marketing associations the consumer will receive his goods at a very much lower figure than ever because the broker would be anxious to handle the product at a small profit where his profit was sure. The jobber would not hesitate to order a year's supply for fear of a decline in price; and so with the retailer. They would both be satisfied with fair profits because it was a sure one. The excessive "tax in transit" under the faulty system that has heretofore prevailed would be eliminated and, in my judgment, to a large extent the distrust and contention that has existed between the producing and consuming market would be eliminated.

The orange growers of California in connection with the Federal market director have to a large measure solved the questions of marketing the oranges. For many years it was difficult to secure the proper information, and while one market was glutted other markets would be depleted. While consumers in one section of the country were paying a high price for the oranges the consumers in a near-by city were paying a low price. One producer of oranges might have struck the market on a fortunate day while his neighbor might have been equally unfortunate in another market. There was no system, no cooperation, and no satisfaction to the great consuming cities of the East. The activities of the Federal market director have met with the approval of the producer and have saved money to the taxpayers of this Nation.

The market director of the State of California has shown his wisdom in advocating the combination of farmers, not for the sake of raising the price to the consumer but of cutting out the speculator who is a detriment not only to the consumer but to the producer. The West is leading the world in solving the question of marketing, and this item that is before the Committee of the Whole for discussion at this time should not be reduced but rather larger appropriations and broader scope should be given to the Federal market director to aid the farmers of this Nation in knowing fully and completely as to the crop conditions of the world, and I will say that as long as I remain as a Representative from the eighth district of California I will always raise my voice in behalf of the producer and that voice will carry the protection of the consumer as well.

In the limited time under the rules of the House that has been allotted to me for the discussion of this matter I will not go further at this time into an exhaustive discussion of the great advantages that the cooperative movement offers to the farmers of this Nation. Neither will I at this time point out in detail the immense amount of money that has been saved to the prune growers of Santa Clara County and of the State of California by the strong and ably directed company, the California Prune & Apricot Growers (Inc.), in their successful effort to solve the marketing problem of the prune and apricot growers of my State. But I am constrained in the few moments that are still remaining to me to make some general remarks that have been suggested to me by the discussions which have taken place on the floor of this House for the past three days on the Agricultural bill. While I have no desire or any expectation of bringing any new thought to the attention of you gentlemen, many of whom have for years been discussing the problems that affect the destinies of this Nation, still I feel, as one of the new Members in this House, that I wish to place myself squarely on record before this House and the people of the Nation in believing that the Agricultural bill which is before us to-day and which failed of passage in the Senate practically as it now stands is the most important bill that this Congress will have to consider, because it affects a greater number of our citizens than any other bill that will be presented in the Sixty-sixth Congress. In discussion from time to time by the Members in the Committee of the Whole it is apparent and gratifying to notice the large increase that in the past 10 years has been made by the Congress of the United States in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

And why have you made it? The farmers have not come here in a body, they have not had a powerful lobby to support their demands, there has been no great cry from the farmers for help. No; the farmer did not know that he needed any help. From the nature of the development of this country he found himself on the farm alone at great distances from his neighbors with no means of easy communication. All the questions that affected his destiny and the destiny of his family must be decided by him and by him alone. He had not the advantage that comes from interchange of ideas. He had not the advantage that cooperative effort could give him; he had not the advantage that association with his neighbor offered, and while it is true that this mode of life developed a wonderfully resourceful and independent people it is equally true that it took him away from safety. It made him a stranger to the education and achievements that can only come from mutual interchange of ideas. The nature and extent of his labor gave him no opportunity for development and developing his business methods. He became a lone hand player. He went along year in and year out, apparently reconciled to his lot. If his crops were poor or if pests destroyed them, he cursed his luck and hoped that his sons would be able to go to the city and that they would not have to work as he did. He skimped and saved, his wife wore the same sunbonnet and sold butter and eggs to get a little money ahead in order that the children might have a chance to go to boarding school, with the fond hope in view that peradventure they would become lawyers, doctors, preachers, or storekeepers. There was no thought of encouragement to them to remain on the farm, because, apparently, there were no opportunities in the life of a tiller of the soil. Their great ambition was to give their children opportunities that were denied them.

As a result of this condition there was a great exodus from the farm to the city. And what then? You saw in this movement a danger to the country. Wise and far-sighted statesmen pressed on our State legislatures and on this body of lawgivers the necessity of changing this drift. You saw the danger to our country. You had information which a few men who have studied this question had given to you. You quickly realized that the Nation could not prosper when the agricultural interests of that Nation were in danger. You realized that this rich country was losing millions of dollars each year by wasteful methods in farming. You informed yourselves of the possibility of the soil where even a fair degree of thrift and intelligence was displayed. You increased the agricultural appropriation bill by millions each year. The State legislatures appropriated thousands and started agricultural schools, the realization was pressed home by neglected and abandoned farms, by the congestion of the population in our cities, by the danger that this exodus threatened to the proper balance of the Nation. You again appropriated, for you had before you the results of the experiments made by the Agricultural Department. You could see that the young man was no longer ashamed that he was going to the cow college. His father pointed with pride to the fact that his son would soon graduate from the agricultural college. The farmer was no longer ashamed of his calling. With wise legislation you had elevated him from the farmer to the agriculturist.

The corn lands of Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska began to increase the yield per acre. The farmer, under the stimulating influence of experts, was selecting seed from the center of choice ears, and again a great increase was apparent. Our dairymen were cutting their herds in half and were still making more butter and cheese from one-half the cows they originally fed. The agricultural college graduates were feeding a balanced ration and scientifically applying fertilizer.

Last year the demonstrations of the Department of Agriculture attracted the attention of 3,000,000 farmers in our Nation. As a result of these demonstrations in the 15 Southern States and the enthusiasm that the farmer received from the possibility of greater increases in his crops you increased the production in a marvelous manner. When you compare the production of food supply in 1913 and in 1917 you will find that the number of bushels of corn increased from 658,252,000 to 682,643,000; the number of bushels of wheat increased from 51,009,000 to 74,857,000; the number of bushels of oats increased from 97,237,000 to 120,613,000; the number of tons of hay increased from 4,214,000 to 6,510,000; the number of bushels of white potatoes increased from 17,798,000 to 27,987,000; the number of bushels of sweet potatoes increased from 47,055,000 to 72,870,000. By the proper education and proper feeding methods in the North and Northwest the number of live stock of the farmers was increased by 43,405 head of cattle, 130,125 head of swine, 148,211 head of sheep, and 327,095 head of poultry.

The activity of the department was apparent not alone on the farm, but in the schools and the homes. They lent a helping hand in the kitchen, where the mothers and daughters learned to be more economical with their food, learned the proper method of canning and keeping food supplies. Eight hundred thousand boys and girls in the Northwestern States were enrolled in the industrial clubs in one year. The Department of Agriculture, when one gives even a cursory study, is found to lend its assistance and encouragement in the many and diversified fields that safeguard the Nation's health and wealth. In my opinion, it is the greatest organization of its kind in the world. Its activities cover the wide and extensive range that make for a greater and more contented people. It seems to me our thought should be how much of our money can we judiciously expend through this great organization and not how little. You have waved the magical wand through the instrumentality of the Agricultural Department and, lo, the Nation's wealth has increased by 50 per cent. Surely these activities deserve our most careful and continued encouragement.

To the uninitiated his success was magical. Now, this educated farmer is pressing you for larger and larger appropriations. He pleads his own cause because he knows that science is helping him each year and will continue to aid him in the years to come. And you know, or should realize, having before you the wonderful developments on the farm in the past 20 years that there is no money expended by this Nation that is bringing back to the people of this Nation a greater dividend than the money that has been spent in the Agricultural Department of our Nation. Men of wisdom know that the prosperity of this Nation is fundamentally based on the skill with which we till our soil, and we will agree quite unanimously that the kind of men that make all-around good citizens, that the kind of men who in the last analysis are the ideal American citizens, are the intelligent farmers, the man who owns and cultivates his small acreage. The average boy who makes up his mind to master the profession of agriculture has a better chance in life than the boy who selects the city in which to earn a livelihood. He has a better chance for success, for health, and for happiness; he has a better chance to transmit to posterity those virile and sterling traits that our farmer ancestors possessed. Those sterling qualities of courage, self-reliance, independence, love of liberty and justice, and love of country comes with greater ease from contact with the soil. They are the same qualities that our ancestors possessed; they are the same qualities that overcame the difficulties of the wilderness and the savage tribes. These are the qualities that gave to us our country and our freedom.

You have changed this drift; it is now moving from city to country. And as I see the future, and as I believe intelligent men all over this land of ours see the future, we are interested in seeing that our stream of sturdy young men move out from the crowded cities and take their chances on the great acres of undeveloped land that this Nation offers to them.

Let this body of men, who, if I may venture a guess, owe their preferment in life to that impulse given to them by their rugged and hardy forebears, see to it that no effort is left undone to bring as large a part of our citizenship as can be successfully accommodated to the great and wonderful out of doors.

I was greatly impressed when I came from the West to this eastern land. We have country and you have cities. As I saw the throngs of workers in your mills, the vast number who come to your magnificent office buildings, I knew that the great majority of these people of the East were going about at the beck and call of somebody else. I realized as never before that the few were doing the planning for the many, and I know, as you know, that while our cities have developed great and able men, and many of them, and that our commercial prosperity and preferment is their offering to the wealth of our Nation, still we realize that in comparison they are few in number to the great numbers of our urban population. And I will venture that we will again agree that the future strength of our Nation is in having every acre of our many acres of tillable soil owned and farmed by good American farmers. And I am not going to fail to say that this possibility is in our hands. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has become very largely academic. It deals with nothing that is before the House at this time. To some remarks injected into the discussion by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], however, I want to reply. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been taunting the gentleman from South Carolina with the fact that there were some persons on the Democratic side of the House who wanted to abolish the cotton exchanges. I plead guilty to being one who desires to abolish the cotton exchange. The figures the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] put into the RECORD a moment ago furnish an argument in favor of that. The old contract which originally permitted the exchanges to deal in 9 grades of cotton was expanded by the exchanges until they had 21 grades. The new contract, so called, reduced these to 10 grades. Selling under the old and the new contracts, as shown by these figures, shows a wide divergence—in fact, at times, more than is shown here, amounting to as much sometimes as $13.50 per bale. That is, if you let the man on the exchange gamble under the old contract, he would say cotton would be worth $13.50 per bale more than the same cotton in the same market the selfsame day was worth under the other contract. Let me repeat. For instance, my cotton on one contract was quoted $9.50 per bale higher than the same cotton in the same market the same day under another contract. It means that the reduction of 10 grades raised the price of cotton $13.50 a bale. That shows they were not dealing in cotton at all. They were betting, and if you let him bet under one contract he would bet that cotton would be worth, we will say, $150 a bale on the New York Exchange on the 1st day of May, and if you let him bet with you under another contract he would bet it would be worth $163.50. It is the same bale of cotton in the same market on the same day, weighing exactly the same number of pounds, but there is a difference of $13.50 a bale if you let him gamble under one contract rather than under the other. It did go to a difference of $13.50, and the peculiar thing about it was that before the gamblers themselves could make up their minds which was the better contract for them the old contract sold higher than the new contract, and then the new contract sold higher than the old. If having a reduction of 10 imaginary grades of an imaginary cotton means a difference in wealth to the farmers of the country of $40,000,000, then I submit that if you will outlaw gambling under the other 10 grades you can make a difference of $80,000,000 just as well. It simply proves, which farmers have always contended, that gambling does influence the price of their products; does rob them of the fruits of their toil. No one can longer deny that future gambling does influence the price of cotton and does rob those who toil to enrich those who toil not. I am in favor of abolishing the cotton exchanges.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, agriculture is the corner stone upon which all other industries rest. It is the duty of the Government to encourage agriculture, to encourage the producer. It is the duty of the Government to see that the producer, upon whom we all depend for the food that we eat, is paid a fair and reasonable price for his produce.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] takes a fall out of the producers of cotton, a crop that brings into the United States annually more gold than the world's annual output, serves our country as no other product does or can. The cotton producers of the United States were confronted with a combination of certain foreign and domestic spinners and speculators who had driven the price of cotton down below the cost of production. Does any fair-minded man believe that the cotton producers of the United States should be forced into the market to sell their cotton at a price below the cost of production or a price that will not yield a fair profit? Do you gentlemen really want to force such a condition as that on the cotton producers of your country?

Yes, our cotton producers announced to the world that they could not afford to sell their cotton at the price fixed by speculators on the exchange—that the spinners had gone into a combination with certain speculators, foreign and domestic. My good friend from Pennsylvania complained about the cotton producers having concerted action in holding cotton in the effort to get a living profit, but when speculators broke the price $50 a bale in 60 days, which meant ruin to the cotton producer, I never heard his eloquent voice raised against them and in behalf of a fair deal for the cotton producer.

But when the producer comes up and says, "It cost me so much to produce this cotton, and I must have so much or I will not derive a profit, and in order to get a living profit I am going to hold my cotton until I can get a profit," would the gentleman have a law enacted to compel him to sell when it means ruination to his business?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. For a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I stand as much against the speculator as the gentleman from Alabama, but I want to ask the gentleman whether he does not know that during the domination of power on the other side we passed a cotton-futures act and certain other cotton acts very largely at the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama and covering the very points of which the gentleman complains?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; we did pass an act to regulate cotton exchanges, and I did what I could to establish certain rules and regulations for the exchanges; but I want to say to my friend from Pennsylvania that the act containing those rules and regulations was perverted from the ends of its institution. We confined them to 9 grades and they used 21 grades. The fact is 7 grades will cover the grades of the cotton crop of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose we agree with the gentleman as to that. Was not that the fault of the administration in enforcing the law?

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, the exchanges are hard to keep regulated. They are always devising ways and means for the evasion of the law; and I will say to the gentleman that if the grain exchanges and cotton exchanges can not be regulated I will vote to abolish them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submit to the gentleman——

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say in reply to a gentleman here about unloading the burden on the consumer——

Mr. JUUL. There is a question which I desire to ask the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. The time is limited and I fear——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. HEFLIN. Only a minute. I want to say that this particular burden is not laid upon the consumer. I have seen speculators beat down the price of cotton and then buy it from the producer at 10 cents a pound and later on sell it for 14 cents. The producer was robbed and the consumer was imposed upon. In this instance foreign spinners and foreign cotton merchants were in combination to buy cotton of the 1918 crop and sell it to Germany and Austria at a tremendous profit, and I said that the cotton producer was entitled to a fair price and a living profit. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, in response to the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL], I desire to state the following for the information of the gentleman. Fruit and vegetable interests generally have expressed considerable concern over the probable reduction in this line of effort, as producers, shippers, and distributors alike regard it as fundamentally necessary:

Improvement of refrigerator-car equipment, standard car: Important improvements in the character of such equipment have been made as a result of this work. Practically all the refrigerator cars built in the United States within the past year have been constructed according to the recommendations of the Bureau of Markets. This work should be continued if full benefits are to be gained.

Heater cars for protecting perishables from freezing damage in transit: This work has been developed to a point where, in two or three more seasons, it will be possible to specify standardized methods and equipment as a result of which practically all freezing losses in transit can be eliminated.

Loading cars efficiently: Very serious losses from breakage and deterioration constantly result from improper methods of loading, bracing, and stowing fruits and vegetables for shipment.

Motor transportation of farm products: The work, already begun by the Bureau of Markets, of investigating and demonstrating the possibilities of transporting farm products by motor truck can be continued on its present basis for approximately $25,000 a year.

A widespread popular interest is being manifested in the possibility of establishing a more intimate and direct transportation service to rural districts through a more complete utilization of our highways. An effort has been made to introduce the elements of stability into the rural motor industry as constituted at present through direct cooperation with owners and operators of existing motor-truck routes. An accounting system which will indicate costs of operation has been devised for the use of operators of motor routes and approved forms for shipping records have been suggested to them. Emphasis has been placed on the necessity for adequate insurance covering motor-truck cargoes.

Eight demonstration routes have been established and operated successfully, studies have been made of the operation of farmers' cooperative truck associations, and a preliminary survey of the marketing of live stock by motor truck has been conducted in certain live-stock centers.

Two bulletins have been issued as result of this work, the great demand for which indicates the active interest of the public in the subject. Fifty-five thousand copies of these bulletins have been distributed. It has been necessary to request a reprint of one of them in response to urgent demands.

So undoubtedly the department has made progress. It appears the money has been well expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits and vegetables, $250,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 80, line 15, by striking out "$250,000" and inserting "$196,660," the amount that was appropriated last year and which ought to be sufficient to carry along this work now that the war is practically at an end.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 15, strike out "$250,000" and insert "$196,660."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 15, after the word "vegetables," strike out the figures "$250,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$309,660."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this may seem a very substantial increase in the amount carried in the bill for this purpose, but when you look at the report of the committee you will see that it is a very substantial and material reduction in the amount which is available during this fiscal year for this purpose. With reference to this item in this bill and the three items subsequent to it, I have, upon the earnest solicitation of the people of my section of the country who are interested in fruits, vegetables, stock, grain, dairy and poultry products, and so forth, taken this matter up with the Department of Agriculture. I have obtained the information that the likely effect of the adoption of this appropriation as here outlined with reference to this year's market reports and the news service concerning vegetables, fruit, meat, stock, and so forth, will be practically to discontinue this service in the western half of the United States, to make fish of one and flesh of another; and here, it seems to me, is a very good opportunity to give sauce to the goose as well as to the gander. This amount of $369,660 appropriated by this amendment is the last amount asked of the committee by the department for this purpose. It seems to me that to pass this item as it here stands in the bill would be unjust discrimination in favor of one section and against another. And it is almost a matter, I may say, of exalting the field of speculation and debasing the field of production, because the western part of this country is to a very large extent and in very great measure the fruit growing, the grain cultivating, the vegetable producing, and the cattle-raising section of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes in which to conclude some remarks that I made a few minutes ago.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman withhold until we read another section?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I will be glad to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to gather from stockmen, live-stock associations, State live-stock and agricultural boards, common carriers, stockyards, commission firms, live-stock exchanges, slaughtering and meat-packing companies, and other information relative to the number of different classes and grades of marketable live stock, especially cattle, hogs, and sheep in the principal live-stock feeding districts and growing sections; prices, receipts, and shipments of the different classes and grades of cattle, hogs, and sheep at live-stock market centers; prices of meats and meat-food products and the amounts of such products in storage; to compile and publish such information at such frequent intervals as most effectively to guide producers, consumers, and distributors in the sale and purchase of live stock, meats, and other animal products; and to gather and publish any related information pertaining to marketing and distribution of live stock, meats, and animal by-products, the sum of $105,320.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order so as to conclude remarks I started to make a few minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is one case in particular to which I would like to call the attention of Congress by reason of the fact that on the 9th day of June there will be held an examination affecting 2,500 employees of this Government. In the income-tax unit there is employed in the instruction department Mr. John T. Kennedy. I am informed that he draws a salary from this Government at this time of $4,500 per year. I understand—I do not know that the information is correct, but it comes to me from a good source—that this particular man in a large way has much to do with the selection of clerks in this particular division. I want to call your attention to the fact that in the little document which I hold in my hand, which is printed by Pace & Pace, conducting the Pace Institute of Washington ,D. C., accountancy and business administration, on page 4, it is shown that among the officers of administration and instruction in this Pace Institute appears the name of John T. Kennedy as one of the officers of instruction.

I am informed by reputable clerks of this District that this particular institute attempts to properly instruct and prepare for such examination hundreds of clerks. And I am informed by reputable clerks of this District that this particular District employee of this Government, who holds a position in the instruction department of the income-tax unit at a salary of $4,500 a year, and who at the same time is an administrative officer of this Pace Institute, largely determines who of these 2,500 clerks to be examined are to be promoted in this particular department of the Government.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment.

Mr. JUUL. For a question.

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment, because my time is limited to five minutes and I wish to finish this particular thought.

This is one of the reasons I have asked Congress to adopt the resolution which I have introduced, to demand of the joint congressional committee that they must submit to the thousands of employees of this Government the questionnaire that shall bring from them what employment they are in on the outside of this Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will first yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL].

Mr. JUUL. I was going to ask the gentleman from Texas whether or not he thinks it probably biases the judgment of the gentleman, who is instructor in a school, as to whether the clerks come from his school or some other school?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not see how he can help being influenced, wittingly or unwittingly, if he is an administrative officer of a school that prepares students specially for such positions.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not know that those employed in the income-tax division are certified by the Civil Service Commission and appointed from the civil-service record and not by Mr. Kennedy or any other employee of the Income Tax Bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. If my distinguished friend from Tennessee will get the particular examination papers which are to be used on the 9th day of June he will see that he is mistaken in that position, as the examination is not conducted by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that those papers are graded by the Income Tax Bureau and not by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BLANTON. It is not one of the regular civil-service examinations, as shown by the examination papers I have here in my possession.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is entirely wrong. He will find they are not graded by the Income Tax Bureau.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not wrong. Anyway, if we want the facts concerning dual employment we can get them by having my questionnaire answered.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this paragraph has in it the provisions for ascertaining the variation of the prices of live stock and meat products at different points. All of us have been seriously concerned about the abnormally high prices of all necessaries of life. I was looking over the price current as furnished in the daily press. Meat is selling at a price never known before in the history of the country, and, at the same time, so far as we know, the product is not limited, but, rather, extended beyond the normal. So it would appear that the law of supply and demand, which has heretofore operated to control prices, does not operate, and all of us are anxious to know why it does not. It is pertinent to ask what influence is at work to interrupt this law.

I have made a little inquiry about the amount of meats held by the Government, purchased for the purpose of war, and I want to give you the figures. I would like to have the attention of the membership of the committee as to these figures, for I know they must carry some significance when considered in the light of the scaling high prices charged to the public.

Roast beef held by the Government on the 20th of May, 12,000,000 6-pound cans, which would be about 72,000,000 pounds; 17,330,000 2-pound cans, or over 34,000,000 pounds; 9,000,000 1-pound cans, in addition to a great number of 12-ounce cans, or a total of something approaching 120,000,000 pounds of roast beef.

Corned beef, 5,600,000 6-pound cans, or 33,000,000 pounds; 18,000,000 2-pound cans, or 36,000,000 pounds; 9,000,000 1-pound cans; and 4,500,000 12-ounce cans; corned beef hash, 20,820,000 1 and 2 pound cans; bacon, 47,219,620 pounds.

This represents about 282,000,000 pounds of meats held by the Government, which, according to a statement of the packers, represented five months of the activities of the packing interests which were operating to collect the meat products for the Government. In normal times it is stated by the same authority that this would represent about two years of activity.

I am not—and every Member will recognize this—criticizing the Government for purchasing these large amounts, because it was done in the midst of war for the purpose of feeding the soldiers of an army the duration of which nobody could estimate, and therefore the purchase is free of criticism. But here is my question: If the Government is holding to-day this vast number of pounds of meat with the country full of live stock, and the price of bacon, notwithstanding this tremendous supply, has reached the vanishing point of 60 cents, why is it that there is not a freedom of the operation of the law of supply and demand? And the question immediately comes to me, What is the policy of the Government in its action on price fixing?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. In reading a statement of the committee as to why this tremendous amount is not put on the market, so as to allow it to take its course under the law of supply and demand, which would, of course, most certainly make it come down if left free to operate, the reply was given in these words:

The committee of packers explains that this amount was the normal production of these plants for a period of two years, and to place this quantity of packed meats on the market at this time would seriously affect prices on both the canned and fresh meats.

In other words, the very purpose of not putting it on the market is to keep the price up, and I doubt very much the wisdom of doing that as a function of the Government. We should be called upon to find a way to reduce the price rather than keep it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. RAKER. I want five minutes, Mr. Chairman, on an amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] be given one minute.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, we are getting light shed on a very important subject, and I hope the time will not be closed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I want five minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] over here wants five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish to offer an amendment. I do not care to debate it, but I think the amendment ought to be offered now, so that there will be something before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JUUL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to have the gentleman from Ohio finish his argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is 21 years old, and he can ask for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Strike out the figures "$105,329" and insert "$57,920."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 81, line 8, strike out the figures "$105,320" and insert "$57,920."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, last year the appropriation for this paragraph was $57,920. This year the bill carries $105,320, or about twice as much as the amount appropriated last year. The purpose of the amendment is to reduce the appropriation to the amount expended last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move you, sir, as an amendment, that the words "and fish" be added in line 1, on page 81, so that the section will read "and meat and fish food products." And upon that question, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment; let the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 81, line 1, after the word "meat," insert the words "and fish."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] a moment ago, when he gave figures of the surplus meat products, which I suppose he could have followed up with figures showing the surplus vegetable products, that have been in the control of the Government for some time and not put on the market for sale.

I referred to the matter last week in a speech that I made on the floor of the House, calling the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the packers said that to put those meats on the market would cause a glut and therefore a reduction in price. Well, if an ordinary citizen of the United States went to any meat store and complained against the high prices, he would be told that it was because of a scarcity of meat products. It seems to me that this situation should be corrected at once, else the people will have real reason to believe that Congress itself is under the thumb of the meat combination.

A few moments ago one of the Members of the House said while he favored the establishment of a Bureau of Markets and was willing it should be sustained by appropriations recommended by the committee, he asked what did the Bureau of Markets accomplish. That is a question I would like to ask the chairman and members of the committee. If this Government has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars for the organization and development of the Bureau of Markets, and one of the functions of the Bureau of Markets is to know the amount of meat and food products that fill the storage warehouses in the different sections of the country, how could millions of pounds of food products have accumulated, which apparently nobody knew anything about until the past few days, if the Bureau of Markets was functioning properly. It was by the merest chance that the existence of this supply came into my hands last week.

I called up the War Department and talked with the head of the bureau, Col. Quackenbush, and he told me that the meat was advertised for sale and that only the packers responded, and that the canned meats the Government had contracted and paid 30 and 45 cents a pound for a few months ago brought but a bid of 15 cents from the packers, and the Government refused the price. Within the last few minutes, over the telephone, I had a talk with Col. Quackenbush, and he said there were now on the way through the mails, through various agencies employed by the War Department, 20,000 circulars calling attention to the million pounds of meat products that were for sale.

The other day Mr. Armour, addressing me in an open letter, said that I had misrepresented the attitude of the packers on this question when I said that they were in combination with the Government to keep up the prices. I never charged that the Government was in collusion with the packers to keep up the prices, but I did say that the packers' agents, many of whom are on the pay roll of the Government at $1 a year, were anxious to keep this meat off the market, and it seems to me that it is the duty of Congress to take the control of the surplus meat away from the dollar-a-year men and to give it to the Bureau of Markets, so that the public will have the benefit of the fullest publicity concerning surplus supplies of food stocks. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. UPSHAW. Does the gentleman not think that, irrespective of party lines, it is the duty of all Congressmen to stand with the people instead of the packers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Absolutely. And that is the reason that I want the control of the food products given over to representatives of the people rather than the packers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in regard to the amendment I have submitted. The ocean is loaded with fish. They are there by millions, and it does not take the time to rear them that it does with cattle. They are out there in the sea by the billions, and yet there is a Fish Trust organized in the United States for the last two years that has been successful in inflating the price of fish 200 and 300 per cent above what would give them a good profit and be a decent price to the people. This situation has done untold injury to the public. Inasmuch as these fish which are so numerous in the ocean and so easily reached that they can be caught at a day's notice they are the best available food product that can successfully combat the Meat Trust. Therefore I think the House would be doing an act of justice by permitting fish to be supervised by the Bureau of Markets as well as meats. I can not impress too strongly on my fellow Members the fact that the high cost of living is the great issue before the American people; and we must do everything in our power to curb the rapacity of the food profiteer and give the people the benefit of every law that can be framed for their protection. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 8, strike out the figures $105,320, and insert the figures $214,720.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, have we not passed that paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. No; we are on the paragraph.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it may be true, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]—and I know it is true, because he states it—that the amount suggested in the amendment offered by him was the appropriation last year for this item. Nevertheless, it was not the amount available last year for this purpose, as shown by the report of the committee: "The food-production act of November 21, 1918, carries an additional appropriation for this purpose of $300,000, so that the amount provided in the present bill represents an actual reduction of $200,000 below the amount available during 1919." The amount suggested in the amendment is the amount recommended in the last report of the Department of Agriculture as the amount necessary to carry on the service unimpaired. Apparently this amendment would raise the amount of the appropriation for this service, but, in fact, it is a very material decrease in the amount available in 1919.

Now, I am reliably informed that the effect of the adoption of the item as it stands in the committee report is going to be to deny to all the live-stock and meat markets west of Kansas City and Chicago the beneficent effects of this bill.

Out in my section of the country, the Southwest, and all along the Pacific coast, the people are very much interested in this legislation. I take it that it is unnecessary to discuss the item from the standpoint of whether or not it is meritorious. That fact seems to be generally conceded. If the service is good for Chicago, if it is good for Kansas City, which markets, in the opinion of the Agricultural Department, must be kept up and furnished with this information, why should not the beneficent results of the service be also extended to the people of the Southwest and to the markets of the Pacific coast?

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. VAILE. Is the gentleman sure that this will not be applied to the markets in the Southwest? It says to different live-stock market centers; there is no distinction made in the bill as to which centers it shall be applied to.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say in reply to the gentleman that on the face of the bill it is not apparent that any discrimination will be made in this service, but I have had this matter up with the Agricultural Department on the earnest solicitation of the people in the Southwest who are interested in live stock, and have been furnished the information that the probable effect will be to limit this service to Chicago and Kansas City. In regard to that I quote this from a letter that I have received from Mr. Brand, Chief of the Bureau of Markets:

Under the proposed reductions as contemplated by the pending Agricultural appropriation bill, it probably will be impracticable to maintain leased wires west of Kansas City, in which event the entire western half of the United States will be cut off from the bureau's telegraphic-report service.

It is for that reason, that there may not be any unjust sectional discrimination and that the people of the Pacific coast and the people of the Southwest may have the benefit of this service, that I offer this amendment. If it is a meritorious service it should not be restricted to any locality to the disparagement of another. If Kansas City and Chicago have to be supplied, it is just as much a principle of justice and equity that the Southwest and the markets of the Pacific coast ought to be supplied. And in behalf of the Southwest, and of the West and of the Pacific coast, the markets in that section, I, though a new Member, want to insist that this justice be accorded them. I place confidence in the statements made to me by the Department of Agriculture. I do not know how to do otherwise than to take their statements at par, and I want my voice to be heard, this the first time in the House of Representatives, in behalf of those sections of the country which are equally entitled to this service, but to which, according to the best opinion we can procure, it will not go unless we receive this added appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RAKER rose.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has clearly presented the statement from the Secretary of Agriculture to show that it requires the amount suggested in his amendment to carry on this service. The committee having reported it shows that the legislation is beneficial and has given good results. The statement further shows—and it is worthy of consideration—that the service from Kansas City west will be eliminated if the amount provided for in the amendment is not agreed to. I am satisfied many members of the committee are not familiar with the conditions. West of the Mississippi River, after you get over the plains, the people living in the intramountain States and in the Pacific Coast States are engaged in cattle and sheep raising. We raise the feeders. The Kansas City and Chicago markets buy our feeders and bring them east to feed. The more they can deceive the stock raiser, the less information they can get to him, the cheaper they buy the product. That has been one of the troubles in the West for 25 years. Those men have not been receiving what they honestly and legitimately are entitled to for their stock, because they have been misinformed and ill advised and could not get the information. In the last couple of years, however, by virtue of the splendid work done by this department, our stockmen have been in a position to get information and to know what the price is, to the end that they have not been deceived and practically robbed. This legislation as it now stands cuts off that service. Why give it at all to Chicago, why give it to Kansas City, when they have it already within their own grasp and maintain their own leased wires and their own business? They have the money to do it, but you provide for additional service by the $105,000, and the part of the country that actually needs it will not get the benefit of it, as it has been receiving it during the last two years. There is no need for our being penurious about our appropriations. Let us spend the money where it will give the most service. If the service will do good, why not grant it? If you spend $100,000 and get splendid results, if it benefits your people, you get twice that in return by virtue of taxation and other forms of revenue. I trust that the committee will not eliminate the service where it ought to be granted, and will permit the bill to be amended as offered by the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Ohio made a very clever statement to the House. This will eliminate that if you adopt it, and give them enough money to spend and enable the Secretary to give information regarding the price of meats and food products and the amount of such products in storage.

Now, they would be able to show the amount——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield me a minute to complete this thought?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have only two minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Then I will have to suppress that thought.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the appropriation for the current year is $57,920. The committee reports $105,320. It is true that $300,000 was used in the food-production act, all told, $357,920; but, gentlemen, if there was anything ever definitely determined, it was that the items carried in the food-production bill should not be continued in future appropriation bills. The food-production bill is a war measure. The amount has been increased from $57,000 to $105,000. We believe the committee's recommendation a very liberal increase. I trust that the amendment of the gentleman may be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair stated that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 25, at the bottom of page 80, I move to insert the word "fish" after the word "meats," and in line 5, page 81, the word "fish" following the word "meats," and in line 7, on page 81, the word "fish" following the word "meats."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 25, after the word "meats," insert the word "fish"; page 81, line 5, after the word "meats," insert the word "fish"; and page 81, line 7, after the word "meats," insert the word "fish."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet asking recognition on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. All time has been exhausted.

Mr. RAKER. No; I was on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. But debate has been closed on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, demand, commercial movement, disposition, quality, and market prices of dairy and poultry products, $80,600.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make it against?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Against the paragraph. This is not in existing law, not provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that this is part of the function of the Bureau of Markets under the organic law and feels constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, complaint is made from various large centers that this is an extension of the work of the Bureau of Markets which is unnecessary and a displacement of existing work already provided for by private agencies without expense to the Government. I quote from resolutions recently passed by the Chicago Butter and Egg Board:

Resolved, That we believe it to be our duty to call the attention of Congress to some of the activities of the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, which are unnecessary and wasteful, among which we cite the publication of daily market reports giving prices of butter and cheese in the various markets, as this work is more quickly and better done by private agencies at no expense to the taxpayer. In butter and eggs the sales on the street and on the exchanges establish a necessary trading basis early in the day. This is reported by private agencies and immediately distributed by wire wherever needed, and the work of the Bureau of Markets, which does not usually reach the trade until the next day, is superfluous and unnecessary and therefore a waste.

Mr. Chairman, there is much more in the resolutions which were passed by these business men in the city of Chicago. Similar resolutions have been passed in New York, in Philadelphia, and on the Pacific coast. It seems to me that as these gentlemen contend that they already have all the information desired, that they get it most speedily from private sources that do not have appropriations from the Government, and, as we are now entering peace times after the war, when economy should be the watchword, this paragraph should go out. It would mean not only a saving of $80,600, but it would mean a saving of time, trouble, and annoyance to the business men, who seem not to want the service. It seems to me this is a chance for the committee to economize if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, when I rose a moment ago it was in regard to the amendment placed on the bill after an agreement had been made to close debate in regard to fish. I am very much in favor of that amendment, and I am glad that amendment went on. I want to call the attention of my friends on this side to the fact that they let it go on after debate had been closed without any opposition whatever, and yet they voted against an increase in the amount for looking after live stock, and so forth. My friends over here on this side all voted against it, and then they turn right around after that was done and let an amendment go on for the benefit of a few Eastern States, whereas Western States and in the intermountain States and Pacific Coast States, where we have been working for years to try to do something, will not get one dollar's worth of investigation, and this matter will be turned over to the Beef Trust. Why do not you give these men a chance? Yet you turn around and put on another amendment. Why do you refuse to give the Bureau of Markets an opportunity to investigate the trust and find out where the beef is and where the cattle are and——

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VAILE. Is not the matter of fish of as much importance to us of the inland districts as of those on the coast, looking from the standpoint of the consumer?

Mr. RAKER. The great Agricultural Committee has come in and I say they put an amendment on after they had voted down the amendment which would give these cattle and stock men some opportunity for their white ally or a run for their lives. Without proper and sufficient appropriations they will have no opportunity to investigate the market. They have had a chance in the last two years since the Bureau of Markets has been investigating, and why do not you turn back now by unanimous consent to the paragraph and put on another $214,000, to the end that these people may have an opportunity of knowing what is going on in this country? We ought not to shut them off and shut them out of information so that the fellows in Chicago and in Boston and in Kansas City may take their profits. We want to protect the people in the West, leaving out Kansas City and that little section where they have feeders, and not let the trust run and control the whole thing.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not a fact that the trust referred to as controlling the price of meat also controls the price of fish?

Mr. RAKER. I am in favor of putting on fish and giving us fish eaters a chance, too; but do not cut out the stock-raising interests; do not give the cattle and sheep men entirely over to the trust, but give them a chance and opportunity, that they may know what the markets are, that they may have a chance when the cattle buyer comes around to meet him with a telegram he has received on the same day, and not have a condition that I have seen for 25 years imposed on those men, when their cattle have been bought for a third less than the market price.

Mr. BAER. The trouble with most of these statistics of the weather bureaus and the markets is that the speculators and the gamblers are on the job and that these reports are laid on the table. The information has already been acquired by the speculators and gamblers.

Mr. RAKER. You are mistaken about that. Right from the Department of Agriculture, hot over the trail, within an hour and a half's time, our people in the West have received the information as to the market and they have been able to meet these stock brokers and gamblers on this Beef Trust proposition. They do not have control of the Department of Agriculture. That is run by honest men, who give these people good, first-hand information.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, this discussion——

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, then I move to strike out the last word.

The discussion of the gentleman from California is in reference to the preceding paragraph. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] moves to strike out the second paragraph, page 81, from lines 9 to 12, being for collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, demand, commercial movement, disposition, quality, and market prices of dairy and poultry products, $80,600.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman going to discuss my amendment? The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was clearly out of order.

Mr. CANDLER. I am in order, because I am opposed to your amendment and propose to discuss it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I thought. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was discussing a foreign matter.

Mr. CANDLER. That matter is passed and I do not yield to the gentleman further.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in support of his amendment to strike out this very important and valuable provision in this bill, read some resolutions and statements from some produce exchange or from some business men, as he said, in the city of Chicago or some other city. Of course, they would like to have this provision stricken out, for the reason that they are at the center of trade and at one of the central markets, and they get this information every morning, afternoon, and evening, no doubt, while the producer, who is away from the central market and has the produce to sell, would not have the information, and in the absence of the authority conferred by this provision, giving the Bureau of Markets an opportunity to furnish this information to them, would be absolutely in the dark and at the mercy of the very gentlemen who passed the resolutions read by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I am not surprised that they desire this provision stricken out. They would like to keep these good people that produce these products in the interior and rural districts without available information so that they might get their products for less than they are worth, in order to profiteer out of them and secure the benefits to be derived from operations of that kind. This provision answers a very useful purpose, and the money authorized to be appropriated, of $80,600, is well spent when it furnishes these people the information from the Government of the United States that keeps them advised to the full, not only of the price at the point of production but the value of the products at the point where they are sold to the consumer, thereby giving the consumer the benefit of this same information that the producer obtains, and thus cutting out these "middlemen" that are between the two and who have often reaped unfair benefits by keeping somebody in the dark as to the real situation. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania should be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 12, after the word "products," strike out the figures "$80,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,600."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, and I hope the gentleman will give me five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 10 minutes, 5 for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] and 5 for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. I may require three minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask, then, Mr. Chairman, for 14 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has already been agreed upon at 10 minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say one word in reference to this item, cumulative of what I have said in reference to the two preceding items, and piling Ossa on Pelion in a desire to get justice for the western sections of the country. I want to call attention to the fact that the amount specified in the amendment which I have offered is that which is asked by the Department of Agriculture for this purpose.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken there. This particular item covers the estimate made by the department.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to the gentleman that my information is that two weeks ago an additional recommendation was made by the Department of Agriculture owing to the fact that the increased rates of telegraph tolls, and so forth, would make it impossible to carry on the service within the item as previously recommended; that is, $80,600. The amount now recommended by the department is $100,600. I wish to say that while this is an increase in that item as specified in the bill, made necessary by the increase in telegraph rates, it is a very substantial and material reduction in the amount which has been available for this purpose during the year 1919, and the same arguments obtain in reference to this item in justice to the Southwest and to the Pacific coast which could be urged in reference to the two preceding items.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, there was to be 10 minutes' debate on this by agreement of the House, of which 5 minutes was to be used by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL].

The CHAIRMAN. He was to offer an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. He was to have 5 minutes' time. He should have it. You can not vote on an amendment and then go ahead under the agreement of the House for another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] offered an amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] does not propose to offer an amendment to that amendment. He proposes to offer a separate amendment. The Chair believes that the proper way to do this thing is first to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. The Chair submitted that vote to the House. Then the Chair proposes to recognize the gentleman from Illinois for his amendment, upon which he would have five minutes for debate. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] has the floor to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the amendment inserted after line 12, on page 81.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JUUL: Line 12, page 81, insert the following:

"It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to publish monthly in the press of the 12 leading cities of the country what, in his opinion and according to the information gathered by virtue of the powers vested in him by this act, what should be the retail prices at which leading foodstuffs should be sold.

"He shall also publish at what price such foodstuffs are sold and the excess of such prices over fair cash market prices shall be noted in such advertisement."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman and gentleman, one of the gentlemen on the other side stated a few moments ago that the subject matter of this discussion is not political, and I agree with him that it is not political. We will absolutely secure nothing through the passage of the sections under the heading "Bureau of Markets"—I am speaking now of the consumers of the country—until we have publicity. All that my amendment provides for is that the Secretary of Agriculture shall publish in the newspapers of the 12 leading cities of the country what the prices of the leading foodstuffs are at the time. He has the information gathered by virtue of this act. Then he publishes what the retail prices should be in his advertisement, and then he notes the excess over what the full fair cash value of the leading foodstuffs is as sold.

I think you gentlemen can well afford to let this amendment go in, and I trust that no gentleman who wants to play fair with the consumers of this country will offer any objections or points of order to it. Let it go in, and let us learn from month to month what foodstuffs cost, what farmers get for their meat and hogs. Let us learn in the cities what bacon is sold for, and let the Secretary of Agriculture state in the press of the country what the excess charged over fair cash market value is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do we not get tons and tons of that kind of information now?

Mr. JUUL. No. There is not a publication coming from any official source that notes what the profiteers are doing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We know in the cities, where we have to pay the highest prices for everything, that no matter where we go the prices are substantially the same. If we go outside 10 miles and try to buy direct from the farmer, the farmer knows what the city dealers are getting, and he charges exactly the same price. How will we remedy that situation? I want the farmer to get the highest price, but I want to get some relief for the consumer.

Mr. JUUL. It is not difficult to find out what a basket of fruit costs in Florida and in Michigan. It is not difficult to find out what the consumer in Chicago or San Francisco or New York pays for it. If the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to publish what is the excess over a fair cash profit the consumer will know to what extent he is being robbed and who is robbing him. Does the gentleman know that the other night in the city of Washington I paid $2.85 for three little dishes of ice cream? I was robbed in that way within a stone's throw of the White House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was undoubtedly robbed. But would any further publication remedy a situation like that?

Mr. JUUL. Yes; publication would catch the kind of man that runs that kind of an institution. Now, some of the men that are handling foodstuffs and dealing with the people direct are getting so bold that they do not even take the trouble that an ordinary highway robber would use. When the highwayman wants to rob you of your watch and chain he takes a piece of lead pipe or a club or something with which he stuns you for the time being. These people rob you while you have your eyes open. If publicity could be had by which the people would know how much they were robbed, the situation would largely be remedied. If I were to publish the fact that a hotel in the city of Washington had charged a soldier, his wife, and myself $2.85 for three plates of ice cream the further conduct of that hotel along such lines would be impossible. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Does the gentleman from Minnesota make a point of order?

Mr. ANDERSON. I regret to have to make the point of order. The amendment is clearly not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, and market prices of grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, $50,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be held until the disposition of the point of order. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point of order is that this is new legislation upon an appropriation bill and that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. LEVER. Which is the paragraph in question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Line 13, page 81.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph is clearly in order. I think several occupants of the chair have so held on several items. The organic act requires the Department of Agriculture to "procure and preserve all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence and by practical and scientific experiments, accurate records of which experiments shall be kept in his office, by the collection of statistics, and by other appropriate means within his power." Then it goes on with further provisions. And then it goes on and says he shall collect dues, fees, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The organic law says:

The Commissioner of Agriculture shall procure and preserve all information concerning agriculture he can obtain by means of both correspondence and by any other appropriate means within his power.

That is exactly what this paragraph seeks to do, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 81, line 16, after the figures "$50,000," insert "for furnishing to producers, newspapers, and consumers accurate information regarding supplies of fruits, vegetables, dairy and poultry products, meats, fish, and other food products received on farmers', municipal, and other city markets, and prices for which such products are sold; and information regarding such products when in abundance or oversupply, and other related matters, $42,880."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that this amendment follows the exact wording of the estimate made by the Secretary of Agriculture for this purpose. This item was carried in one of the Agricultural appropriation bills, and the benefits of it to the consuming public in our large cities, as well as to the market gardeners, who are the only farmers and the agriculturists in the vicinity of our large cities, was very apparent. It was so apparent, Mr. Chairman, that this spring when the committee left this paragraph out of the bill a delegation of the market gardeners and small farmers came here to Washington from Boston and some of the other cities to plead with Congress to retain this paragraph in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Now, there is nobody more interested in cutting down the expenses of the Government than I. I am opposed to any unnecessary expenditure of public money, but if there is one thing in which the people of this country are vitally concerned at the present moment it is the high cost of living. Every Member of this House ought to recognize that fact.

This amendment which I have offered, and which follows the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, is in the interest of the small farmer and the consumer. A good deal has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] in regard to private agencies furnishing this information, and that therefore the taxpayers should not be burdened with the expense. Who are these private agencies? They are apt to be run in the interest of the unscrupulous dealer who robs the farmer on the one hand and robs the consumer on the other. That is the whole story. It is about time that we woke up to the fact that when we have a Bureau of Markets instituted for the very purpose of protecting the small producer and the consumer, particularly in the large cities, we ought to support the bureau and give it the appropriation necessary to accomplish the purpose. And then if the bureau does not accomplish the purpose because of inefficiency or incompetency or mismanagement, it is up to us to investigate the matter and find out the remedy.

There is another object that will be accomplished by this appropriation. There is very often a glut in the supply of fruit and vegetables in the city markets, because the consumer, the housekeeper, does not know that there is a large supply in the market. I have been informed that in some instances this waste has been encouraged by some of the large dealers in order to keep the prices up. When this happens the farmer is frequently discouraged and does not market his fruit and vegetables. Now, if you could have this information given daily to the small farmer and market gardener, so that he would know where there was a market for his produce, and the consumer would know that there was a supply on hand at a reasonable price, you would bring the consumer and the producer together and prevent profiteering by the middlemen. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is local in character. The service, I think, when the item was in the bill, was extended to less than half a dozen cities. It would require thousands and millions of dollars to extend it throughout the country. It is a function that belongs to the States and municipalities to take care of. The work is no doubt a valuable work, but I doubt if Congress can afford to enter into an elaborate scheme like this suggested, which will amount to the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars before we get through.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DALLINGER) there were 19 ayes and 39 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee which section of this bill carries the appropriation that authorizes the Director of the Bureau of Markets to have men travel in foreign countries for the purpose, as he says in his own testimony, of "studying the type of banking arrangements that must be made, all of the things that are absolutely necessary for one desiring to start business in foreign countries."

Mr. HAUGEN. To what section does the gentleman refer?

Mr. SNELL. I ask the gentleman what section of the bill carries the provision authorizing the director to go into such things as studying banking and kindred activities in foreign countries. There are four men there at the present time, according to his testimony.

Mr. HAUGEN. My recollection is that the committee did not report that provision.

Mr. SNELL. I know; but they are there doing it now, and that is one of the activities of this bureau that I am opposed to. I am willing to appropriate for everything that goes to getting legitimate statistics that will be useful to the country at large, but I think that this bureau is branching out into all kinds of activities that are not intended under the law, and I would like to know what provision of this bill or any other bill provides for that kind of thing.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no specific authority for it.

Mr. SNELL. Then, why does the director do such things?

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will permit me, if my recollection is correct, we eliminated from this bill the item which authorized the investigation into questions of rural credits and things of that kind.

Mr. SNELL. According to this testimony we have here, there are men abroad studying such things at the present time.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is true, I think, that four men are abroad studying the different questions.

Mr. SNELL. But they will be home by the 1st of July, will they, and not be appropriated for any further under this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have no knowledge of any specific authorization.

Mr. SNELL. Have they a right to go into such outside activities as that without any authorization from Congress? I think these are the activities of the department that should be looked into carefully and stopped at once, and it is such activities as this that I am opposing in this bill and not any work or investigations that will bring real aid or improvements to the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] a few moments ago made a statement which tends to reflect upon a great bureau and a high official of this Government which I think should be corrected. He stated in effect that Mr. John G. C. Kennedy is employed in the Internal Revenue Office at a salary of $4,800 and at the same time is employed by a private concern, the accounting firm of Pace & Pace, I believe he stated, at an additional salary. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas and to the gentlemen of the House that he is entirely incorrect in his statement. I do not know from what source the gentleman got his information. He stated that he had receive it from some clerk in the bureau; but I suggest to him that he has been imposed upon, and that hereafter before making any such statements he ought to do the officials of this Government the justice to go to the telephone and take one-half minute in order to ascertain the truth of the statement before he gives it publicity on the floor of the House. I have just come from the telephone, and I am informed that Mr. Kennedy is positively not connected with any private concern, and that when he became connected with the Government at the salary named by the gentleman from Texas he surrendered all of his private employments, and that he is now solely employed by the Government.

The gentleman from Texas further made some reference to an examination which is being held of 2,500 employees. I interrupted him at the time, thinking that he was referring to original employment, and I suggested to him that those examinations were held by the Civil Service Commission. Since the gentleman left the floor he has informed me that he was referring to a test which was being applied by the Internal Revenue Commissioner. In other words, the Internal Revenue Commissioner is now conducting what he calls a test of employees who are already upon the rolls—civil-service employees—for the purpose of determining those best qualified to fill the positions of auditor and accountant, and he is bringing those men here and conducting this test, not by this private accounting firm but by the bureau itself, in order to determine their capacity to fill these places and for the purpose of instructing them as to their duties. He is not playing politics, but he is collecting the revenues of this Government and endeavoring to put the very best men he can get into these positions and to render the best service possible, and I predict that when the facts have been established it will be found that the present Internal Revenue Commissioner has collected the revenues of this Government at a far less cost, comparatively, than they were ever before collected. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit to the gentleman the booklet that is issued by Pace & Pace, with this gentleman's name as one of the officers of administration—John G. C. Kennedy, LL. B.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When was that issued?

Mr. BLANTON. In 1918, and if this gentleman is not connected with this department he ought to require Pace & Pace to take his name off their literature.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, the statement of the gentleman himself shows that the booklet was issued in 1918, and I wish to say again to the gentleman, not being content to take the irresponsible statement made to him, that I went to the telephone and called up the Internal Revenue Commissioner, and he tells me that since Mr. Kennedy has been employed by the bureau he has had no connection with Pace & Pace or any private——

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman call up Pace & Pace?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not. I called up the Internal Revenue Bureau, where Mr. Kennedy is employed, and I am sure everyone is willing to accept the word of the commissioner as to the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not the gentleman call up Pace & Pace?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, none of the remarks I have made cast any reflection upon the Internal Revenue Department or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the commissioner being a splendid gentleman and my friend, and I have absolute confidence in him. He is not responsible for this condition that exists in our Nation's Capital to-day. You men on the Republican side and we men on the Democratic side are responsible for it, and we alone, and we are going to be responsible for it as long as we permit this pernicious practice to exist in our Capital—the fact that we let men stay here on the pay roll of this Government drawing $4,800 a year from one department, as I understand the case I mentioned in the Bureau of Mines, and at the same time drawing $3,500 from a private corporation. Why, they are not responsible for it; we Congressmen are responsible, and I called attention to the fact because I am going to ask in a few days, if I can get it before the Congress, for you to vote on this proposition to submit a proper questionnaire to every employee of this Government—every one of the 240,000 of them, if you please—requiring them to tell us who they are employed by, to tell us what they do with their time, tell us whether or not they are giving seven hours' good service to this Government and the outside salaries they receive; make them tell us who is getting the benefit of their brains for which we pay them, and to tell us who is getting the benefit of the total services they render.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if his information as to the Bureau of Mines is any better than that which he had in reference to the Internal Revenue Bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. All of it may be incorrect, I do not know, but it has been told to me on good authority that it is correct. If it is not correct the answers to the questionnaires I propose will develop that fact and ascertain it. If it is correct, we will know the facts, but we will not know it until those questions are answered by the 240,000 Government employees. The point I was trying to make was to get these 240,000 employees to answer the questions I have proposed to propound to them on behalf of this Congress that we may know when we reclassify the salaries what we are doing.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Did the gentleman ever call upon the Director of the Bureau of Mines and ask him whether the statement he has made in reference to the employee of that bureau is correct, or did he take the statement of some outside party?

Mr. BLANTON. I have ascertained the statement I made concerning the Bureau of Mines is correct.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I have no information in regard to that.

Mr. BLANTON. It is correct.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Did he get it from the Bureau of Mines, or from what source?

Mr. BLANTON. I got it from parties in whom I have perfect confidence and know they would not mislead or give me incorrect information.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman had made the same inquiry of the Internal Revenue Bureau——

Mr. BLANTON. I did not go to the telephone and telephone somebody who had nothing to do with Pace & Pace.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. BLACK. I wanted to suggest a correction in the gentleman's statement. I saw a few days ago that Mr. Herbert D. Brown, who is chairman of the Efficiency Commission, estimated that there are only 105,000 Government employees here in Washington.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will get the record that the chairman of the committee made before us when we had the matter of the bonuses up for clerks he will find that there were 240,000 clerks affected by the $120 bonus which Congress gave to the clerks.

Mr. BLACK. That is because a good many lived elsewhere.

Mr. BLANTON. They lived elsewhere, but there are 240,000 clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments close in seven minutes.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman a question.

Mr. HAUGEN. I make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. LANHAM. Reserving the right to object, I want permission to offer an amendment before the close of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be plenty of opportunity to offer an amendment. This is only to close debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to offer an amendment to perfect the text?

Mr. LANHAM. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will offer his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 16, after the word "seeds," strike out the figures "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$76,520."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, if that motion carries it will save $50,000 on this item, which is for collecting and distributing by telegraph, mail, and otherwise timely information on a variety of subjects. In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer briefly to what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] said a little while ago about the exchanges of one kind and another. They have a great many of them in Massachusetts, particularly in Boston. I was a little surprised to hear him say that they were not fair to the consumers.

I have noticed one thing, however, in my peregrinations around about where I live, that though the city people have to pay the highest possible price for the products of the farm, whether there is a loss between the farmer and consumer or not, nevertheless information seems to percolate out into the farm territory so rapidly that if anyone goes out from the city for 10 miles into the country and asks a farmer the price of potatoes or New Jersey watermelons—which, of course, are far superior to those the gentleman from South Carolina referred to a moment ago—the price is the same as that in the city. The producer seems to know intuitively how much the city dealer is charging, and fixes his price accordingly. And if you go to Atlantic City and take an automobile and run up the road a little ways, or come down from Long Branch, where the farmers have produce displayed on the road, and where you may expect to get your corn and potatoes a little cheaper because you take them direct from the producer, you will find the producer has had his ear to the ground and has found out exactly the price they are charging for them in Atlantic City or Philadelphia or New York, and he charges you the same price.

The farmer in my section is no fool. I have admired him and patted him on the back, and I have wondered how he gets the information without reading all the bulletins and market reports we provide for here.

Gentlemen, I have wondered if any of the distinguished gentlemen from the lower section of the State of California can tell me about the Pacific Dairy Review. Will some gentleman from California tell me if he knows about this paper?

It is published on the Pacific coast, concerning which we have heard to-day that there is great injustice on the part of Congress because we do not increase appropriations from a million and a half to four or five millions for the benefit of southern California. Will any one of these gentlemen from southern California tell me whether they have ever heard of the Pacific Dairy Review? If they do not, I will quote from it briefly. It states:

No person or interests are known to have demanded this service.

It speaks of the services of the Bureau of Markets, for which the gentlemen from southern California have been so eloquently pleading to-day.

This editorial goes on and intimates that if this bureau is continued, "the soap-box orators" will have won the day; that there is no need for this service; that it is waste and extravagance. We have heard to-day time and again that we are unjust to the people out there in southern California, because we do not take more money out of the Treasury and send it in their particular direction. But here is this paper taking the other view.

I look upon the benign countenance of my distinguished friend from California [Mr. RAKER] now. I observe that I might inspire him to speak if I should continue this. Does the gentleman from California know whether the statement in the Pacific Dairy Review is correct or not? Will he repudiate this paper from his own section? Will he say that the paper's statements are false, or will the gentleman from California, with his usual prescience and care, say that he will take the whole matter under consideration? Inasmuch as the gentleman from California does not take the opportunity to answer, I yield to him the balance of my time. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has expired. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES] has the floor.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I see the paragraph provides for the expenditure of $50,000 for the purpose of collecting and distributing, by telegraph and otherwise, information in regard to the supply of food products. I would like to inquire if there would be objections to amending this paragraph in such a way as to make it include minerals and mineral products?

Mr. HAUGEN. For the information of the gentleman, the department, in its estimates, proposes two lump-fund items to cover the work, one for $41,560, for collection and distribution of information as to grain, hay, and feed, and another one, $34,960, for seed. Now, the committee combined the two items and recommends $50,000 for that purpose. If we included minerals, as has been suggested, after having cut the appropriation about 33⅓ per cent, it would not leave much for the investigation and report on the items included in this paragraph. The investigation, and the matter referred to by the gentleman, would clearly be a function of the Bureau of Mines, and, in my opinion, should not be included here.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Bureau of Mines and Mining is conducting any inquiry——

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not answer.

Mr. RHODES (continuing). At this time with regard to acquiring information on the subject of minerals and mineral products?

Mr. HAUGEN. Undoubtedly it is. I could not state positively, but undoubtedly it must be conducting some investigations.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield to some gentleman time sufficient to answer this question, if he knows, as to whether the Bureau of Mines and Mining is collecting data in reference to the minerals of the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. The appropriations made for the Bureau of Mines and Mining come through another committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is but fair that the gentleman from Missouri should be advised that this Congress appropriated last year $50,000,000 for the Department of the Interior, to be utilized for the purpose of prospecting for mines and minerals throughout the United States. From my view it was a Democratic protective-tariff measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To make investigation relating to the transportation, storage, preparation, marketing, manufacture, and distribution of agricultural food products, including the extent, manner, and methods of any manipulation of the markets or control of the visible supply of such food products or any of them by any individuals, groups, associations, combinations, or corporations, $48,800.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, this item, which refers, among other things, to the storage of agricultural products, brings up a problem that we are going to be compelled to face in the very near future in regard to wheat.

In view of the fact that the Government has in its possession a large amount of meat products that are not going on the market, I raise the question as to what will be our disposition of this wheat product that the Government is under contract to take over at a price fixed by law, namely, $2.26? I understand that the present prospects of wheat, both of winter and summer, are that the yield will be the largest crop that we have ever had in the history of the Government. It is estimated to be beyond the billion bushel mark. That will represent a contract obligation that will go beyond $2,000,000,000 for this product alone. The contract is a moral as well as a legal one, and we will have to respect it. The Government will become the monopolistic buyer of this article, and what I am concerned about is, Will the products of wheat, as represented in the bakeries of the country, be sold in the market on the abnormal basis of the war-fixed price on a needed article which heretofore has recognized a rate of something like $26 per barrel for flour?

To be specific, the products of the bakeries have been sold at prices which would range to a figure of $26 per barrel of flour. That is abnormal, as everyone recognizes, and while nobody would hesitate a moment as to the Government's obligation to make good the price that is fixed by law for the wheat product, what is the Government going to do with it? Will the Government, in order to avoid losing upon wheat, undertake to stabilize the price and sell it for at least as much as it cost? And if it does it would appear to me to be abnormal and carrying the war-fixed price in time of peace, which is not the law of supply and demand.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman pretend that $2.26 will bring the price of flour up to $26 a barrel?

Mr. FESS. No. I contend that bakery products have been sold on the basis of $26 per barrel of flour.

Mr. HAUGEN. I know; but flour is selling for $13.50.

Mr. FESS. While that is true, I mean that the intermediary agencies are getting abnormal prices for the articles made out of the flour.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is being generally charged up to the farmer. The consumer is being robbed, and the robbery is charged up to the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. My suggestion is this, that in view of the fact that in war times there is an inevitable waste, which we must charge up to loss, it is the proper function of the Government, since it must take over the wheat, to put it on the market for what it will bring, and make up the difference by charging it off to war loss, and thus let the consumer, whether he be on the farm or in the city, get the products at such a price as would range under the law of supply and demand.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Government representatives to-day and in the past have been doing everything in their power to hammer down the price of wheat. They did not succeed, and, as the gentleman knows, wheat is selling not for $2.26 but for $2.95, and the gentleman knows that if it had not been for the congressional action the price of wheat would have gone to $3 or $4 per bushel.

Mr. FESS. The fact is that with the largest crop in prospect that the country has ever known, we ought not to see the prices range so high, which are so abnormal; and if the law of supply and demand will not regulate it, then it is the business of the Government, if it fixes the price, to fix it on the basis of the cost of production.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, speaking of the law of supply and demand, the law of supply and demand is operating in nearly everything that is produced in the United States except wheat.

The gentleman has referred to pork. The price of hogs was fixed at $14 per hundred pounds. When the ban was lifted it went to $19 and $20 a hundred. There is where the discrimination comes. The Government laid its heavy hand upon the producers of wheat and kept the price of wheat down to $2.26, and yet certain gentlemen in the East, as, for instance, the Steel Trust, increased their profits from $47,000,000 to $278,000,000, and four packers increased their profits $121,000,000 in excess of prewar profits.

There is discrimination, gentlemen. Why are we concerned about the price of wheat? Suppose the price of wheat should go below $2.20. It is now selling at a premium of more than 70 cents a bushel, and the consumer has to pay for it.

Suppose the Government does lose a few dollars; what of it? The consumers of this country and the consumers of the world get the benefit of it. Why are we concerned about a few pennies that we may lose in the transaction?

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. My concern is that a staple article like wheat, with a price fixed, will suggest the range of most prices of other things; it is a sort of barometer.

Mr. HAUGEN. It serves as a barometer, but takes the increased profit of one hundred and twenty million from the farmers which I have spoken of. He gets only one-half of what he was entitled to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph on page 81, lines 17 to 23, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, strike out the paragraph from lines 17 to 23, inclusive.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this item calls for an appropriation of $48,800. The report of the committee, on page 23, says, in explaining it in Committee of the Whole, that the word "production" has been omitted. That is the entire information furnished by the committee report. I referred to the hearings on this item before the Committee on Agriculture, and the result of my inquiry there has led me to make this motion.

The present chairman of the committee [Mr. HAUGEN] asked Mr. Brand, pages 639, 640, and 641, many interesting questions, and among other things Mr. HAUGEN said:

Mr. Brand, after all you have to confess that we are not getting very much information.

In other words, the present chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has been unable to secure information from the representative of the Department of Agriculture, who was a witness before the committee.

Further on Mr. Brand said, in reference to cars being moved:

You have got to have a sufficient number in order to arrive at accurate conclusions. You can not base your conclusion on two or a dozen or they will surely turn out wrong.

He was asked how much he had spent in getting this information, and his reply was that "this particular item calls for $48,000 or something in that neighborhood."

Immaterial, more or less, to the gentlemen representing the Department of Agriculture! Then Mr. HAUGEN said:

Then we can tell Congress and the country you have prescribed bookkeeping and you are investigating as to the number of the cars moving, and that is the extent of your work, is it?

Later on, on the same subject matter, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], a member of the committee, asked numerous illuminating questions that appear on pages 644 and 645. Mr. ANDERSON asked:

What, if anything, is being done under the language "including the extent, manner, and methods of any manipulation of the markets or control of the visible supply of such food products, or any of them"?

Mr. Brand replied:

In the arrangement that we made in order that there might be no duplication in this work, these phases of the work are handled by the Federal Trade Commission.

Anything that comes to light under the inquiry of Mr. ANDERSON is turned over to the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. ANDERSON's questions continue on for two or three pages, and I think they are extremely interesting, and one of his final statements is:

I do not wish to be understood as saying the work you are doing is not covered by the language in the appropriation, and I am simply saying I am personally disappointed in the work that is being done.

So the fact is that when these hearings were being had the members of the Committee on Agriculture themselves were not satisfied with the testimony presented and could not secure information from the representatives of the Department of Agriculture as they appeared before them. Then, why are we asked, as members of the Committee of the Whole, to agree to the appropriations asked for by the committee? I therefore hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, as stated by the gentleman, it requires a good deal of effort to get information at times from certain representatives of the bureau. But I think it indicates persistent effort and is rather a credit to the members of the committee for their industry. After all, we think that upon investigation the appropriations of the money have been well expended. It seems that there are thousands of people in this country who have forgotten to remit the amounts due to certain people in this country. This department has discovered a number of items and is now distributing several hundred thousand dollars to the rightful shippers of this country. They have simply been robbed. We are asking for this appropriation for the investigation, for the audit of the books, that the money may be paid over where it actually belongs. After all, these expenditures are not so bad, and I trust that this amendment will be defeated. The section is one of the most important, and you will have to line up either with the fellow who is robbing or with the fellow who is entitled to his pay.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I want to quote from a reliable newspaper, the Leader, printed at St. Paul, April 28, 1919, in which edition it says that in the Bureau of Markets appropriation there is included this item, and then it gives this very paragraph with the $48,800 appropriation and says that is wonderful work, that out of the $2,000,000 for the Bureau of Markets almost $50,000, or one-fortieth, is devoted to the investigation of the actual facts as to the markets in which the farmers and the consumers are robbed. According to this paper this is the most important paragraph in the whole bill, and I hope this will not be stricken out.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have an idea that there are people in South St. Paul to-day who would like to see this item struck from the bill.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, this item provides for an appropriation of $48,800 for investigation relating to transportation, storage, preparation, marketing, and so forth. This investigation has been made by the Federal Trade Commission on a memorandum from the Department of Agriculture, it is true. These facts which they have collected up to the present time have been confined to live stock and meats and the principal grains entering into food. The information has been obtained, but has not up to the present date been given to the people for the reason that they have not yet reached the stage where the information was available for distribution.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is that the reason that the representative of the Department of Agriculture failed to give the information to the committee when requested by Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. ANDERSON?

Mr. CANDLER. I do not know anything about why he failed to give the information, or whether he gave it in full or not. I am giving the gentleman some information with reference to it that is correct. As soon as this information can be fully obtained and is ready for distribution it will be given out. This provision as it appears in the bill was offered on the floor of the House by your previous distinguished leader, Mr. MANN, and was adopted upon his motion, and has been in the bill from that time until now. He believed it was very important, and if the results which it produced can ever be obtained I have no doubt they will prove a benefit to the people of the country. As the investigation has been undertaken and the facts have been obtained, certainly it would be advisable to let this provision continue until those facts can be furnished to the people for their benefit. I hope the amendment to strike out this provision will be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of the United States grain-standards act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States grain-standards act, including such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $598,600: Provided, That section 6 of the said act is hereby amended, effective on and after the passage of this act, by striking out of the last sentence the words "Made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the proviso.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve it for a minute.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to say to the gentleman that at the time of the passage of the grain-standards act, that act provided that in case of appeal a decision could not be rendered until after the parties had had an opportunity to be heard. I was opposed to the provision at the time the act was passed, because, knowing something about the actual operation of the grading of grains, I knew that that particular provision was absolutely unworkable because in the determination of an appeal upon the grade of grain the only question is one of quality; there is no question of argument which enters into it at all. It is a question for the inspector without argument, and the only effect of this provision is to require a notice to be given and an opportunity to be heard on the part of the parties, of which nobody ever avails himself. It requires a great deal of work, involves the department in a great deal of expense, and it is entirely proper and it comports not only with efficiency but with economy in the operation of the grain-standards act to eliminate this particular provision. For that reason I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Section 66 of the grain-standards act gives the right of appeal, and by eliminating that it would empower the authority on whom is imposed the duty of enforcing the act to make their decisions, to go ahead and impose the penalty without giving the parties on who the penalty may rest an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is no penalty involved at all. It is simply a question of what is the grade of a specific sample of grain.

Mr. WALSH. There is a penalty, is there not, for marketing a grain in violation of the grade fixed?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true; but that has no relation to this particular provision.

Mr. WALSH. This is the section that fixes the grades.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This gives authority to fix the grade without anybody having an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; the section which fixes the grade requires a notice be given and hearings to be had. This refers not to appeal taken either by the buyer or seller from the original inspection to the Secretary of Agriculture, but simply involves a question of the grade of the grain itself. That is all. This is not a question susceptible of argument at all.

Mr. WALSH. There is a right of appeal given?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the purpose of that appeal; is it not to produce further facts in support of it?

Mr. ANDERSON. You could not make the grade any different.

Mr. WALSH. Why is the right of appeal given; why do not you let the man who fixes the grade in the first instance enter the final decree or order fixing that standard? Now, if there is a right of appeal given, it seems to me it is for the Secretary or to whomever the appeal lies to further consider the matter and hear further facts in relation to the same.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; the facts are submitted in the first place, and the only thing that is submitted to the inspector is the samples of grain, upon which he determines the grade. When that test is taken that sample goes up to the appealing authority, whoever that is; it may be the supervisor or the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WALSH. And, of course, the original grade is fixed by the appellate authority?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And it is never reversed—the grade is never changed or the decision of the first inspector is never changed?

Mr. ANDERSON. Very frequently it is changed on appeal.

Mr. WALSH. I think we ought to have this safeguard in here.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Minnesota had the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON. If I have the floor, I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUBEY. I just wanted to add to what the gentleman from Minnesota has so well said and say this, that out of some 3,000 or 4,000 appeals made up to the time this bill was first reported not a single party has taken advantage of the provision of this act and asked for a hearing.

Mr. WALSH. I assume there is nothing to prevent——

Mr. RUBEY. No. Here is the point: When an appeal is taken it is necessary to notify these parties, and that takes up time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order on the paragraph or the proviso or both?

Mr. WALSH. I said I made the point of order to the proviso, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. The point of order is conceded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Administration of the United States warehouse act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States warehouse act, including the payment of such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $35,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following paragraph: "Completion of work of domestic wool section of War Industries Board: To enable the Bureau of Markets to complete the work of the domestic wool section of the War Industries Board and to enforce the Government regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918 as established by the wool division of said board, pursuant to the Executive order dated December 31, 1918, transferring such work to the Bureau of Markets, $35,000. The activities to be undertaken under this appropriation shall include the securing and auditing of accounts and records of all dealers; the further collection of excess profits, as provided in the regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918, and, so far as practicable, the distribution of such excess profits to the individual growers of the wool upon which such profits were made; necessary printing, and the publication of the results of this work, including the names and addresses of dealers who have complied or who have failed or refused to comply with the rules and regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, under regulations issued by the wool section, War Industries Board, approximately 3,600 country dealers were granted permits. The regulations limited the profits of the dealers and provided that all profits in excess of those prescribed were to be distributed to the growers. It is estimated that between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 of excess profits were secured from the 1918 wool transactions. This money must be located and collected from both classes of dealers, which they propose to distribute to the growers of wool from whom the profits resulted. Its work is taken over from the War Industries Board. There is something like $2,000,000 belonging to the wool growers. It is proposed to check up the books that the $2,000,000 may be allocated and restored to its rightful owners.

I trust the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the performance of the duties required of the Bureau of Markets in the administration or enforcement of provisions of acts (U. S. cotton-futures act, 39 Stat. L., 476; U. S. grain-standards act, 39 Stat. L., 482; U. S. warehouse act, 39 Stat. L., 486; standard container act, 39 Stat. L., 673; and the acts making annual appropriations for the Department of Agriculture) relating to the Department of Agriculture, the Secretary of Agriculture, or any representative authorized by him for the purpose, shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and call for the production of books and papers, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order on the paragraph. It is new legislation. There is no authority for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of April 26, 1910, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded Paris greens, lead arsenates, and other insecticides, and also fungicides, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," $94,790.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 86, line 12, strike out the word "and" at the beginning of the line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of August 20, 1912, as amended, entitled "An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes," $47,700.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 87, line 11, after the figures "$47,700," insert:

"Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be available for enforcement of quarantine regulation No. 37 or rules and regulations thereunder as promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. ANDERSON. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves a point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, quarantine regulation No. 37 is an embargo that has been issued by the Secretary of Agriculture preventing the importation into this country of a large variety of plants, shrubs, and bulbs which are very generally used throughout the country on large estates and for general horticultural purposes. The regulations seem to be extremely severe, and, as I stated a few days ago on the floor, numerous constituents of mine have protested very strongly against the enforcement of this embargo. It is detrimental to a large number of my constituents, and I am informed on the most practical and the very best of authority that it is absolutely unnecessary. There can be regulations made and methods carried out for preventing the spread of the various diseases referred to without absolutely prohibiting the importation of this kind of nursery stock. On the testimony that has been submitted to me it does not seem to me that the embargo is necessary; and, further than that, I am credibly informed that this board which has established these regulations does not contain a practical horticulturist. It seems that the horticultural interests of the country should be represented on such a board if authority is to be given to them to establish a regulation which will absolutely put a very large number of people out of business and seriously inconvenience many persons desirous of purchasing the importations. It is in order to protect such interests as those to which I refer that I have offered the amendment, to see if it is not possible to obtain some concession from the Department of Agriculture before a positive embargo is established against this large industry, so as to permit the introduction of plants, bulbs, and so forth, to which it refers, and not give the positive authority to prevent their importation. I am told that for some reason or other the Horticultural Board has taken serious offense at one large importer, and that, to a certain extent, this embargo is aimed at that one importer.

Whether or not that is true, I am not at all sure, but I trust it is not true, in that it hardly seems that the large nursery industries of our country ought to suffer if there is some disagreement between the Horticultural Board and this one particular person. If this embargo is aimed at this particular person, there is all the more reason for the adoption of my amendment, in order that an effort may be made to see if we can not reach an equitable understanding whereby the plants and shrubs and bulbs can be properly fumigated, so as to allow a continuation of this very important industry and the importations to which the embargo refers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist on the point of order?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is subject to a point of order. While it is in the form of a limitation its purposes and its actual result would be to repeal a rule of the Federal Horticultural Board which has the effect of law. It is not a limitation of appropriation, in a sense, in refusing to appropriate money for a certain purpose. Its purpose and effect is to actually repeal a rule that has the effect of law. Therefore it is a change of existing law and effectuates that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order, because under the act of August 20, 1912, the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Horticultural Board, has issued some 40 quarantine orders.

Now, quarantine order No. 37 is confined particularly to what is known as nursery stock. It does not interfere with the expenditure of this money in enforcing the provisions of this act under the various quarantine orders that have been issued, but it simply limits the expenditure of this money, as Congress certainly has the right to do in passing an appropriation, and to say that of the sum appropriated it shall not be used for the enforcement of a certain order which has been issued under the law authorizing the expenditure. If we should have said that no portion of this money would be available for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of August 20, 1912, it clearly would have been subject to a point of order. But that is not the purport of the amendment. It is restricted to a certain order issued under that act, and the money is applicable to enforce all the other orders that the Secretary has promulgated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair believes this is clearly a limitation on the enforcement of part of the quarantine regulations and that the exercise of the power granted by the limitation would result in the reduction of the appropriation, and therefore this amendment would be in order under the Holman rule. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to simply direct the attention of the committee to the importance of this order, which, as my colleague has said, is most drastic and which it is seriously contended not only by nurserymen who are selling stock but by men who are purchasing it throughout the country—farmers, if you please, and gentlemen of means who desire to purchase trees and ornamental shrubs—is entirely different in its import and in its phraseology from any of the other quarantine orders which have been issued.

Mr. RAKER. Will the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I will be glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Has my friend looked over the hearings of some four years ago, taken on this matter before the Committee on Agriculture and a special committee down at the Agricultural Department——

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER (continuing). When this law was enacted, showing that all of this imported nursery stock was infected? And on this bill now we are spending almost $600,000 to stop the spread of the very disease that has been brought over here by this nursery stock.

Mr. WALSH. I looked over the hearings, and there is no such statement in the hearings, and the Federal Horticultural Board itself has only pointed out four instances in the last four years where stock has been brought into this country where they can prove that disease or pests have been found in the bundles when they have been inspected by the authorities. They have pointed out two instances within the last two years.

Now, I appreciate the interest of the gentleman from California, because there are two large firms in that section, one of which has recently gone into bankruptcy, which have been most urgent in seeking to prohibit the importation of stock into this country. Why, gentlemen, during the year 1918 there were 3,455,000 fruit trees imported from England, France, and Holland. There were 989,000 roses; there were 917,000 forest and ornamental deciduous trees from the same countries; there were 1,190,836 ornamental shrubs.

Now, out of all that vast number there have been, according to the hearings and according to the contentions made, which I understand are not shared by Mr. Marlatt, one of the members of the Federal Horticultural Board, but four instances where beyond a doubt they can prove that pests or diseases have been brought in. Furthermore, they permit rose stock on the wild or natural root to come into this country, and it is not within the terms of the quarantine order; but if that rose root should have been budded with a rose variety upon the stock, it is prohibited.

As I say, the terms of this order are entirely different from those of any other quarantine order issued, and the term of the quarantine is to go into effect very soon, if it has not already done so. It will have a very serious effect upon those who desire to beautify their homes or their estates, and it is not detrimental alone to the nurseryman or the dealer, because, as gentlemen well know, people of means import directly from foreign countries, and when this war is over there will be thousands and thousands of our citizens who will be visiting foreign countries and traveling through the war-swept regions, and on their way home they will visit some of those countries where they can procure some of this nursery stock.

Unless this is done, our own people here, by reason of not having been able to import stock during the last three or four years on account of war conditions, will find the market here depleted; and I submit, in all fairness and candor to the gentlemen of the committee, that this is in the interest of horticulture in this country, because the stock that is brought in, whether the quarantine order is enforced or not, will still be subject to the quarantine regulations of the several States, and, if it is found to be diseased, it can be condemned under the other provisions of the law.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragaraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the last statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], it seems to me, makes it necessary that there shall be a very strict enforcement of the plant-quarantine act. That statement was to the effect that many people are visiting Europe now and will be coming back, and that they will desire to bring with them ornamental shrubs, roses, and things of that kind. If that is true the plant-quarantine act ought to be tightened up just as much as possible, because I doubt if gentlemen in this House realize the tremendous importance to the country of this act of Congress.

I was informed by the secretary of the American Plant Pest Committee, which consists, I think, as I was told, of four horticulturists in each State, including either their secretary or commissioner of agriculture—I was informed by this gentleman the other day that the people of the country are losing now the enormous sum of $1,500,000 per day because of pests imported into this country. Now, multiply that by 365, and it will give you some slight idea of the importance of keeping a very close watch upon everything that is imported.

I also asked this gentleman, whose name is Harris A. Reynolds, No. 4 Joy Street, Boston, Mass., about Regulation No. 37 the pointed question whether or not he thought it was in the interest of the country. I told him that I desired to quote his statement on the floor of the House, and he made the very emphatic reply that it was absolutely necessary, he thought, in the interest of the country, and he felt that the regulation as to the importation of these prohibitive things should stand.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think I quite catch the point of the gentleman's remarks, that it would be even more dangerous to import such things from Europe now than heretofore.

Mr. LEVER. No. I said there was likelihood that many more visitors in Europe would come back with these things than before the war, and that therefore the danger would be greater.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not possible—and the testimony I have had is to the effect that it is possible—to prevent the importation of the disease without establishing a positive embargo against the importation of the stock?

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact, in this bill we are carrying a proposition that provides for what you might call a plant-quarantine hospital in the District of Columbia, where these imported stocks may be taken and tried out, to see whether or not they are diseased. But we ought not to let down the bars here and open up this country to a flood of plant pests.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that four years ago, when the committee held hearings, Dr. Marlatt and, I think, Dr. Howard appeared before the committee and it was shown by them and others that the foreign people were not cleaning up their stocks, that they were infected with these diseases, and we had to take some drastic measures to save our own country or we would have been thoroughly infected and could not have stopped the ravages of these plant diseases?

Mr. LEVER. That was the testimony on which this Federal plant-quarantine act was based.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 15, noes 53.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the potato wart in eastern Pennsylvania, and to provide means for the extermination of this disease in Pennsylvania or elsewhere in the United States in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rent outside the District of Columbia, employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $50,000, which shall be immediately available.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "which shall be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if it is his intention to try to finish this bill before we adjourn?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, indeed. I think we can get along very nicely now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he thinks it will be practicable to finish the bill within a reasonable time?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we can finish it within a short time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are 12 pages yet.

Mr. HAUGEN. There are 12 pages, but I think we have gotten over the rough places.

Mr. WINGO. Why not take a recess and then come back to-night?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. HAUGEN. We have been considering this bill for four days, and I think we ought to go right on and finish it.

Mr. WINGO. With the progress you are making you can not finish to-night, and if you go on much longer you will have to have a quorum here.

Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike out the last word, just for the purpose of asking the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] whether he is going to sit idly by and let the gentleman from Massachusetts knock out this $50,000 appropriation, which proposes to exterminate the potato wart in eastern Pennsylvania?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would say to my energetic friend from Texas that I have no knowledge of the importance of this paragraph, and am unable to inform him whether it ought to stay in the bill or go out. I will tell him, however, that we raise a great many potatoes in eastern Pennsylvania. Sometimes these Government investigations are a good thing and sometimes they are not. If the potato wart exists there, I am frank to say I have not heard of it. Sometimes the department gets onto these things quicker than Members of Congress do. There may be some other Members from eastern Pennsylvania who know about it. It is entirely up to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That in order further to control and eradicate and to prevent the dissemination of dangerous plant diseases and insect infections and infestations no plant or plant products for or capable of propagation, including nursery stock, hereinafter referred to as plants and plant products, shall be moved or allowed to be moved, shipped, transported or carried by any means whatever into or out of the District of Columbia except in compliance with such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture as hereinafter provided. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture, after investigation, shall determine that any plants and plant products in the District of Columbia are infested or infected with insect pests and diseases and that any place, articles, and substances used or connected therewith are so infested or infected written notice thereof shall be given by him to the owner or person in possession or control thereof, and such owner or person shall forthwith control or eradicate and prevent the dissemination of such insect pest or disease and shall remove, cut, or destroy such infested and infected plants, plant products, and articles and substances used or connected therewith, which are hereby declared to be nuisances, within the time and in the manner required in said notice or by the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture. Whenever such owner or person can not be found, or shall fail, neglect, or refuse to comply with the foregoing provisions of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to control and eradicate, and prevent dissemination of such insect pest or disease and to remove, cut, or destroy infested or infected plants and plant products and articles and substances used or connected therewith, and the United States shall have an action of debt against such owner or persons for expenses incurred by the Secretary of Agriculture in that behalf. Employees of the Federal Horticultural Board are hereby authorized and required to inspect places, plants, and plant products and articles and substances used or connected therewith whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that such inspections are necessary for the purposes of this section. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions and requirements of this section and of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture made hereunder, and the notices given pursuant thereto, employees of the Federal Horticulture Board shall have power with a warrant to enter into or upon any place and open any bundle, package, or other container of plants or plant products whenever they shall have cause to believe that infections or infestations of plant pests and diseases exist therein or thereon, and when such infections or infestations are found to exist, after notice by the Secretary of Agriculture to the owner or person in possession or control thereof and an opportunity by said owner or person to be heard, to destroy the infected or infested plants or plant products contained therein. The police court or municipal court of the District of Columbia shall have power, upon information supported by oath or affirmation showing probable cause for believing that there exists in any place, bundle, package, or other container in the District of Columbia any plant or plant product which is infected or infested with plant pests or disease, to issue warrants for the search for and seizure of all such plants and plant products. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is hereby required, from time to time, to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section, and any person who shall move or allow to be moved, or shall ship, transport, or carry, by any means whatever, any plant or plant products from or into the District of Columbia except in compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed under this section, shall be punished as is provided in section 10 of this act.

Mr. WALSH. I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 91, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"Section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States,' approved March 19, 1918, is hereby repealed, effective at 2 o'clock antemeridian of the second Sunday after the approval of this act, when by the retarding of one hour the standard time of each zone shall be returned to, and thereafter be, the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone as defined in section 1 of said act approved March 19, 1918."

Mr. DYER. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. PELL. I make the point of order on this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anyone want to be heard on the point of order? [After a pause.] The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. May I inquire of the gentleman from Wyoming—I am doing this for the benefit of some of my associates—whether it is his intention to force a quorum to be present, and remain for a vote, if a roll call shall be demanded on this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is that it is the purpose of the gentleman in charge of the bill to conclude consideration of the bill in the committee this evening.

Mr. LEVER. And there will not be a roll call to-night?

Mr. MONDELL. Not unless a roll call is necessary in order to secure a quorum. I do not understand that the gentleman from Iowa intends to ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. I suggest that we finish the reading of the bill this evening and report it back to the House.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And there will be no effort to pass the bill to-night?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; not as far as I am concerned.

The Clerk read as follows:

To prevent the movement of cotton and cotton seed from Mexico into the United States, including the regulation of the entry into the United States of railway cars and other vehicles, and freight, express, baggage, or other materials from Mexico, and the inspection, cleaning, and disinfection thereof, $148,500, which shall be immediately available; any moneys received in payment of charges fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture on account of such cleaning and disinfection at plants constructed therefor out of any appropriation made on account of the pink bollworm of cotton to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion and under such conditions as he may prescribe, supply to any municipality or public institution not more than one American bison from any surplus which may exist in any herd under the control of the Department of Agriculture; and, in order to aid in the propagation of the species, animals may be loaned to or exchanged with other owners of American bison.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, after line 23, insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary to make suitable agricultural exhibits at State, interstate, and international fairs held within the United States, including the National Dairy Show to be held at Chicago, Ill., during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, $100,000: Provided, That not more than $25,000 shall be used in connection with the National Dairy Show to be held at Chicago, Ill., and that not more than $5,000 shall be used in connection with any other one fair."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the expenses of travel can be reduced thereby, he may, in lieu of actual traveling expenses, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize the payment of not to exceed 2½ cents per mile for a motorcycle or 7 cents per mile for an automobile, used for necessary travel on official business.

Mr. WALSH. I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 97, at the top of the page insert:

"Whenever, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the expenses of travel can be reduced thereby, he may, in lieu of actual traveling expenses, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize the payment of not to exceed 2 cents per mile for a motorcycle or 6 cents per mile for an automobile, used for necessary travel on official business."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter in carrying on the activities of the Department of Agriculture involving cooperation with State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers, individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, or other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State, Territory, District, or insular possession in which such activities are to be carried on, moneys contributed from such outside sources, except in the case of the authorized activities of the Forest Service, shall be paid only through the Secretary of Agriculture or through State, county, or municipal agencies, or local farm bureaus or like organizations, cooperating for the purpose with the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter from the dean of the State Teachers' College in Colorado, of May 30, and other educators of that State, referring to cooperation of the departments of the Government and certain bureaus in Denver, particularly the Women's Division of the Bureau of the United States Department of Labor. This letter is signed also by Hon. Roady Kenehan, director of the Department of Labor at Denver. It was not received until the provisions for maintenance of that office were stricken out of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill on a point of order. When that happened, the patriotic women of Denver raised the funds to pay office expenses through this month. This letter gives a very interesting review of the work of that office, and I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD by printing it. The Women's Division of the Department of Labor has rendered a very patriotic service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has generally taken care of these things of inserting letters and newspaper stories and matters of that kind in the RECORD. I think it is an extremely bad practice. I do not like to object, as my friend is a new Member of Congress.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that this contains matter of very great interest to the House in regard to the placing of agricultural laborers, and in respect to matters of interest to agriculture and education all over the country.

Mr. LEVER. Well, nobody will ever read the letter; but I have no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE,
WOMEN'S DIVISION FOR COLORADO,
Denver, Colo., May 14, 1919.

Congressman WILLIAM VAILE,
House of Representatives Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Is the United States Employment Service to live or is the United States to lose the best institution resulting from the war?

Feeling that this issue is so vital, we want you to know the importance of our work and what we have accomplished.

First as to what we have done. The Women's Division for Colorado was started September 1, 1918. In the eight months of our existence we know we have accomplished certain definite results.

(1) We have given immediate aid to hundreds of women who did not know where to look for work. Perhaps you do not realize how helpless a woman thrown upon her own resources for the first time can be, nor the danger that attends her seeking for work, especially if she is a stranger in the city. A man can walk into any building in any part of the city and ask for work without being insulted. This is impossible for a woman, who must be assured of getting work with the right kind of persons and in the decent parts of the city, if she is to have a good chance in the business world. If she gets into the wrong place of business her next placement will be doubly difficult.

(2) Not only do we aid women new to Denver in getting positions, but we help them in various other ways. Women from other States do not hesitate to come to Colorado when they learn that there is a United States Employment Service here. Two girls from Iowa came into the office not long ago, saying that they were not a bit afraid to come to Denver, because they learned in their State that there was a Women's Division here and they knew they would receive good care. Both of those girls were told where to go for rooms and both have been placed in suitable positions. This has happened a number of times. Sometimes we find that girls have been told by persons on the train to go to the wrong kind of boarding places. We always call up good houses and see that these girls get rooms there. We try to make the women feel that this is their service and that they can come to us for any kind of advice.

(3) As to our actual accomplishment in placement, the appended report will give you an idea of the size of the work. It does not tell you anything concerning the scope. We have women registered with us for all kinds of work, from embalming to bee culture; from the scrub woman to the best paid matron's position. Some of the most interesting lines are: Advertising; assistant buyer; bacteriology; bee culture; cafeteria and lunch-room manager; chemistry; civil engineering; costume designing; dramatic coach; demonstration; dietetics; doctor's assistant; farm management; farm work; governess; institutional work; interior decorating; interpreting; journalism; laboratory; library; music; pastor's assistant; pharmacy; prison reform; public speaking; railroad; research; Red Cross and other war work; salesmanship; social service; stock ranch; story telling; summer work of many kinds; teaching, all kinds; translating; tutoring. Besides the ordinary positions, such as domestic service, factory, clerical, stenographic, bookkeeping, etc., we have placed women in unusual lines, some of these being: Nurse at a large State institution for girls; girls for work in France; managing housekeeper in private family with entire charge of children; secretaries, both for firms and individuals; Government workers of various kinds; superintendent large children's home in Utah; assistant secretary, Y. W. C. A.; matrons various girls' schools; nurses on staff Visiting Nurse Association; nurses to take charge of community nursing; organizers for civilian relief of the American Red Cross; teachers; statisticians for private firms and for Government surveys; chemists; office managers.

Not only do we fill Colorado needs, but we have received calls from States ranging from Massachusetts to California, and from Texas to Minnesota.

(4) We have allied ourselves with every patriotic, National, State, or city movement, furnishing both paid and volunteer helpers.

(5) We are becoming a storehouse of information concerning women's activities in Colorado. Letters from East, West, North, and South recognizing this are coming to the office asking for this or that information pertaining to women's work. Women's organizations of the city and individual women come to us with all kinds of questions. Thus we are gathering statistics that some day will be valuable to the Government.

(6) Our teachers' department is well organized, with a former dean of women of one of our universities in charge. For the first time, all the colleges and normal schools of the State are united and are cooperating with us, one member from each school having been appointed as part of our teachers' department by the United States Labor Department, Washington, salary $1 per year. This is the first time in the history of the United States that all State and sectarian schools have united in this great work. We have sent 6,000 circular letters to county superintendents and school boards, and are daily receiving many calls for teachers in rural, grade, private, and high schools, with salaries ranging from $70 to $200 per month. We are also in communication with teachers' departments in other States with whom we exchange lists of unfilled positions. Thus we are in a position to help the teaching situation all over the United States.

(7) The work of such a bureau does not consist alone in filling positions. Perhaps the most useful thing we did in war time was in helping women find themselves. Hundreds of women feeling the restlessness pervading all things, at that time, or compelled to work for the first time, came into the office asking what there was to be done and what could they do. It is no easy task to find out what a woman with no experience and no business training is best fitted for; but many hours were spent in doing this very thing. Wherever possible, training for special lines of work was advised and the woman was placed where she could obtain this. If wages must be made immediately she was placed where she could learn a useful trade and at the same time make expenses. College and high-school girls come to the office for the same kind of advice, always with the question, "What am I best fitted for?" So a great deal of vocational guidance is given and must be given in any placement work dealing with women.

The above gives you an idea of the importance of such work as ours. This class of work was not done under United States plan with the Immigration Board, and is not being done now in the State labor offices. No State office can have the scope that a Government office has, as the former necessarily limits itself by the boundaries of its State, while a United States office is national in scope. Only a very few agencies charging high fees are attempting this kind of work now being done by the United States Employment Service free of charge. Do we want to force women who need work to pay for the opportunity for service? Then, too, girls come to our office who refuse to go to the usual agencies, because they feel a greater confidence in anything the Government establishes.

It would be a detriment to business and to labor to permit the employment work so well organized over the country to be disbanded. Thousands of dollars have been spent in starting these offices, but it will take much more to reorganize them later if we do away with them now. And sooner or later we will have Government employment offices, the same as other countries—England, France, Scotland, Italy—have to-day.

It is our desire that you vote for and use your influence in creating and maintaining the United States Employment Service.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be directed to correct the details.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been done.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to different places in the bill for the purpose of offering various amendments to correct typographical errors, to strike out commas, and things of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk reported the following amendments, which were severally read and severally agreed to:

Page 27, line 25, change the word "amounts" to "amount."
Page 30, line 2, after the word "paper," insert a comma.
Page 32, line 9, at the end of the line fill in the type dropped, completing the word "purchase."
Page 51, line 23, after the word "electric," strike out the comma.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 71——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not concluded the reading of the other amendments.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, this matter has been opened up. I have been waiting for this. The section has been opened up and an amendment has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for the purpose of offering such an amendment. The committee did not return to these pages for the purpose of general amendments.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman to return and open up the bill. This subdivision is opened up, and it was not stated for these particular amendments. An amendment has been offered to this subdivision and has been agreed to by the committee, and there was no limitation upon the opening up.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] very clearly stated that his request was to return to various pages for the correction of certain typographical errors. He made that statement very clearly and very distinctly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from California upon the grounds stated by the gentleman from Wyoming. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk read the following amendments, which were severally read and severally agreed to:

Page 59, line 12, omit the comma at the end of the line.
Page 60, line 12, omit the comma after the word "entitled."
Page 76, line 16, at the end of the line complete the word by adding the letter "f."

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will go back to page 27, line 21, which we passed over temporarily. A point of order was pending against the paragraph, beginning line 21, on page 27, and ending with line 13, page 28. Unless the point of order is withdrawn, the Chair will sustain the point of order. The point of order is sustained. Now, on page 50 we have another point of order pending which we agreed to pass over temporarily for the purpose of giving gentlemen on the floor an opportunity to decide whether they wished to press the point of order or whether they could find authority to sustain the contention against the point of order. I believe the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] made the request.

Mr. LEVER. I made the request that we pass it over temporarily on the theory that I recalled authority to overrule the point of order, and I have investigated the matter and I confess I have not been able to put my hands on that authority, and, as far as I can judge the matter, if I were chairman of the committee I would sustain the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman wishes to be heard on the point of order, the Chair has already made up his mind, from looking up the authorities to substitute the point of order, and the point of order is sustained. That finishes the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with amendments, to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3157, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to demand a separate vote on several amendments, but it is understood we are not to take a vote to-night.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the business of Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-morrow.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman wait until to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from California there is only one matter of legislation on the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Let it go over until to-morrow morning. Last year we were deprived of legislation by agreeing to dispense with Calendar Wednesday one Wednesday after another, and I just think the gentleman ought to wait until to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. There is only one bill on the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

Mr. DYER. What is that bill?

The SPEAKER. It is the commission to provide for water facilities for the city of Washington. Is there objection that Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with?

Mr. DYER. I suggest that the gentleman withdraw his request until to-morrow morning, so we may know about the bill on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri object?

Mr. DYER. I will if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we all appreciate we should go on with the business of the appropriation bills and transact business in a business way. We will have a number of Wednesdays before we get through, and there is nothing on the calendar but one bill, and I see no reason——

Mr. DYER. There is a bill on the calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the practice has been here ever since Calendar Wednesday rule was established that if the previous question was ordered, then the matter came up the next day.

Mr. HAUGEN. This is not for the purpose of expediting the passage of this bill but to expedite the passage of other appropriation bills that should be passed by the 1st of July.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have got nothing to do with that. I was just trying to straighten out the other matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression this bill comes up Thursday instead of Wednesday.

Mr. MADDEN. It comes up unless the previous question is ordered, but it has been invariably ruled by the Speaker of the House since Calendar Wednesday was established that whenever the previous question would operate upon a bill, even though it was the night before Calendar Wednesday, it would be in order the first thing the next morning.

Mr. LEVER. Automatically.

Mr. MADDEN. Automatically.

The SPEAKER. The question will be decided when it arises to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, without any regard to that matter, it is very important that the House go on to-morrow with its program of appropriation bills. The District bill has been reported, and we were in hopes we could take it up in the morning. The bill now on the Wednesday Calendar is with regard to the water supply for the District of Columbia, and it is not important that it should be considered at this time, but it is important that the District appropriation bill be considered. So I trust there will be no objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the business of Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-morrow?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, if it is insisted on to-day, I will object; if to-morrow morning, I will not.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on important business.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 79) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Dawson, Ga., tents and cots for use of Confederate veterans in their State convention, June 17 and 18, 1919, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. WADSWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the amendment read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, strike out the words "the legislatures of" and in lieu thereof insert the words "conventions in," so that the paragraph will read:

That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, like the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I represent in part a State which has extended the franchise to women residing within its borders. In view of that fact and my decision to vote against the proposed amendment to the Constitution, as I have done upon two prior occasions, I desire to make my attitude clear before the Senate.

No vote of mine cast upon this amendment will deprive any of the electors of the State of New York of any privilege which they now enjoy. The people of that State, as the people of several other States, have decided for themselves, in an orderly and constitutional manner, to extend the franchise to the women. I feel so strongly on this question that the people of the several States should be permitted to decide this matter for themselves that I desire to say that were this amendment, instead of being drafted for the purpose of extending woman suffrage all over the country, drafted for the purpose of forbidding the extension of the franchise to women, I would vote against it.

The Senator from Idaho yesterday discussed the right of the people to settle their own affairs, particularly in matters which were local and intimate. My feelings upon that question are somewhat like his. The people of the several States when they organized their governments and adopted their constitutions delegated certain powers to their legislatures and to their executives. Then they set up their judiciary to see to it that both their legislative and executive departments should keep faith and should not transgress the limits set by the people.

When a society organizes itself to do business, about the first thing it does is to prescribe the qualifications of its voting members, and it is the usual procedure for an organization in the process of formation to prescribe in its constitution that the voting membership shall not be extended or restricted except by a vote of the members of the society. And so the regulation of the franchise in the States, and I think I can say in every State, when they were organizing their governments, was left to the voting members; in other words, the people of those States.

Acting upon that theory and in accordance with that principle, which I believe lies at the bottom of a truly democratic government, several of the States have voted from time to time by popular referendum and have decided to extend the franchise to the women. Many other States have voted in popular referendums and have decided against the extension of the franchise.

Even though one might be opposed on general principles to the extension of the franchise to women, one can not logically object to the people of a great Commonwealth voting upon that question, settling it for themselves, and if they settle it in the affirmative with respect to woman suffrage one can not then logically object, even though one may have voted against it as a citizen of the State. Nor can I see how one can logically object to the application of the principle, even though in its application the people, voting freely and openly, decide that they shall not extend the franchise in this way.

Something has been said in the debate which has thus far taken place upon this amendment as to the popular demand in favor of it all over the country. Some criticism has been uttered by one or more of its advocates against Senators who are opposing it and who have consistently opposed it in times past. An examination of the record of the different States which have voted upon this question does not, I venture to say, indicate that there is any overwhelming popular demand thus far evidenced in the elections.

If my computation is correct, there are at least 30 States of the Union which have either refrained from voting on the question at all or have voted upon it and rejected it. In the States which have voted upon it, if a computation is made of the majorities in favor of the proposition and the majorities opposed to the proposition, we find that the aggregate majorities opposed to the proposition is about 1,300,000 votes, whereas the aggregate majority in favor of the proposition in these referendums amounts to 254,000. So from the standpoint of popular demand it would not seem that the Senate or the Congress should feel itself driven to adopt an amendment to the Constitution which revolutionizes the rule and practice of the American people in regulating the franchise.

Mr. President, it may seem somewhat old-fashioned for a Senator to express his reverence for the Constitution of the United States, his reverence and his devotion not only to its letter but to its spirit. When one views modern tendencies and the influences that are at work in this country to-day, one is tempted to suggest that now is an appropriate time to rededicate and reconsecrate ourselves to a proper understanding of the letter and the spirit of our Constitution and to a better understanding of its meaning. The tendencies of the day, without any question, are traveling fast along the road which, if followed to its ultimate goal, will mean its destruction or its alteration to such a degree in spirit, if not in letter, that it will be scarcely recognizable. It is now proposed in this amendment, as a part of this tendency which has been so evident in recent years, to take away from the people some of that sense of responsibility the exercise of which is the only safeguard for the intelligent conduct of a democracy and to assume that responsibility at the seat of government.

The central Government is remote, comparatively, and eventually, if this tendency continues, that responsibility will be borne in such a way that the individual citizen will not be able to understand what is going on in the maze and confusion of a great centralized Government.

I assume that a Senator, when discussing this matter, should endeavor to remember that he is a Senator of the United States and not confined in his functions to representing merely the State, and only the State, that sends him to Congress. I assume that it is the function of a Senator to take into consideration the Nation as a whole, to have some concern and to give some consideration to the condition of public contentment and the wishes of the people as a whole.

It is very true, of course, that a Senator elected from a State should exert every influence and power that he can wield to protect his State from injury by Federal legislation, if in his judgment the legislation proposed is unjust and discriminatory against the people of his State. That question does not arise in the discussion or consideration of this amendment, for no Senator who may desire to vote against this amendment is depriving the people of his State of anything which they already possess.

If the people of his State have already voted to extend this franchise, no vote of his, no vote of mine, can take it away; but a vote in favor of this proposal does in several instances impose upon the people of certain States things which they have said they do not want. When that side of the question is presented it seems to me that it is incumbent upon a Senator to regard the Nation as a whole and to give his consideration to the wishes of the people of the States that have expressed themselves freely upon the question at issue.

Mr. President, the conduct of government of a great Commonwealth is of concern to us all, for it is from the governments of the Commonwealths and their constituent parts that this Federal Government derives its inspiration, and which, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said yesterday, provide our schools of political education.

Let us take the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as an example. The people of Massachusetts in their own way, in conformance with their constitution, in the exercise of their undoubted right and privilege, held a referendum on the question of suffrage, and the proposal to extend the franchise to the women of the State of Massachusetts was defeated. It was defeated in every city of the State, in every county of the State, and in every town of the State, and had three votes in the aggregate been changed it would have been defeated in every ward. The people of the State of Maine, by a vote of nearly two to one, defeated woman suffrage; the people of the State of New Jersey, in spite of the interposition of the President of the United States, who is a resident of the State, defeated it by 50,000 majority; the people of Pennsylvania defeated it by a similar majority; the people of West Virginia defeated it in a popular referendum in the approximate proportion of three to one; the people of Ohio have three times defeated it within six years, the last defeat being registered only last year, if my memory is correct, and the last majority against it was over 140,000 votes. The people of Iowa have defeated it; the people of Louisiana have defeated it; and only the other day the people of Texas defeated it. The people of Wisconsin have defeated it, as was referred to yesterday, and there may be some other States which have defeated it which I do not at this moment recall.

Now, the question is, were the people of Massachusetts, the people of Pennsylvania, and the people of Ohio competent to settle that question for themselves or not? There is nothing to prevent them under their form of government from securing the franchise of women if they want it.

There is no tremendous emergency facing the country, no revolution or rebellion threatened which would seem to make it necessary to impose upon the people of these States which have given their verdict upon it something which they have said, as free citizens, they do not require or desire. Is it unreasonable to ask that they be permitted to continue to govern their own affairs in this respect? Is it contrary to the spirit of American institutions that they shall be left free to decide these things for themselves?

Other States besides those I have named have voted to extend the franchise. The State of Michigan did it but a few months ago; the State of South Dakota did it but a few months ago. No man can logically complain against a system which permits such a practice.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but he has named a number of States where in the not remote past a direct vote has been taken and the people have repudiated this proposition. I wish he would include in that list the State of Missouri, which in 1914 repudiated the proposition by 140,000 votes. I merely want Missouri included.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I stated at the time that my recollection was imperfect and that there might be other States besides the ones I mentioned which had repudiated the proposition; and I now remember, of course, that the State of Missouri is in that category.

Now, without discussing the merits of woman suffrage as such, the question is simply this: Why is it that this power, resting in the people of this country in their several States, is to be taken away from them and lodged elsewhere? What is the reason? Is the principle faulty? Is it undemocratic? Is it un-American? Does it fail to satisfy the people themselves? I think not. No such contention has thus far been made.

Let us speak frankly. The advocates of this movement—and I do not criticize them for exercising whatever power or influence they may bring to bear or for resorting to whatever device they may find ready at their hand to bring about their purpose—the advocates of this proposal for the extension of the franchise all over the United States through a Federal amendment believe that that is the easiest way for them to achieve their purpose. To them it has become a purely practical question. Regard for the spirit of our institutions does not enter into their discussions. The Constitution of the United States means nothing more to them than that it shall be used as a vehicle to achieve a set purpose; and, being intent upon the purpose, they pick up the instrument and use it. They do not want referendums. They have said so in many of their public utterances.

I am not reflecting upon their intelligence when I describe their reasons. As a matter of fact, I rather admire their skill and resourcefulness in carrying this movement up to this point. They were skillful, and have been skillful, in using the mechanics of the situation, but they have not gone to the people of the country. They have believed—and I think most men in their honest second judgment will agree—that it is easier to persuade a legislature to ratify a proposal of this sort than it is to get the people of a State to do the same thing in a popular referendum. It can be done more quickly and with less expense in the matter of propaganda, and, as was said here yesterday on the floor, the members of legislative bodies—and I do not except the Congress of the United States—are peculiarly susceptible to pressure, to insistent and persistent agitation and propaganda.

There have been instances in this very matter of the extension of the franchise which illustrate that very thing. The people of Ohio on two separate occasions voted down the proposal for the extension of the franchise to women. The year following the second defeat by the people of Ohio the legislature of that State, in the face of the mandate of the people, promptly passed a statute to extend the presidential franchise to women—an exact illustration of how much easier it is to persuade or cajole a legislature to do something that the people have refused to do. It became necessary for the people of Ohio to repeal that act of the legislature within a few months after it had been put upon the statute books, and they repealed it by popular vote.

My contention has always been with respect to amendments to the Federal Constitution that if an amendment be placed in the Constitution it should command the reverence and devotion of all the people of the country. The discussion here upon the floor yesterday makes it perfectly apparent that in part at least, in a certain section of this country, this proposed amendment will be a dead letter. No pretense is made that it will be lived up to in spirit, and it is the spirit of our Constitution which we, it seems to me, should have some reverence for at this hour.

I have discussed this matter with people from different portions of the country, and I have been surprised upon occasion to note the frivolous and casual way in which so many people discuss the Constitution of the United States and what it means, and to hear the suggestion made, "Oh, well, you must not take it so seriously as all that; things can be arranged here and there in such a way that it will not be strictly enforced." That is a spirit which is abroad in the United States to-day. That same spirit has been made manifest in the recent discussion of the last amendment to the Constitution which was ratified last winter. To-day there are thousands of people all over the United States who are attempting to contrive ways and means by which the prohibition amendment to the Constitution can be evaded, showing an utter lack of regard for the instrument itself, showing an utter failure to understand that if that instrument is not held sacred by the people of this country, then there is no use of our endeavoring to continue our experiment in self-government.

Unlike the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I voted against the prohibition amendment to the Constitution, because I believed that such a proposal had no place in the Constitution, and, second, because I believed that the people in great and important communities of this country were competent to decide that matter for themselves; and I feared the very thing that is making itself so apparent to-day—a settled determination upon the part of hundreds of thousands of people living in those communities which were not consulted, to evade it, to urge some act of Congress or State legislature under that peculiar provision for concurrent jurisdiction, which in part at least would make a laughing stock of that particular amendment to the Constitution. The danger is, if we go on in this way and deprive the people of important communities of their right to decide these questions which they are competent to decide, which in dozens of instances they have decided to their own satisfaction, that a contempt for the Constitution of the United States will gradually and inevitably spread all over this country. It will be regarded by hundreds of thousands of people as merely a vehicle for the exercise of a will to power upon the part of some group of people who desire to impose their ideas upon another group of people.

Mr. President, I can not blind myself to the fact that this is the tendency of the day; I do not blind myself to the fact that slowly, but surely, not so much by constitutional amendment perhaps, although this is a glaring instance of it, but by statutes passed by the Congress and by statutes passed by the State legislatures, we are whittling away the sense of responsibility of the individual citizen. We are teaching more people every year that the Government owes them a living; we are teaching more people every year that the Government should and can do things which they as individual citizens can do for themselves; we are urging the "easiest way." Scarcely a year goes by but what that tendency becomes more marked, and when we whittle away that sense of responsibility which should live in the breast of the individual citizen and teach him that the Government at Washington, remote as it is and rapidly becoming top-heavy with a bureaucracy, the intricacies of which I challenge any Senator to understand to-day, when we teach him that the Government at Washington, with its so-called bottomless Treasury, can take over, and should take over, all of these functions and duties and that the people of the communities of this country need not be expected to do those things for themselves, that they shall not even be expected to decide as to who shall vote for sheriff or district attorney or county judge, then I say that step by step we are building in this country a paternalistic system such as was the curse of Germany. There was a people, as we all know to-day, 70,000,000 of them, who were educated, one might say, almost from the cradle by the teachers in the schools, educated by the professors in the universities, educated by all their public men, at the inspiration of the autocracy that topped that Government, educated, drilled, coached, guided out of all sense of individual responsibility until they reached the condition where they lost their very souls.

I frankly confess, Mr. President, that I fear this tendency in the United States. I do not want to see it go any further. I know, of course, that there are some things that only a government can do. I know, of course, that every man and every woman who calls himself or herself human wants the burden of the overladen members of society lightened; and if members of society as individuals, or as volunteers organized in a reasonable way, can not perform that function then it is the duty of government, the protector of society, to perform it. But it seems to me that we might well call a halt. It is not that any one of the statutes or amendments to the Constitution which are proposed is fatal. It is the fact that we pile one upon another, year after year. Some say, "Let us enact the second one because we have enacted the first, and the two proceed along parallel lines, and therefore the second, the third, the fourth, the fifth, and the sixth are justifiable." But the trouble is, Mr. President, that as we proceed in taking away the sense of responsibility from the people in their communities year after year and decade after decade we do not proceed along parallel lines. The lines of those pieces of legislation slowly converge, and when they reach the point of convergence the citizen will have become the servant and dependent of government instead of being its master; and it is exactly along one of those converging lines that this amendment of the Constitution is proceeding. The people of some 30 States, if this constitutional amendment is ratified, cease being the masters of their government in so far as the franchise is concerned. And that, according to my way of thinking, is contrary to the spirit of our institutions.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the historical reference which my distinguished colleague [Mr. REED] made to the action of Missouri is true. It was some years old. Perhaps it might be fair to add that the vote of Missouri taken some years ago is hardly a fair indication of to-day, because in the legislature just adjourned both houses were in accord with the granting of suffrage to women in Missouri. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the statement which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] has made is correct; and it exactly illustrates the vice to which I alluded and to which the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has so fittingly addressed himself.

The last time the people of the State of Missouri had an opportunity to vote on this question was in 1914. They defeated suffrage by over 140,000 majority. Since that time they have elected legislatures without any regard to the suffrage question. It never has been made an issue to the people. The last legislature of Missouri, in disregard of the last mandate of the people of Missouri and in defiance of it, passed a statute authorizing votes by women at presidential elections. That exactly proves the case. It demonstrates that legislatures can be handled when the people can not be. It was because of the notorious incompetency of legislatures, and because of the fact that they could be reached by influence and often by sinister means, that the people took from legislatures the right to elect United States Senators and declared that the people alone should exercise that high right. It is because of the fact that legislative bodies very frequently do not represent the sense of the people, that they are very often composed of men grossly incompetent, that protest is now being made against taking away from the people of the State of Missouri the right of settling this question for themselves.

Since my distinguished colleague has seen fit to challenge me to this question, I want to ask him if he is willing by his vote to deprive the people of the State of Missouri of a right to themselves fix the qualifications of the voters within the State which they expressly reserved to themselves in their constitution—to take that power from the people of the State of Missouri and confer it upon a legislature?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as others have said before me, nothing that I can say, perhaps, can change a vote; but in view of the pending amendment and the vital issues that are now at stake, I should be derelict to duty if I did not enter my protest against the passage of this amendment, which to all intents and purposes is exactly similar to one that has already been passed, the result of which is an illustration of the point that has been made so splendidly by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and emphasized this morning by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

In our dual form of government the principle of its duality is the one that makes it possible for every part of this vast domain of ours to progress as conditions justify. Were we a homogeneous people, were the local conditions, both social, commercial, and industrial, the same, it might be less destructive of the spirit of democracy for us to take the principle that underlies democracy and emasculate it as this will emasculate it. But when the conditions are so divergent, when local conditions throughout the United States are so different, the splendid principle incorporated into the Constitution finds its sanction.

I referred a moment ago to another amendment, incorporating exactly the same principle as this, that was made into our organic law. The fifteenth amendment—but who does not know and realize that the fifteenth amendment, when it was passed, was passed in a moment of heat, passion, sectional strife, and bitterness? There is not a man in America to-day capable of exercising the functions of citizenship but that recognizes that that amendment, passed when and how it was passed, jeopardized the civilization that you and I represent in a section of our country. The alien population amongst us was not like it was in other States. Even if the franchise had been granted to them in other States, their fewness of number made it possible for those States to absorb them without danger to their civilization.

But unlimited franchise in certain other States would have deluged and destroyed with a horde of ignorance and incompetency the civilization that it had taken all of these years to build up and perfect. It placed a burden upon those States that has eclipsed every other, and that has been the main cause of the retardation of the progress of the South. It has caused that section, in every line of endeavor and in every line of work, to be retarded, because unless there was a united front to this menace the absolute submergence and destruction of our social and political edifice was threatened. So that the work of the South for years has been not one of the unified attention of the people to constructive work but one of unified operation to avoid the greater danger.

Now, I want to appeal to some of my southern colleagues. We contended that the passage of the fifteenth amendment was a crime against the civilization of the white men of America. Those on the other side, when sanity reassumed its dominion over the minds of men, recognized that fact. We busied ourselves with the passage of such laws as would minimize the disastrous effect of unlimited suffrage to the Negro in the South. Be it said to the honor of those who were in position to enforce it that, recognizing the evils that would grow out of the unlimited franchise as provided in the fifteenth amendment, they acquiesced in silence to such laws as we passed to minimize its evil effects; and be it said to their honor that they did so because they recognized, as we recognize and as the world recognizes, that local conditions there have to be met by such laws and such acts as will protect and preserve the civilization that characterizes the white man.

That was your reason, founded as it was in justice and in righteousness. Those men from the South who are sitting here to-day, who are going to vote for the ratification of this amendment or vote to submit this amendment to the people, by that vote ratify and confirm the fifteenth amendment, because I maintain to-day that there is no difference whatever between the fifteenth amendment and the proposed Susan B. Anthony amendment. The Susan B. Anthony amendment is the fifteenth amendment with the insertion of one word alone, namely:

> The right of a citizen of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, previous condition of servitude, or sex.

Those of us from the South, where the preponderance of the Negro vote jeopardized our civilization, have maintained that the fifteenth amendment was a crime against our civilization. Now, when a southern man votes for the Susan B. Anthony amendment he votes to enfranchise the other half of that race, and ratifies, not in a moment of heat and passion, what we have claimed was a crime, but in a moment of profound calmness and sectional amity he votes to ratify the fifteenth amendment and give the lie to every protestation that we heretofore have made that the enfranchisement of the Negro men, unlimited, was a crime against white civilization. When Senators and others of the North, East, and West viewed conditions calmly the fifteenth amendment did become a dead letter, and infinitely better that it should become a dead letter than that the civilization of the South should be destroyed and in its destruction jeopardize the civilization of America.

Here is exactly the identical same amendment applied to the other half of the Negro race. The southern man who votes for the Susan B. Anthony amendment votes to ratify the fifteenth amendment. Senators on the other side have acquiesced in silence when in desperation we passed such laws as would nullify the disastrous effect of the fifteenth amendment. Southern Senators voting for this amendment puts them without excuse to still further withhold their hands.

I can understand how a man from the West or a man from the East, viewing it strictly from his own local impression, might get the idea that we ought to extend it to all, but those of us from the South who have seen the evil effect upon our section of country from this menace—worse than poverty, worse than retarded commercial and industrial growth—those of us who have seen the very sanctity of the fireside and the sacredness of womanhood jeopardized, can not vote for this amendment without once again making possible all these evils that we have for weary years combated and overcome. How southern Senators can vote to turn loose upon the South another era similar to that through which we have passed I can not understand.

Not only that, Mr. President, but I have heard it flippantly remarked by those who propose to vote for this amendment, "You found a way to keep the Negro man from voting and you will find a way to keep the unworthy Negro woman from voting"

We found the way because of the recognition on the part of our colleagues on the other side that it was their blunder, perhaps, that had deluged the South or made it possible for the South to be deluged by an alien and unfit race.

We had their moral support in maintaining the civilization of the white man of the South. Can we appeal to them after to-day if southern men vote to ratify the fifteenth amendment? When the clamor comes to you now from that race, that they demand that they shall be recognized, what excuse will you have when southern men vote to ratify it? You of the other sections have said, and said rightly, that in spite of the fifteenth amendment, let the South work out its own salvation and we will give our brethren of the white race our support. Now, if your brethren of the white race of the South vote for an amendment which ratifies the previous amendment, what support can we hope from these other sections? I warn every man here to-day that when the test comes, as it will come, when the clamor for Negro rights shall have come, that you Senators of the South voting for it have started it here this day for reasons it is not necessary for me to try to state.

The other features of this proposed infraction and destruction of the Constitution of the United States have been given ably. No man would attempt to gainsay or deny that democracy means the vote of the people under the sensible restrictions that the people themselves in their local statutes see fit to impose. The very conditions that might arise in the State of Utah might make it impossible for Utah to rise and progress with a certain condition of franchise enforced upon her by Washington. Left alone to adjust her own internal affairs through her franchise, she might rise to a point where it would be perfectly proper for that franchise to be extended. The splendid principle of our dual form of government was never better illustrated than in the condition of the South and the condition of the East and the West.

I say, when we have taken from the several States the right to modify, qualify, and determine their franchise, the sovereignty of the State in every other particular has ceased to be; we shall all be living in a centralized Government; there will be nothing else left.

Local self-government presupposes the right to meet local conditions by peculiar local franchise law. If there were no other remedies, there might be an argument for us to come to the Federal Government to extend this franchise; but where each State has the right to extend the franchise in whatever manner it deems best, for my State to come and ask that Massachusetts, Montana, and California shall take charge of the affairs in my State, because the voters in my State are incompetent to determine what is best for them, is to make a statement that is proof that democracy has passed.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate any further on this question. All the legal phases of it, and all the democratic phases of it, have been discussed; but I felt that I would not do my duty if I did not warn southern Democrats—southern white men—that this day they solemnly ratify what they have for the last 50 years denounced as the crime of the century. We protested against the act that incorporated into our organic law the right of an alien and ignorant race to be turned loose upon us, and it numerically in the majority. When you vote for this amendment to-day, you vote to ratify it, and say to those who enacted that amendment that they did not make a mistake but that you are now ratifying it.

Let me repeat, the Susan B. Anthony amendment provides that the franchise shall not be denied on account of race, color, previous condition of servitude, or sex, and if it was a crime to pass the fifteenth amendment, why is it right to pass this amendment? If it was a crime to enfranchise the male half of that race, why is it not a crime to enfranchise the other half? You have put yourselves in the category of standing for both amendments, and when the time comes, as it will come, when you are to meet the result of this act, you can not charge that it was a crime to pass the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have been listening to the very positive statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, and I have felt like not making any interruption, even for the purpose of asking a question. However, I have finally concluded that unless something be said at this juncture it will go to the people of the State of South Carolina and other Southern States that the remarks just made by the Senator from South Carolina have been universally accepted here in the Senate.

I do not want to provoke any discussion of the subject, but I do want at this time to protest most earnestly against the construction which the Senator from South Carolina has placed upon this proposed constitutional amendment. If I am able to read the English language, the amendment does absolutely nothing more than to prevent discrimination in the franchise on account of sex. I think it requires an extreme imagination for one to draw any inference or to fabricate any argument to the effect that the passage of the amendment is a reaffirmation or readoption of the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does it not extend suffrage to female Negroes?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is true; but the Senator knows that the fifteenth amendment was directed to a class of people only, and this amendment is intended to liberate the women of the entire country, the millions of white women of the country. It is to operate upon them and is not confined to the black women of the South.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But it includes them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; it includes them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly. I said it did not differ from the other. You went specifically after the Negro men in the fifteenth amendment. Now you go specifically after the Negro and white women in this amendment. By thus adding the word "sex" to the fifteenth amendment you have just amended it to liberate them all, when it was perfectly competent for the legislatures of the several States to so frame their laws as to preserve our civilization without entangling legislation involving the women of the black race. You simply have amended the fifteenth amendment by adding the Negro women. When we could have had all the white women vote by State action, you want to add the Negro women by Federal action. That is what you have done, and that is what I am protesting against.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That, I take it, is the Senator's construction, and, of course, I do not expect to convince him, but I want the statement to go into the RECORD that in my judgment this amendment is entitled to no such interpretation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is no use to quibble about what is the language of the amendment. When it says that there shall be no restriction of the suffrage on account of sex, it means the female sex, and means the millions upon millions of Negro women in the South.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, may I ask my colleague if it is not true that the legislature of our State meets every year?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not also true that at the last session of the legislature no request was made to submit this question of woman suffrage to a vote of the people of the State?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the Senators representing the South and the splendid advocates of our dual form of Government representing other States on the other side can see their way clear to vote for the Underwood amendment and let this matter be submitted to the people. If South Carolina, the State that I in part represent, shall be given the privilege of calling a convention to elect delegates for that convention specifically charged with the purpose of deciding this question there will be no mistake made. It will be put squarely before the people of the State of South Carolina. I really have no fear of what my legislature would do. I know the women of my State pretty well, and I am quite sure that if they had wanted suffrage, with all the dangers and evils that it would entail, they would have said so. But they have resolutely refused to be stampeded by a few hysterical propagandists or propagooses, I do not know which is the proper term. They have refused to be stampeded, and a vast majority of our women are opposed to opening this Pandora's box of evils and threatening once again the civilization of that State and other States with similar conditions.

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that those of the South who for some reason or other have committed themselves to this destructive proposition will at least have the grace, in the moment of our passage into the unknown, to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I shall be very brief in the statement that I make to the Senate upon this question. I heard quite a large portion of the speech made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday. I was then called from the floor on business, and I did not hear the latter part. I see that it is withheld from publication in the RECORD, so that I am unable to read it, but, so far as I heard it, I entirely agree with his views upon this matter.

The Senator from Idaho comes from a State that has for years had woman suffrage. I come from a State which has never had it. The legislature of my State has just declined to submit to the people of the State a constitutional amendment providing for it in that State. There is no way of ascertaining, so far as I have been informed, what the sentiment of the voters of my State is upon that question other than the individual opinions that people may entertain upon the question. From information that I have received—and I think I have been in pretty close touch with the sentiment of the State—I believe that a vast majority of the present voters of the State who are men are opposed to woman suffrage in the State of Connecticut. I believe that a vast majority of the women of the State are opposed to woman suffrage in the State of Connecticut. I am absolutely certain that a vast majority of both the women and the men of Connecticut are opposed to Congress and three-quarters of the other States of the Union telling them what the qualifications of the electors of the State of Connecticut shall be.

However that may be—and that, of course, I admit is a question of opinion about which I have stated mine, and others are welcome to theirs—I am opposed to putting in the Constitution of the United States a provision which will force the ideas of Congress and three-quarters of the States, if three-quarters of the States concur with the ideas of Congress, upon that State and their ideas of what the qualifications of the electors of the other quarter of the States shall be. I believe that this country has become prosperous and great and strong by the exercise of home rule and the people of the different localities in this country minding their own business and, by minding it, developing a capacity to manage it. I may be wrong about that. It may be that the various localities of this country should transfer all the powers which the States which formed this Union reserved to themselves to the Federal Government here in Washington, but it is contrary to the biological and physiological laws of the world that we will get stronger by abandoning the exercise of these functions than we would be by exercising them. It contradicts the laws of history and experience.

Mr. President, in my judgment the framers of the Constitution designed that instrument to be the broad charter of our liberties and the definition of our form of government. They never expected the use of the process of amending the Constitution to be prostituted to putting a lot of police regulations, ordinances, and laws into the Constitution of the United States. They left the police power and the rules which should govern the inhabitants of this country in their respective subdivisions in the hands of the people who were to be affected by those rules. They wisely thought that the people in a country differing in climate, population, habits, and historical traditions could better administer their own affairs in the far-removed sections of the country in accordance with their local traditions and ideas than they could be administered by the fiat of a body sitting in the city of Washington. They wisely thought that the Senator from South Carolina and his colleague were better adapted to say what was for the best interests of the people who elected them, and to whom they are responsible, than the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from New York, and vice versa. I think the Senators from South Carolina will agree that the Senator from New York and myself from my State are better qualified to state to this body what sort of laws are best adapted for our section of the country than the Senators from South Carolina would be. If that were not so, there would be no sense in having Senators of the United States required to be residents of the States which they pretend to represent here.

Now, Mr. President, we have come upon this situation in this country: Our southern brethren suddenly, owing largely to a local condition, go crazy about prohibition, largely because they do not want the Negroes in their States to indulge in alcoholic drinks. Not satisfied with passing their own laws upon that subject, they come here and vote to jam a prohibition amendment into the Constitution of the United States and make other States——

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Senator from Connecticut regard the adoption of the prohibition amendment by 45 States as conclusive evidence that it is a local and southern proposition?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I regard it as a violation of the principle about which I am talking, and I say that you Senators voted to perpetrate that which I regard as an outrage upon the States that do not want it. It does not make any difference whether 45 or 47 States wanted it. The great Empire State of New York, with about 10,000,000 people, does not want it; it never had a chance to say so; but because your States want it and certain other States want it for their States, you think that you ought, in the Constitution of the United States, the fundamental law of the land, to force your views upon the Empire State of New York without its consent, except by the consent of the legislature, which is managed by the prohibition lobby.

You may think that is democracy. I do not. I think it is tyranny. I think it is tyranny, because I do not think that class of subjects was ever designed by the framers of the Constitution to be put into the Constitution of the United States. I think they regarded them as rules and local laws to govern the people in their respective localities as they wanted to be governed. Having established that principle, however, you find it rather difficult to refuse to put this woman suffrage amendment into the Constitution of the United States, and because certain States have adopted woman suffrage and desire it you think it is your duty to impose your notions upon that question upon States which do not desire it and to which it is not adapted, provided you can get three-fourths of the States to concur.

Mr. President, if this process is to be continued, if the people of this country want to be governed in their local customs, to be told what they are to eat and what they are to drink and how much, and when they are to go to bed, and what language they are to use, and to be regulated in every move they make in their daily lives and in their personal habits by a constitutional amendment in the United States Constitution that can never be got out except by a two-thirds vote of each branch of Congress and then a vote of three-fourths of all the State legislatures in addition, you have made a set of police regulations of the Constitution of the United States, and, as the Senator from New York has wisely warned you, it is a process that is calculated beyond all others to drag the Constitution of the United States into the mire and to destroy all respect for it, because you can not enforce a law or even a constitutional amendment against people who do not believe in it.

If the arguments against this process will not prevail in the case of two such shining abuses of the exercise of this power, simply because you have the power, as are furnished by this woman suffrage amendment and by the prohibition amendment, they will not prevail in other cases where the clamor is sufficiently strong to intimidate people to violate their traditional policies and the historical traditions of their party.

Mr. President, the last expression in national convention of both the Republican and Democratic Parties was opposed to this constitutional amendment. Both political parties declared in solemn national convention, after due consideration, that it was a matter that ought to be left to the several States; while they approved the principle of woman suffrage, they said, if it came, it ought to come through the action of the States. The President of the United States was the first one to say so, but, of course, like every other issue with which he deals, he says the other way, too; and there has not been a single issue of importance before the country, and there will not be during his administration, upon which he would not with equal facility and sincerity take either or both sides. Now, having resided for the last six months in a foreign country, he cables to his subservient idolators here how they shall vote on this constitutional amendment, and they will "come to heel" with duo humility, I have no doubt.

Mr. President, if this process goes on of governing this country by constitutional amendment on questions that are not at all of constitutional size or of constitutional quality, I for one say that if the people are to be governed by constitutional amendment in their daily habits and life then it becomes necessary that the people themselves should be consulted about what shall be the constitutional amendments to which they are to bend the knee and have the yoke adjusted to them. Is there anything unfair or unreasonable about that? We know perfectly well that after Congress by a two-thirds majority of both branches has submitted a proposed amendment to the legislatures of the States that, although it has been extorted from Congress on the theory that we need not commit ourselves to it, but simply not obstruct it and pass it along to the legislatures for their action, that immediately we have taken them at their word and dignified ourselves into the honorable function of being a funnel, and funneling things through without responsibility on to the various legislatures of the States which are of so much superior ability and knowledge to us, and then they immediately turn around and say, "Congress, by a two-thirds majority, has set the seal of its approval on this and demands that we act, and is any one State legislature to set its judgment up above that of the great United States Senate and House of Representatives?" Then they use us as the argument in favor of the very thing that we were doubtful about.

It is not a pleasant thing to contemplate that a Senator of the United States, having walked up to that desk before that starry banner, Mr. President, which, thank God, still waves and sparkles back of your chair, and holds up his right hand and takes a solemn oath to support and sustain the Constitution of the United States without equivocation or mental reservation, that the minute an embarrassing question is presented to him he runs like a dog away from it and says, "I do not know anything about it; but there is a cry in my district that I shall not stand in the way of it; and while I do not believe in it, while I regret it, still it is coming anyway; I do not want to have anybody say that I did not vote for it, and therefore I will sluice it along on to somebody else."

The Senate of the United States was not always composed of men of that backbone and caliber and virility. In the days of Calhoun and Webster and Clay, Senators of the United States were not too proud to think nor too cowardly to stand for their convictions, Mr. President; and there are a few left here to-day, I think, who, mistaken and old-fashioned as they may be, are actuated by the same motives which moved those gentlemen, and sit in the same Chamber, breathe the same air, and have been nurtured upon the same doctrine.

So if we are going on with this sort of thing, putting all kinds of police regulations and ordinances into the Constitution of the United States, for God's sake let us amend the Constitution of the United States so that we can submit to the electors of the States the amendments which we propose to the Constitution. Then we will not have so many propositions for constitutional amendments; but if we do, and they are approved, the people, then, will have no cause of complaint. They have a cause of complaint now, Mr. President, when we are prostituting the Constitution of the United States and using it as a vehicle to accomplish indirectly the destruction of home rule and local self-government and the exercise of the functions which have made free men in this country. When we now initiate a series of acts and constitutional amendments which deal with the things that we men of New England have been used to dealing with in our town meetings, where we carry our sovereignty under our own hats and take orders from nobody—when we put such provisions into the Constitution at the behest of the legislatures of our States, dominated and controlled by a clerical lobby and other kinds of lobbies, highly financed by charitable and mistaken people all over the country, then we are going to kill the American spirit in this country unless we submit these questions to the people themselves.

This is a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, and they have a right to say what is going into the Constitution of the United States. As I said the other day when I introduced the proposed constitutional amendment which I have pending now, I have provided that whenever Congress in the future shall think it wise it may submit proposed amendments to the electors of the States as well as to the legislatures of the States or conventions to be called therein. Although that proposed amendment has no relation either to the prohibition amendment or to the woman-suffrage amendment, and would not affect them, because, if adopted, it will not be adopted until after they have been acted upon, I hope that the Senate will see the consistency and the logic of the position I take. If we are going to dabble in these local affairs, let us submit them to the people of the localities, and then we will have a contented, submissive, and loyal support of such amendments instead of having them the cause of dissension and disunion in this country.

There is another feature, Mr. President, that was called to our attention by the great Senator from New York when he was a Member of this body—Senator Elihu Root—and that is this: It is easy to conceive that by the process of amending the Constitution three-quarters of the State legislatures might approve an amendment, while the other quarter of the States that are to be governed by it are opposed to it. The other quarter to be governed by it against their will may contain the majority of the wealth and the majority of the people of this country, and so under the boasted democracy and home rule and independent Government in this country you have a situation wherein the minority of the voters and the minority of the wealth of the country are imposing their will upon the majority of the people and the majority of the wealth; and a minority of the people and a minority of the wealth represented under that system can control the financial policy of this country, levy taxes all upon one section of the country, and arrange the bills so that one section shall pay all of the taxes practically. It can be done by scientific jugglery. I do not say that it will work out in that way in every case, but it works nearly enough that way to make it, as the then Senator from New York suggested, the most terrifying portent that is now in the sky against the perpetuity of the Union of American States, for one-quarter of the States of this country will not continue to be governed in that way. It was never the intention of the framers of the Constitution that they should. They were supposed to be governed by a majority of Congress, of course, but they were not supposed to have the process of amendment of the Constitution, which was supposed to be only amendable as to the fundamental matters of which it treats—it never was supposed that that process would be resorted to to accomplish these ulterior purposes.

Now, to be brief, and in conclusion, I am simply opposed to this amendment because it deprives the States of this Union of the power to fix the qualifications of their own electors who are to vote for their own officers. I think they can do it, and do it better than the Congress can do it. I am opposed to this amendment because it is not demanded by my State. I do not take the view that suffrage, whatever may be its merits, can be better determined by this Congress than it can be by the local States.

I believe that the great majority of the women of this country are opposed to it. When it comes, of course, I know they will exercise the franchise to the best of their ability. I do not think it will make much difference politically. I suppose the women will probably divide as their husbands and fathers and brothers do, and they will divide upon the issues that are presented to them probably about as the men do.

I have deplored from the beginning the dragging of politics into this question. I have regretted the unseemly and undignified haste of political managers to get themselves in front of this woman movement, to claim the credit of getting suffrage for the women. I believe the women will vote as honestly as the men and as intelligently as they can; perhaps they will vote more intelligently than the men do now. I do not look for additional uplifting and purity and the hastening of the millenium by their participation in politics. I think very likely the better of them will soon become disgusted with their associates at the polls, and the practical administration of political affairs, so far as the women are concerned, will be left in the hands of those who are less desirable to manage them; but that is simply my opinion, and I hope I will be a false prophet in that respect.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. WATSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	McLean	Smoot
Beckham	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Brandegee	Harding	Moses	Stanley
Calder	Harris	Myers	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	Nelson	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Henderson	New	Swanson
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Newberry	Thomas
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Nugent	Underwood
Dial	Kendrick	Phelan	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Keyes	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	King	Poindexter	Warren
Fall	Kirby	Ransdell	Watson
Fernald	Knox	Reed	Williams
Fletcher	La Follette	Sheppard	Wolcott
France	Lenroot	Sherman
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Smith, Ariz.
Gay	McKellar	Smith, S. C.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, until the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made his very interesting speech yesterday, it had not been my purpose to take any part in this discussion; for I am as anxious as any one to reach a vote, and thus finally dispose of the subject, as it undoubtedly will be disposed of on this occasion. I think, however, in view of the argument submitted by the senior Senator from Idaho, which unquestionably impressed his audience as it did myself, something should be said in reply to one or two of its features.

During its delivery I asked the Senator how he differentiated between his position at this time and that taken by him on the occasion of his vote upon the prohibition amendment; and his explanation, if I correctly comprehended him, was that inasmuch as a number of the States had adopted prohibition, and inasmuch as it could not be made effective so long as other States not having adopted it were permitted to manufacture and import alcoholic liquors therein, which neutralized prohibition, it being necessary to enable the States to enforce their laws, and, in the interest of local self-government, that the constitutional amendment providing for general prohibition should be submitted to the States for ratification or rejection, the Senator voted for the amendment.

I have no doubt that this reason was conclusive and controlling with the Senator from Idaho; but I am unable to perceive the force of that logic which justifies the enactment of a prohibition amendment to the Constitution but which rejects the proposed suffrage amendment. Each of them deals with a subject which was reserved to the States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Were it not so, these amendments would be unnecessary. That it is so is most obvious by reference to the general proposition that powers not expressly or by necessary implication delegated to the Federal Government are reserved to the States, or to the people.

If the argument be a substantial one, it could be made, as I think it has been made, against every amendment hitherto proposed to the Constitution, whether adopted or rejected. Fundamentally, the people of the United States, when conforming to the machinery and the requirements of the Constitution in their action, may incorporate into the Constitution of the United States anything they please. It is a matter of judgment—a matter, if you please, of necessity—in the opinion of that majority which is required to make the fundamental change. Whether it encroaches upon the rights of the States or interferes with local self-government, or abolishes local self-government, is entirely a practical question, and, in my judgment, has nothing to do with the constitutional right and power of the people to amend their organic act as they may see fit.

Prohibition and the suffrage are both matters of local concern; and they will be matters of local concern, subject, of course, to national legislation within the purview of our powers, until constitutional amendments are not only proposed by the Senate and House of Representatives but actually ratified and enforced by a two-thirds majority of the States voting thereon.

Mr. President, when the prohibition amendment was before Congress for its consideration Congress had already solved the problem of interference by legislation—I refer, of course, to the Webb-Kenyon bill, under whose provisions the invasion by one State with its prohibited goods of another State where the prohibition was in effect had been effectually provided against; and I think that at that time the Supreme Court of the United States had sustained the constitutionality of the law. Therefore, conceding the argument of the Senator from Idaho to be perfectly sound, its application in this instance fails, because under the powers of the National Government whereby and in pursuance whereof it could make this regulation, no constitutional amendment to that end was essential. So it would be just as pertinent to offer the same objection to the consideration of that amendment as is offered to this.

I can readily understand, Mr. President, how a Senator who had cast his vote against the prohibition amendment could consistently oppose this amendment upon the ground that it interfered with local self-government; but I am unable to understand the logic which justifies a favorable vote for the one and an unfavorable vote for the other.

I am as much concerned for the integrity of local self-government as any lover of his country can be. I concede all that was said in its favor yesterday by the Senator from Idaho. I am glad that he has become so fervent and capable a champion of that great principle; and I freely admit that never in this country did it stand in as much jeopardy as at present and in the recent past. The right of the people to meet in their separate and several communities and legislate in their own interest and for their own welfare may be said to lie at the very foundation of Anglo-Saxon liberty—a right which should be safeguarded at all times and respected everywhere; a right the disregard or lowering or abandonment of which will, in my judgment, be inevitably followed by all the consequences so eloquently pictured by the Senator from Idaho. But, Mr. President, I am unable to perceive how this amendment, should it become effective through ratification, can affect the principle of local self-government, while that regarding prohibition certainly will; for the right of a man to eat or to drink or to conduct his personal affairs as he sees fit, provided only that he pays the same respect for the right of others to do the same thing, is infinitely more of a subject for local self-government than the right of suffrage.

I do not refer to the moral or police aspect of the subject. This is not the time or place for that, but I assert fundamentally that the one affects local self-government much more than the other.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. If I had been present when the vote was taken upon the prohibition amendment I should have voted for it, not because I believe it is the best thing for the people, but because I was instructed by the people of my State to do it, and I would have respected that instruction. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I agree with what the Senator has said that the support of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution, if a man acted logically, ought to call for a vote in favor of amending the Constitution with respect to suffrage. And yet, does not the Senator think that this amendment is more of an assault upon the States than the other, because one of the inevitable characteristics and indispensable qualities of a sovereign State is the right to determine who shall hold office within the State, determine the qualifications of electors, and this amendment is a restriction upon the right of a sovereign State to exercise their sovereign power.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President, I do not. It is unquestionably an invasion, an absorption, if you please, of a right which the States may now, subject to another amendment regarding suffrage, exercise without national interference, except in so far as national elections are concerned. We had at one time a law upon the statute books enacted by Congress and enforced for many years under which at all elections where any national officer was chosen the entire machinery of the election was in the hands of the Federal authorities represented by United States marshals and supervisors. It was a deliberate and unwarranted intrusion into the affairs of the States, but it was a law, nevertheless, within the power of Congress, if it saw fit to do so, to enact. Inasmuch as State elections are constantly narrowing or decreasing in number, so that State officials and presidential electors and Members of Congress are chosen at the same time, there is no reason in the world why, if Congress saw fit to do so, it might not independently of this proposed amendment take charge of and control those elections.

But, Mr. President, whether that be so or not, the time for applying that argument has gone, for there can be no question that in spite of the obstructive tactics of the so-called National Woman's Party, which has prevented the successful submission of this amendment heretofore, the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States are in favor of the amendment. There can be no more significant evidence of the fact than that the vote about to be taken will be confined to no particular section of the country.

Mr. President, a word about local self-government and the dangers which menace it, and I am done. I do not believe local self-government is being directly assailed anywhere. I do not think it will be directly assailed under the provisions of this amendment, which after all only serves to double the vote. I believe that is the only practical consequence of the adoption of the amendment, and those who regard this matter as a subject for political influence will find to their sorrow before they are very much older, for women like men will cast their vote according to their convictions upon political questions and issues as they shall from time to time arise and be considered. Frankly, if I felt that half the people of the country would cast a vote for one particular party, locally or generally, simply because that party happened to be in power at the time the right was conferred, I should vote against the amendment. Such a conclusion is a reflection upon the intelligence and patriotism of womankind. As Democrats and as Republicans, as dissidents from both of the great parties, they will act hereafter precisely as they have acted heretofore, and in national affairs precisely as they have acted in State affairs where the franchise has prevailed.

Mr. President, what is it that is jeopardizing the fundamental principle of local self-government in America? It is largely the indifference of the average citizen to his public duty, largely the desire of the people to escape obligations by transferring them to the National Government, and largely because the States have themselves with regard to certain fundamentals broken down, either in their efforts to enforce the local laws, preserve peace and order, or have been unable to do so. If these conditions continue, as I am afraid they will, then it will make no difference whether this amendment be defeated or whether it be ratified. We must change fundamentally in some things or the old institution of local self-government, of community government, will become a tradition in this country instead of a living fact, as it has been and ought to be.

Mr. President, for the last quarter of a century and more every State in the Union has not only been willing but anxious to exchange its obligations and its powers of local self-government for Federal appropriations; and it would seem that as long as appropriations can be secured for the exercise by the Government of the United States in whole or in part of those duties which rest upon the States fundamentally and primarily, the exchange will continue. I shall not detain the Senate by attempting to enumerate a list of the various duties and powers which the States have passed on to the shoulders of the Federal Government and now feel free to insist that the Government itself shall observe them if they are observed at all. Great combinations of capital in the past have laughed at State laws and restrictions. The enforcement to-day of law and order for the protection of the individual in his fundamental rights in the States can only be secured, and sometimes not then, by Federal interference.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator, does he think the Federal Government has afforded any better protection against the great aggregations of capital than the States?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think it has done so; but that does not affect the soundness of my proposition.

Mr. REED. I am not questioning that at all.

Mr. THOMAS. My proposition is that the States are passing on this duty to the Federal Government, which I think they could more effectively perform if they would do it themselves.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator in that.

Mr. THOMAS. To-day, Mr. President, we are confronted with a measure which clamored for recognition at the last Congress, which proposes that the States shall release themselves from still another burden and require the Government of the United States to assume the duty and bear the expense of educating the people of the country. If there is a phase of the duty of local self-government more obligatory than any other, it is that of the State to educate its citizens and to assume the financial obligations necessary to effectuate that great obligation. Yet Members of this body during the expiring days of the last session and since the commencement of this one have been deluged with letters and petitions from associations and individuals from one end of the country to the other urging them to support the measure creating a new cabinet department and clothing the Federal Government with the duty and authority of educating the children of the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt it will pass, because it brings Federal money into the various districts of the country, and that is unfortunately regarded as a cure-all for every subject of public discontent.

I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Has it not been the experience of the Senator from Colorado that many of the movements which look to the extension of the activities of the Federal Government into the States, and to that extent a destruction of the States, emanate from Federal employees who want to extend their authority and aggrandize the Federal Government increase their compensation, and extend their opportunities into the States, and to that extent diminish the powers of the States?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, there is no question that Federal employees, who are now organized, seem to indicate a desire to encourage every movement that increases the number of Federal employees and extends the activities of the Federal Government. That is one of the beauties of civil service in its ultimate stages of development.

But, Mr. President, I do not think it would be fair to place all these measures upon one class of people. Every city in the United States, every community, incorporated or unincorporated, so far as I know, sooner or later comes clamoring to Congress for appropriations for the accomplishment of things that ought to be done at home, and to say that a Federal amendment striking out the distinction of sex in the matter of suffrage is a fundamental blow at local self-government in the face of these conditions is to assume a position which I do not believe can be sustained either by reason or by logic, as it certainly can not be by precedent.

I hope and believe that the good women of this country, who in my State study and therefore understand political questions quite as well as, if not better than, the average man, who regard their enfranchisement not as the grant of a privilege, but as the imposition of a public duty, will be a powerful aid in the restoration as well as the preservation of local self-government and not become a mere numerical addition to our electoral franchise whose influence and whose power will be extended in some other and less laudable direction.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak on this question, and shall do so but briefly. My remarks are chiefly provoked by the statements of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] that the action of this Congress and the action of the people of the 45 States in the adoption of the prohibition amendment has a tendency to bring the Congress into disrepute has a tendency to make the people have less regard and respect for the Constitution.

When I heard the statement of the Senator from New York that there were many men in the United States who already now feel aggrieved because of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution, and that they are proceeding to avoid or evade the effect of this amendment, and that such action would have the effect to bring the Constitution into disrepute with the people of this country, I could not help but think of an instance I remembered from away back yonder in the days of my youth when I used to read the Scriptures more than I do now. I want to read it here now. This has reference to the time when Paul was in Asia, and had preached over there, and his preaching had caused the people of that country to quit worshipping idols. Here is the Biblical account of it:

> For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain unto the craftsmen;
> Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.
> Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that they be no gods, which are made by hand:
> So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought, but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth.
> And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.
> And the whole city was filled with confusion—

And so on.

The adoption of the amendment to the Constitution, complained of by the Senator from New York, interfered with the business of those engaged in this prohibited traffic, as did the preaching of Paul in ancient days with the sale of images of the idol by Demetrius and his fellow craftsmen.

There existed in this country a kind of business that had Government support, a kind of business that had debauched the people of the United States of America; that was entrenched with special privileges; that the people of this country said had existed too long; that such business should be destroyed. The sentiment began to grow in the States, in the counties, in the towns, in the cities, and finally it impressed the Congress of the United States. The people said, "We want the Constitution amended to abolish and destroy this system that has grown up, this special privilege, in which the Government had given the privilege to certain people to debauch with the liquor traffic the other people of the country and call it business. We want it destroyed. We want it destroyed forever, effectually and finally, and it must be done by writing an amendment into the Constitution of our Nation." How did the people proceed to do this?

Sentiment crystallized. It spread and extended throughout the country, and it demanded to be voiced here, and that the opportunity be given for the States to ratify the amendment that should be proposed. They proceeded with the amendment through the Congress of the United States, according to the rules laid down by the Constitution. It came here from these representatives of the people everywhere. Then it was proposed by Congress, two-thirds of the Members voting for it. It was submitted to the States of the Union, and 45 of the 48 States of the Union voted for it overwhelmingly, according to the rules laid down for adopting amendments to the Constitution.

And now the Senator from Connecticut comes upon the floor and says it was in effect a willful interference with the rights of the people of the other States, due to the desire and preference of the South. That is the sort of idea he has about it. The Senator from New York, because the liquor interests' gain has been taken from them, because they have stirred up this confusion or attempted to, because they have attempted to bring the Constitution of the United States into disrepute on account of their gain having been affected, says now you ought to be careful about adopting this proposed amendment lest you increase that sort of feeling, lest you cause it to spread throughout the country. The saloon people and the liquor traffic do not appear to recognize that the world has progressed. They seem to be in the attitude of the man who stood still; and yet they have learned a little, I judge, from the procedure heretofore of people who have been opposed to the traffic.

The other day in Baltimore they attempted to have a great parade, and the papers announced that the antiprohibition committee would regard all keepers of saloons as traitors to the cause who refused to close their saloons during the three or four hours in which the parade was expected to march. They learned that they themselves could not even have a parade and demonstration without closing the saloons, the agencies that all the people have insisted shall be closed for all time.

The Senator from New York thinks we will bring the Constitution into disrepute by adopting an amendment as provided in the Constitution.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has offered this amendment, and he has offered it not to improve the condition but in the hope of defeating the resolution. He is an enemy to the cause. He is not in favor of the proposition of permitting women to vote. He makes no concealment of that fact. He has not been in favor of it. He is not in favor of it now. He offers this amendment to injure the cause and not to help it. Why should his amendment be adopted? No other amendment of the 17 amendments to the Constitution of the United States has ever been submitted to conventions in the States. It has never been attempted to be done before. It is permitted under the Constitution, yes; but it has never been availed of. It has never been done heretofore, and why should it be employed now on this question, and why should it be proposed by an enemy of the resolution and expected to be indorsed by those who are its friends? I say it should not be done.

Is there any reason to fear that in the United States of America in the adoption of this amendment the people will not have a fair expression of their views about it? Women only vote in comparatively a very few States. The men in all the States vote. They vote to elect members of the legislature, they vote to elect Members of Congress, they vote to elect United States Senators, and they will vote yonder upon this proposition of the ratification of this amendment, which is proposed in accordance with the rules laid down for amending the Constitution.

Can you say it is wrong to amend the Constitution according to the rules laid down for the purpose. If all the people of the country can not be trusted to amend the Constitution according to the rules provided in the Constitution, then is it not time that we have no further amendments? Some of these gentlemen, I believe from the arguments they have made, would be willing and think it better for the interest of the country in future that we have no further amendments to the Constitution, that the people can not be trusted to amend their own Constitution in the way they laid down when the Constitution was made for amending and changing it. That seems to be the idea some of them have.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] inveighed against the degeneracy of the times. He talked about those ancient Senators of great ability and great courage who stood here and took the same oath that these Senators in these degenerate days take. He said they were courageous, that they were patriotic, that they regarded their oath when it was taken. I do not know whether the Senator thinks he is more loyal and more patriotic and more courageous than the Senators who are supporting this amendment or not. He may be more able, but I will not even make any concession on that point.

That is the condition we are confronted with here to-day. No other amendment to the Constitution has ever been proposed in such a way as it is attempted to propose this. It never has been done. All the legislatures in the States are elected by the people. They are sent to their different assemblies representing their people. They will vote on this question, and if you had a convention and elected these representatives for this particular purpose they would be no more representative of the people than they are now. You are attempting here an innovation, so far as that practice is concerned.

As to what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has said, the Senator still seems to be in the unreconstructed period. I live in the South. I have lived under the fifteenth amendment since I was born, practically. It is the law of the land, and what is the use in discussing conditions under which it became so? Where is the harm that shall come to us if hereafter as to one-half of our people who have been denied the right to vote we shall utilize their ability and their judgment in the settlement of questions that affect local conditions and affect national interests? There has been, so far as I am concerned, no good reason urged here to-day at all why this amendment should not be adopted. I did not expect to say anything to-day and would not have done so except for those remarks from the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] that provoked it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, only a few words. I have listened with interest to what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] has just said. Of course, I am opposed to the pending joint resolution, and have been from the beginning, but that does not affect the question of the amendment to it, as to which is the better way to reflect popular sentiment in its adoption or rejection.

The Senator says that this is an innovation; that he desires to have this amendment adopted along the lines of the Constitution. It is no more an innovation if my amendment is adopted than the joint resolution would be as it stands as originally drafted, because the Constitution itself provides two modes of ratification, and it is left entirely optional with the Congress as to which mode shall be adopted. The Congress can determine that it shall go to the legislatures for adoption or the Congress can determine that State conventions called for this sole purpose shall pass upon the ratification or the rejection of the amendment.

The Senator from Arkansas says that this amendment of mine is introduced for the purpose of defeating the joint resolution. That is a very candid confession by one of the proponents of the measure. In itself it could not defeat the measure. There can be no question that every State in the Union would call a convention for the ratification or rejection of the amendment if we adopt this method. More than that, if they did not call it, the Federal Congress could call a convention.

But it narrows itself to this, that if a legislature is elected, this, being one of the issues, may become subordinated in many States to other issues. It may become subordinate to the personal equation of the candidates, and men may be elected to vote on this issue who will not directly reflect the mature judgment of their constituents. But if a convention is called for the sole purpose of ratifying or rejecting this measure, then the delegates to that convention will be merely the instrument of the popular will, as the Electoral College is the instrument of the popular will in the election of a President of the United States. When the Senator advances the argument that the adoption of this amendment would defeat the woman-suffrage amendment he concedes in that moment that the popular sentiment in the States is not for the Susan B. Anthony amendment, and that the proponents of the measure dare not submit it to the popular will of the people of America.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to add a word in connection with the statement just made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. We are already informed through the press that the purpose has taken shape of immediately convening legislatures in extraordinary session to ratify this amendment. Those legislatures were not elected upon the issue of suffrage or nonsuffrage; they were elected upon totally different issues; and now it is proposed that men who were not selected by the people for the purpose of passing upon this issue shall pass upon it before the people even have the opportunity to again elect a legislature.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator suggests that there is a purpose to call the legislatures of the different States to get immediate ratification. Where does the Senator get any such idea? Where is there anything upon which to base such a statement as a fact?

Mr. REED. I will answer the Senator. I have already stated it, if the Senator had been listening. I said it had been repeatedly stated in the press that that is the purpose of the leaders of this movement. I have seen what professed to be quotations by those who have been leaders of the movement. I have generally found that the newspapers have been pretty able to prognosticate the movements to a reasonable extent in the future of the suffrage program. I have just been informed by a citizen of the State of Texas that two of the great papers of Texas are already advocating the calling of the legislature in extraordinary session for the purpose of ratifying this amendment, although the State of Texas by popular vote held within the last few days has defeated suffrage, I understand, the majority amounting to nearly 30,000.

So we may as well understand that it is the purpose of the proponents of this measure to do everything within their power to keep from submitting it in any way to the popular will and to obtain ratification in any manner possible. I expect to hear all of these proponents within the next few months loudly proclaiming their belief in the doctrine that the great people of the country shall in all respects rule. I wish they could bring themselves to an adherence to that doctrine to-day.

The amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] does give the people of the States, at least, the opportunity to have a vote on the selection of men to constitute the members of the convention. It will not work necessarily any delay, unless the delay is merely the vote to be attained by the extraordinary methods I have spoken of; that is, extra sessions of the legislatures called to ratify, the members of those legislatures having been elected for entirely different purposes. Why is it that men who claim to be in favor of government by the popular will are not willing to accept this amendment which will afford the people some chance to express themselves? It seems to me there ought to be some Senators here, even from the suffrage States, who are willing to let the people of the States of this Union have the opportunity to cast a vote at least for delegates to a convention that will debate and consider this important amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have not been privileged to hear all of the debate upon the resolution under discussion, and the question I am about to ask may have been fully answered in the debate. The question which I desire to submit to the Senator is this: Is there any valid reason why the question of amending the Constitution of the United States, as contemplated in the resolution now before the Senate, should not be submitted to a vote of the people of the States? For myself, if the Constitution is to be amended, I see no reason for denying the people the right to vote upon the proposed amendment. There is no question but what the proposed amendment to the Constitution materially changes the framework of our organic law and commits to the Federal Government authority which now belongs to the States. The proposed amendment is a limitation upon the powers and rights of the States, and likewise is a restriction upon the rights of the people within the States. To deprive them and the sovereign States in which they reside of rights now enjoyed by the States and the people is a very serious matter. If I may be pardoned for further occupying the time of the Senator, I would like to state, because I do not intend to discuss this question, that I can not bring my judgment to approve of the plan to amend the Constitution of the United States to grant woman suffrage through the Federal Government. While I have for many years been a believer in woman suffrage, and earnestly advocated within my State the right of women to vote, and urged that in the State constitution they should have the same political rights as men, I have always entertained the view that the question was one for the States to determine for themselves. This has been the view of all Democrats and those who believed in our form of government: The proposition now is to overturn the principles held sacred for so many years, and to further intrench upon the prerogatives of the States and the reserved rights of the people. Under our form of Government the States alone have the right to determine the qualifications of electors. If States may not ordain their own constitutions and determine their own domestic and internal affairs, this Republic will soon be destroyed. We often speak of the "sovereign States of the Union," and the Supreme Court of the United States has referred to the States as "indestructible." One of the indispensable attributes of State sovereignty is the power to determine who shall hold office within the State. An elector is an official, and therefore an elector holds an office within the State. To deprive the States of the right to say who shall vote and who shall hold office is an abridgment of the rights of the State. It seems to me that this proposed amendment is along the lines of centralization, which, if persisted in, will lead to disastrous consequences. However, I am in the unfortunate situation of being unable to vote in harmony with my convictions. I represent, in part, a sovereign State; and the mandate of my party and the people of my State requires that I vote for the submission of an amendment to the Constitution providing for woman suffrage. It is a matter of sincere regret to me that I am compelled to support a proposition by my vote which is so repugnant to my conceptions of the rights of the States, and, indeed, the rights of the people themselves, and which will prove to be a dangerous precedent and a continuing menace to the peace and welfare of this Nation. However, I rose merely to propound the question which I have submitted to the Senator, and not to argue the question so ably discussed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The only reason I have heard was the one advanced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], who, as I understood him——

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I was trying——

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator stated he could not understand why the proponents of this measure insisted on the amendment being adopted regularly, as all other amendments to the Constitution have been adopted.

Mr. REED. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator made a statement practically to that effect.

Mr. REED. No; I did not make any such statement in effect.

Mr. KIRBY. The question I want to ask is, Is it not a fact that all of the other 17 amendments to the Constitution have been adopted by being submitted to the State legislatures? Is it not true that a single amendment has never been proposed otherwise? If that is true—and it is—then why does the Senator wish to oppose it in this case and insist on an innovation?

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I shall vote for the amendment to the Constitution permitting women to vote. I do not think, however, that the statement of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is entirely warranted—that it necessarily follows that I shall vote to deprive the people of my State or of any other State of the right to express their opinion on the subject. I shall therefore vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there are now pending two questions which have been propounded to me. I want to answer them in the order in which they were asked. The question was propounded by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] what reason has been advanced for denying to the people of the States an opportunity to express their desires with reference to this amendment? In answering that I have to say that the only reason I have heard advanced—but I have not been here during the entire debate—was the one brought forward by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], which was that it would work delay, and his further reason that the method now proposed to be pursued is the method that has been pursued in adopting all other constitutional amendments.

The other questions propounded to me were those just asked by the Senator from Arkansas, which embraced the idea I have already expressed as coming from him, namely, Is it not true that all other amendments to the Constitution have been submitted in the same manner in which it is proposed to submit this pending amendment? All of the late amendments to the Constitution have been so submitted; but whether always that has been the rule I am not prepared to say. I confess to some little embarrassment when I must say that I can not answer with certainty.

Mr. KIRBY. They all have been.

Mr. REED. I think they all have been.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator asked me a third question—Why should there be a different method followed here?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that point will he yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that we have been admonished by him and by other Senators to remember the teachings of the fathers and to guide and govern our actions by their practices and their teachings. Immediately upon the adoption of the Constitution there were at least 10 amendments submitted when the method was new. Those amendments might very properly have been submitted to a convention called in each State, for there was a large number of them; but my recollection is that the fathers chose the other system. We have followed that system invariably down to this time. Does not the Senator think that that is a good reason why we should continue to do so?

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, first let me answer the Senator's statement. I have frequently said in this Chamber that I have great regard for the wisdom of the framers of our Constitution and that I did not believe that those policies of government which they had inaugurated and under which we had lived and by virtue of which we have become the greatest nation of the world ought to be disregarded and treated lightly or set aside without mature deliberation, and all of that I reaffirm. But as to questions of policy of government, such questions as the Monroe doctrine, such questions as the United States keeping herself free from entangling alliances, to all of these ancient doctrines my distinguished friend and those who are with him have turned aside their faces. Now, the Senator comes to me and asks me, on a mere matter of procedure, not a matter involving the principle itself, that we should be bound by the procedure they took.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri again yield?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not understand that that is the position taken by the Senator from Missouri. I understand his argument is that it is a fundamental right of the people of the States in a referendum to decide this matter, rather than that it should be decided by the legislatures of the States. I do not understand that the Senator has heretofore argued that this is a mere matter of choice between two procedures. I understand his argument to be that it is a question of substantive right of the people to pass upon these questions. I called his attention to the fact that we are pursuing the policy that was pursued by the fathers, for obviously they thought it was the better policy. Now, the Senator seems to think that at the present time, at least, the policy of the fathers is not the one we ought to follow.

Mr. REED. Oh, I do not think anything of the sort in the sense that the Senator puts it. There are really two questions presented here: One is, Shall the people of the States be deprived of the right, which they have reserved in their constitutions, to determine the qualifications of the voters of their respective States—shall that right be taken away from them by a Federal amendment? Upon that I answer that it ought not to be taken away, first, because to take it away is violative of the very genius of our dual system of government, a government by independent States and by a central nation at the same time. Upon that we have the wisdom of the fathers, for they so wrote the law. We have the experience of the country and we have the principle of government that the people of every State ought to have the power to name their own electorate, especially when that electorate is voting only on local affairs, and that when the Federal Government comes in, contrary to the wisdom of the fathers—to which the Senator from Montana now appeals for the first time in many months and which he has been assiduously denying all along—and proposes to deprive the people of the States of the right they have reserved in their constitutions to themselves to change the qualification of voters, that is an impingement and an impairment of the very structure of our Government. Now, that is the first question. But when you come to the question how that Constitution shall be amended, the particular form to be followed is a matter of procedure and is not a matter of principle, except that you may follow a procedure which will be calculated to deny the people a right or calculated to extend to them a right.

It is true, I believe, that in the past we have followed the method of submission to the legislatures, but it is also true that when the fathers wrote the Constitution they provided two methods.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that, when they were called upon to make a choice between the two methods, they chose the one we propose to follow while you propose another one.

Mr. REED. They proposed two methods.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but when they were obliged to make a choice between the two methods, they chose the one that you propose to cast aside.

Mr. REED. They proposed two methods, and when they came to submit their amendments it is true they submitted those amendments to the legislatures of the States. Very well; let the precedent stand for whatever value there is to it; but let me call attention to the difference in conditions. In those days the smaller population all over the country, the fact that every man was closer to the public questions of the day, the fact that every one of these questions had been discussed for years and that the principles of government which were involved in the constitutional amendments upon which the vote was about to be taken had been the subject of debate, and political alignments had been made, so that a legislature elected might be well said to go there instructed and with a full understanding of what the people wanted, may have been very great factors in determining the question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think the Senator is quite right about that. The very subject before us, however, has been debated before the people of this country for 75 years or more.

Mr. REED. Now, I will answer that. The very subject before us has been debated by the people of the United States—by a few of the people of the United States—for a good while; it has been debated by a few agitators——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does not the Senator think that as many have participated in that debate as participated in the debate of the fundamental principles expressed in the first 10 amendments to the Constitution?

Mr. REED. Not in the same proportion, nor anything like it. I will tell you how the debate has been conducted in my State. I know something about what has gone on there. It has been the subject of laughter and jest more than of any serious consideration. Ladies have come, as I said the other day, and asked to address audiences that were called together by Democrats or Republicans. They have been accorded the platform and have spoken their little piece, bowed themselves out, and the business of the evening went on. Nobody regarded it in a very serious way. We had a vote on it. There was not any debate during that campaign on woman suffrage, except on one side. Some of the ladies turned out and spoke for it. I believe I state the truth when I say that the great mass of the women of Missouri were totally indifferent to it, and when they got through the people voted it down by 140,000 majority.

In the days when the Constitution was first amended, when the Bill of Rights was added, when Thomas Jefferson was gathering in his two hands, figuratively speaking, the lovers of human liberty and molding them into a tremendous force for the perpetuation of liberty, the burning issues of liberty were flaming in the hearts of all the people.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And he submitted them to the legislatures of the States.

Mr. REED. Yes; he submitted them to the legislatures. Take the full benefit of that. Now, I am going to show you a reason that ought to appeal—and would appeal to anybody but a suffragist—why this ought to be distinguished from the ordinary method of submission. Several States of the Union had the original right to fix the qualifications of their voters, and they proceeded in nearly every instance to write those qualifications into their constitutions. They did so for the purpose of depriving the legislatures of any power or right ever to change those qualifications. Now it is proposed to take an action by which three-fourths of the States of the Union may change the fundamental law of this country so as to change the qualifications of the voters of a State against the will of the people of that State. Upon such a question as that, where the people have reserved to themselves in their constitution the right to fix the qualifications, the least that this body can do is to preserve to the people in the form and manner of submission the right to express their opinions. That is what distinguishes this amendment from every other amendment, and the line of demarcation and of distinction is so plain that any man, except a suffragist, can see it; and a suffragist can see it, but will not admit it. That is the reason.

I will take a concrete case. I went over it yesterday, but I venture to repeat it in substance. My own State, with 3,500,000 people, has an electorate of many hundred thousand. Those people have written a constitution and said, "We will not again change the qualifications of voters; the legislature shall not do it." Now, we propose to say to those people, "The legislature shall or may do it; and not only your legislature, but, if your legislature should vote against it, the legislatures of other States can change the qualifications of the voter, which you expressly reserved to yourselves." We ask at least that you give our people in some manner and form the opportunity to vote on this amendment; that if you pass it you will at least give us the privilege of having an election and of selecting our delegates to a convention to pass upon this particular question, and to that extent you will save to them a portion of the rights they sought to reserve in their constitution. Why is not that fair? Why is not that reasonable, and why should not Democrats here grant it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. REED. I am quite content to stop, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Apropos of the discussion which was provoked by the statement of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], with respect to the manner of submitting the first 10 amendments and other amendments, my recollection of the historical circumstances attending the first 10 amendments is this: Patrick Henry, particularly, and some other Virginians, tendered some 13 or 14 amendments to the Constitution of the United States, 10 of which constitute the first 10 amendments to that instrument. Those amendments were submitted to the people for discussion, and were earnestly discussed from the North to the South, many of those who were afterwards followers of Hamilton and the Federalist Party opposing the amendments and the followers of Mr. Jefferson and others supporting them. The legislatures chosen to pass upon the amendments were selected with reference to their views upon the amendments, so that in effect they constituted conventions selected by the people to vote upon the ratification of the amendments. The same can be said with respect to the eleventh amendment; the same can be said with respect to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, because they were live issues; they were presented to the people, all eyes were focused upon the same, and the members of the legislatures were largely, if not entirely, selected because of their support of or their opposition to those amendments.

Now, with respect to the legislatures that are at present in existence, some of which have been recently elected and some of which were elected two years ago, with half of the Senators holding over for four years—many of them were selected with reference to local issues, with reference to questions not involving woman suffrage at all; so that in submitting to the legislatures in many of the States the proposed amendment it will be found that a portion or all of their members were elected upon other issues. The question of amending the Constitution of the United States, as contemplated in the resolution under consideration, was not an issue when they were elected, and they were chosen without reference to their views upon this question.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator for his statement; it is very clear. That is not all, Mr. President. In ordinary elections in the States, when there is no matter of special importance, it is frequently the case that you have great difficulty in getting anybody to go to the legislature who amounts to very much. I do not think that I would be guilty of a breach of courtesy even if I stated the plain fact that there have been times in this country when a man who was a member of the legislature of some State would apologize when he announced the fact; and, as was said the other day, it was because legislatures were so susceptible to influence, because so many scandals broke out in them, that the important matter of the election of United States Senators was taken away from the legislatures altogether. In the Senator's own State of Montana one conspicuous case arose in which I know that the Senator and his colleague took a distinguished part in favor of purity and decency; but it was one of those cases that contributed materially to the sentiment in favor of a direct vote of the people. I do not know whether we improved the personnel of the Senate; I do not know, if we keep on having these expensive elections, whether we will have improved the moral tone of the method of election. That is a question to be determined in the future.

Mr. President, there are some Senators here from the South. I want to talk to them for a minute, not on the lines pursued by my friend Mr. SMITH this morning. I leave that argument to Senators from distinctly Southern States. Missouri is in the twilight zone, in a way, between the North and the South. We have the virtues of both, and the vices of neither. I do not know in how many Southern States this question has been submitted to a popular vote in any form. It has just been submitted in Texas, the great Empire State of the Southwest, that came into this country as an organized and independent government, that has always proudly asserted its independence as a State, and whose people have always justly exhibited a pride in their great Commonwealth. The people have just voted in that State, and in a very decisive vote have repudiated woman suffrage. Now the Senators from that State, both of whom I esteem very highly, have this question to answer by their vote on this amendment; and I hope they will understand that I am not trying to make this unpleasantly personal, because that is not my object.

This is the question: Would you now cast a vote the effect of which may be, so far as Texas is concerned, to have the present legislature, elected upon a different issue, convened and have it declare for the ratification of this amendment, in the face of the decision of the people at the election just held? Or will you, at least, say this to the people of Texas, "While I voted to submit this proposed amendment to the Constitution, I also voted for the Underwood amendment, which reserved to the people of the State of Texas the right to elect delegates to a convention and to give them the instructions of the people of Texas"?

That is the question that is presented there. Of course Senators will answer that as they ought to answer it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator takes his seat, a very interesting question was precipitated yesterday by the discussion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in respect to which I should like to have the views of the Senator from Missouri. If this amendment should prevail, what is the Senator's view as to the machinery for conducting the election under which the delegates to the conventions in the various States should be selected? Is it his view that it should be provided by the State legislatures, or that Congress should provide it?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to answer that question in a moment, and let me pursue for the present the theme I was on?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I shall be very glad then to answer it; and if I start to take my seat without answering it, I hope somebody will call my attention to it, because I think the answer is very simple, plain, and easy.

Now I address myself to other Members from Southern States.

We all know that it has been the commonly understood situation that in the South the women have not desired the right of suffrage and that the sentiment has been strongly against suffrage. There have been more reasons than one for that. One of those reasons undoubtedly arises out of the race question. Another reason is probably found in the fact that for the most part the ladies of the South are intensely wedded to their home life, and are but little inclined to thrust themselves into public affairs; and I think I can say, without at all disparaging the women of other parts of the country, that at least it is true that one of the most glorious types of womanhood that ever beautified and rendered sweet and lovely this old earth is the women of the South. Down in the South you have taught State rights—a doctrine which was originally fundamentally right, if properly understood, but to which I have always thought the South gave too extreme a construction, that resulted in the endeavor of the South to withdraw from the Union, for I do not believe that right ever existed; but I do say, as I ought to say in passing, that the man who would harshly judge the South to-day for the position that it took would be a most ungenerous man.

The doctrine that the State of Georgia or the State of Mississippi or the State of South Carolina was a little republic in itself, whose people controlled its own affairs, and which in all local matters was a sovereign, with only the limitation that certain rights that had been yielded to the Federal Government should, of course, be subtracted from the sum total of the powers that the State otherwise would have had as a complete sovereignty—that doctrine was a splendid doctrine. It has been close to the hearts of the people of the South. It has, sir, been very close to the hearts of all men who have understood the dangers of centralized government. How can men from the South be found who will vote to take away the very thing that constitutes the control of the destiny of every State, that thing being the electorate itself? How can you, who have sought to retain as large a measure of power and control in your own States as possible, go back to your people and justify this surrender of that right which lies at the very foundation of all your rights, and which, when legislation follows, may be found to constitute the means by which the entire election machinery of your State will go into the hands of Federal agents?

We might just as well look this question in the face. When politics run high, as they will again, and when passion rides in its chariots of fire across this land, as it will again, and when the clamors go up from the dark sisters of the South that they are not being permitted to vote, and the sisters of the North who belong to the political party that feels that it is losing votes down South get aroused, I want to say to you, Senators, you are very likely to get some legislation compared with which the force bill will be a gentle and merely persuasive measure. So I say that men of the South ought at least to give their people a chance to vote on this question.

There was something said here in the argument to-day—and I am occupying the floor when I did not expect to stand here more than a moment—to which I want to allude, because of the fact that people of the different parts of this country know their own affairs, and that they may be misled by judging the entire country by the conditions of their own States or people.

I readily confess—I not only readily confess, but I gladly insist—that the people of the State of Montana, with its not very large population, with its boundless opportunities, its undeveloped resources, may properly decide a question in favor of women voting, when under the conditions in other States it might be highly unwise. I know—any man who has visited the great West knows—that the people of these Western States that are sparsely settled are closer to their government and know more about their public men and public affairs than the people of the great congested States. An entirely different proposition is presented. I do not know what the vote of Nevada is to-day, but, if I recall aright, a few years ago, when I was serving on the executive committee of the national committee, I think they had a total vote of about 25,000 in the State. That vote is not as large as the votes of some wards of some cities.

In a population of that kind, if a man is a candidate for Senator or governor, every man, woman, and child in the State knows him and knows all about him. It is an intimate and close relationship that exists. They know his public life; they know his private character; and not only the men, women, and children know him, but every well-bred dog recognizes him. So I sometimes think that it is a greater compliment to be elected from one of those States than it is to be elected from a great, big State, where they do not know the men so well.

The women in those Western States, with their environment and their surroundings, are closer to public affairs than they are in the great, congested centers. I suppose there is not a lady of any intelligence in the State of New Mexico who does not know all about the distinguished Senators from that State. They know about their past and their present and, as nearly as anything human can judge, they know about what their future is going to be. They know who are the members of the legislature. They know the questions that are arising out there that affect them and affect their State. They have all been talked over. I do not mean to say that they have not anything else to do, but the life of the whole State is close to them.

Let us take New York City. I do not pick it out as a place of ignorance, but as a place of great numbers. The average lady in New York City does not know her Congressman or what his name is. There are a good many men who do not know. A good many hardly know where the capital of their State is, and they are not intensely ignorant at that. The problem is afar off. There are too many theaters and moving pictures and cabarets, and there are too many matters of interest happening every day, tens of thousands of events where there is one happening out in these Western States; and that is not a disparagement of the Western States. Nobody ever heard me disparage the Western States. If I had my life to live over again, I would rather go in a place like that than in any other place in the world. So that it is so outrageously unjust for the people of one State to try to force a law upon the people of another State.

What right have I as a citizen of Missouri, or what right have the people of Missouri, or what right has the Legislature of Missouri, to say who shall vote in the sovereign State of Texas, when the people of Texas by their vote have just decided that question? And what right has Texas to say who shall vote in Missouri, when the people of Missouri are capable of deciding that question for themselves, and have decided it in recent years? What right have I to go down into Mississippi—a State where I have never had the privilege of visiting, but a State which I respect, and whose people I respect—and try to tell those people down there whom they ought to allow to vote? What right have I to insist that the question shall be submitted to a legislature composed in most of the States of the Union, when they are picked up at ordinary by-elections, of men who have very little to do, and who are sent to the legislature to fill out a ticket?

Why, I tell you, sirs, that I have attended many political conventions in my State—and I cite it because it is as good a State as there is anywhere—and I have attended many political conventions where, when we got through making up the rest of the ticket, we would have to canvass the convention to find men who would let us put their names on the ticket for the legislature. Now, why not give the people of these States a chance to elect delegates to a convention, at least? Why not give to the people of the State of Texas the right, before their privilege of fixing the qualifications of their voters shall be taken away from them, at least the right to express their opinions through delegates elected by the people and sent to a convention? How can any man justify a denial of that?

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] asked me a question, which was——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let me remark that the Senator apparently felt that I was endeavoring to ask him a hard question. I am sure that it was a very easy one for the Senator to answer. I did not intend to put it as a poser to the Senator at all.

Mr. REED. Oh, I know the Senator did not, and I did not mean to make any reply that would give the impression that the Senator had. I am unfortunate when I talk in doing it in a sort of a brutal way, I guess. I do not mean it.

My opinion is that the problem is very easy of solution. All that is necessary in the world is for the legislatures of the various States, when they meet, to pass a simple statute providing for the selection of delegates to a convention, to be held at a certain time, to consider and pass upon the amendment. That machinery may be easily called into play by simply employing the ordinary machinery of elections for the purpose of taking the ballot. Of course, I would say, as a matter of preference, just my opinion that comes to me on my feet, that probably could be done best at some general election when the people would turn out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. REED. But, of course, the elections could be held before that, if the legislatures of the States should meet in time, or, if we are to have extra sessions, they could be convened for that purpose as well as the other.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the legislature could or could not call a convention, as it saw fit.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And, of course, legislatures that were against woman suffrage would not call a convention.

Mr. REED. I do not think that would follow.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That would be the natural political tendency, would it not?

Mr. REED. I would not say so. I do not think that would follow.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is it not a fact that it would result, first, in a contest before the legislature over the question as to whether a convention should be called, then a contest would occur before the people over the election of delegates to the convention, and finally a contest would ensue before the convention as to whether it should be adopted or not; and does it not mean there would be three fights over this matter, and that is the reason why the Senator desires to pursue that method?

Mr. REED. No; that is not the reason, not as the Senator puts it. It is true there might be a contest as to whether the convention should be called, but if there was any large sentiment in favor of the proposition I have not the slightest doubt of its being called even by a legislature that upon a vote on the main question might be against it, and for this reason——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But, Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Permit me to complete the sentence. The argument that the people have the right to express their opinion, and this is a means provided for the expression of that opinion, would be a very potential argument.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with the Senator, but he will bear in mind that is exactly what we are now asking and what he is resisting.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We are asking that the people be given an opportunity, and he is objecting even to the submission of it. If he were a member of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, how could he consistently, with his record here, vote to call a convention?

Mr. REED. The Senator does not state my position with the fairness he usually manifests. You are not asking that the people be given a chance to vote. You are asking that the legislatures be given a chance to vote, and we, by this amendment, are asking that the people should be given a chance to vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to ask the Senator just one further question. If this joint resolution had been originally introduced with a proposition to submit it to conventions called in each of the States, would the Senator have voted for it?

Mr. REED. I would have declined to vote for it and for the reason——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. REED. I say it is a question that belongs exclusively to the people of each State. That is well known to be my position. But if I was a member of my State legislature and the question was presented as to whether the people of the State should have the right to vote on suffrage, and there was any considerable sentiment in favor of it, I would vote to give the people a chance to have that vote and decide that question. Now, I follow the Senator along in his objection. I do not think there would be any difficulty in getting the legislature to pass a law for submission; at least, there would not be any difficulty if there was any considerable sentiment in favor of the measure. At least there would be no difficulty in getting a convention called by any legislature that would ratify this amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. REED. Therefore you will not lose an hour or a second there.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The question would be presented in exactly the same way. Those legislatures that are in favor of the amendment would call conventions, and those that were against it would not call the convention.

Mr. REED. Very well. If you had three-fourths of the legislatures of the States in favor of suffrage, you would get your conventions in three-fourths of the States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. REED. And if you did not have three-fourths of the legislatures or could not get them ultimately, you never could pass your amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly, and you would have three fights to make instead of one.

Mr. REED. Let us discuss the fights as a separate proposition. The point I am making now is that there is no foundation whatever in your claim that you would be delayed because the legislatures would not act by calling the conventions, because every legislature that would vote for suffrage, that would vote to ratify this amendment outright, would certainly vote to call a convention. So you do not lose a minute. You do have to go and ask the legislatures to cast that vote, and if you do, that affords a little time while that law is being passed, and it may be passed at any session of the legislature for the people to discuss and understand the question.

There would be a little delay in calling this convention. How much delay? Just enough delay so that there could be fair discussion by the people. Do you want this thing or do you not want it? Do you want to change your fundamental law or do you want to retain it as it is? Before you change a fundamental law that has been a part of the Constitution of the United States since the foundation of the Government, that has been engraven in the constitutions of the several States from the first, there ought to be a little period of discussion when the people have that issue segregated out and presented to them sharply for their consideration, and two months' time or three months' time and a debate before the people will do no harm.

There would be three fights, says the Senator. There never ought to be a change in the fundamental laws of this country without discussion, and that is what the Senator means by a fight. If this measure is so sacred and so holy and if it carries so much of good as is contended, then the proponents of it can well afford to argue its blessings to their people and let their people become wise and advised.

Now, we have elected a convention of delegates. We have proceeded to that point. How much time does it take for them to act? Just a reasonable time to debate and discuss this one question and vote upon it. Such a convention as that ought to meet, organize, debate the proposition, and adjourn in less than five days' time. Probably if there was a decisive vote it would meet, organize, and adjourn on the same day. So there is nothing in the claim that this works an endless delay. The truth is that those who stand here crying for suffrage in the name of democracy are afraid to submit this question to a general vote. They are fleeing from a general vote. Those who stand here pronouncing encomiums upon the rights of the citizens of the Republic to vote regardless of sex are trying to deny the right to vote to the great electorate of this country upon this important question. There is no escape from that. That is all there is in it. The thing we are appealing for now is that the people shall have the right to vote at least to the extent that is provided by the Underwood amendment. How can you deny it to us?

I know some people think this is a political question that ought to be settled so that we can play a little politics. Witness the ambitious rivalry of Democratic and Republican leaders. Democrats got together in the last days of the last session saying if we do not put this through the Republicans will put it through at the next session. So we will put it through regardless of the merits, in order that we may get the votes of the women.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. And when this session is convened, behold the spectacle! Before the new committees were organized the Democratic chairman rushed forward with this bill, without a report from a committee, standing here like another Ajax, not defying but inviting the lightning, and declaring "here is the Democratic Party ready to give you suffrage," all in the hope of getting the votes of the women.

Then upon the other side there is the little filibustering tactics to delay action by the Democrats, so that committees may be organized and the Republicans can bring in the bill and they can coddle the ladies and deceive them by the ardor of their advances. Although there is business of the most pressing character, and although appeal after appeal has come for hearings, they have set aside all that, and the manly form of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], stretched to its fullest height, is visible upon the floor demanding instantaneous action, by attitude and manner at least declaring to all these ladies, "behold, I alone am the true lover of women. The Republican Party has always opened its hearts and its arms and its embraces to your cause, and we are the real champions of this measure."

Why this performance? For the cheap clap-trap political purpose of trying to get some votes, not because of the merits of the case. Let me tell these valorous and knightly gentlemen upon both side that they reckon without the intelligence of women. If the women of this country are fit to exercise the sacred privilege of citizenship and voting then they will never vote the Democratic ticket or the Republican ticket because of the performances of either of these champions of their cause. They will see and have seen through the thin veneer of your pretenses and have understood your motives from the first, and know as well what you are up to as your wife knows when you tell her you are going down town on business and she knows you are going for a game of poker. [Laughter.] Well, looking for a game of pinochle, then.

It may be that women are not by reason of mental attitude, not from lack of mentality, as well qualified for suffrage as men, but when it comes to the question of knowing what you are up to and seeing clear through you, they can see through the little shams and pretenses of a man in the dark of the moon without a star shining when you could not see through them if you had a microscope that magnified a thousand times. They know exactly what you are trying to do here to-day. They understand all about it, and in their hearts they despise you for it, and they play upon you one against the other just as women have played with foolish men since Eve and Adam met in the Garden of Eden.

How thrilling it was yesterday when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], standing at his full height and speaking in a round rich tone, said as he waved his finger in the air in true dramatic style, "I shall insist that the Senate remain in session to-morrow until this great measure is passed." Did he see the women flocking to the polls in Indiana and demanding ballots for WATSON for anything he wanted? But I warn him that the women in Indiana if they come to vote will have "other fish to fry," and other attachments to follow, and other questions to determine. The glorious vision of yesterday will have departed from their recollection. The inspiring scene will be lost in the limbo of time, the days of forgetfulness will have covered the great event, and in the silence of the grave it will be lost with many other celebrated and wonderful events.

You Democrats who talked about initiative and referendum; who went up and down your States declaring that it was the God-given right of the American citizen to cast a vote on every question; who insisted that legislatures acted so improvidently and so thoughtlessly that it was not safe to trust them with the final enactment of a law; who declared that in every instance the people of the State should have the right to demand a reference to them of every act passed by the legislature; and who, when you secured the enactment of such a statute in the Western States, impressed upon your people that you had brought to them a new charter of liberty, a new Declaration of Independence, a new and splendid guaranty of the rights of man—we ask you for a referendum of this constitutional question, and we point out the way for that referendum under the Constitution of the United States, and you propose to sit here with your speeches in favor of referendum votes in the one hand and a denial of a referendum vote in the other. How are you going to justify it?

Let me tell you something you will have to reckon with, you gentlemen who are forcing this measure. You will have to reckon with that large class of women who do not want the vote at all, who have never asked for it, who do not want to be equal to men, because they have always held themselves to be superior to men. You have got to reckon with that large class of women who are not so vocal in their desires, who stay by the fireside and in the homes, and who are not taking orders from anybody; who are not repudiating old policies because they are told to do so. I venture the prediction that, whereas you may gain somewhat of the force of some who may advocate this cause, you may lose some on the other side.

Why not let the voters in the States have a vote on it? Texas has just voted. Why not let her have another vote? My State voted three years ago. I am willing to have a vote to-morrow; and if the people of the State of Missouri vote for woman suffrage, it is all right with me. So far as I am concerned, I do not think I would lift my voice about it. We ask for a referendum vote. I want to keep on repeating it to you referendum men who insist that the people have a right to a referendum vote on everything: What are you going to say when we ask for a mere referendum vote? Consistency is a rare jewel. I would like to see that jewel set firmly in the crown of glory and greatness that adorns the brows of some of my distinguished Democratic initiative and referendum friends.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator kindly yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. I will.

Mr. ASHURST. I merely wish to say that my view of the situation is that jewelry is vulgar.

Mr. REED. That depends entirely on who wears it and how it is worn. Of course, a diamond on a dirty shirt front does not look well, but I have seen diamonds so worn that they adorned the beauty, while beauty in turn graced them. So I think we might hang jewels all over the distinguished Senator and the jewels and he alike would be more resplendent.

How many States have the initiative and the referendum? Has Iowa a referendum vote? I thought progressive Iowa had all the new things. I know Montana has the referendum vote and Wyoming has the referendum vote and Texas has the referendum vote. It is impossible that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] should have overlooked the referendum. Missouri has a referendum vote, and every time the people have voted they have rejected what the legislature did that was submitted to them, that without the least variation or shadow of turning, and I think generally to the benefit of the State. I think California is progressive enough to have the referendum vote.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I will gladly yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I was about to interrupt the Senator a moment ago, Mr. President, to ask him if it is not true that Congress could provide for the calling of conventions in order to secure an expression from the people of the States. The Senator seemed to assume in his argument, in answer to the Senator from Montana, that it would be necessary for the legislatures to call the conventions.

Mr. REED. I did not so intend. I said it was the way it could be done. I did not mean to say that Congress could not provide it.

Mr. PHELAN. That would defeat your purpose if it was only possible for the legislature to call the convention?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; it would not defeat it.

Mr. PHELAN. You seem to have a poor opinion of the legislatures.

Mr. REED. I have not a very exalted opinion of them. There was a time when men like Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson sat in the assemblies of their States, but really and candidly I do not know of anybody of that caliber who is running for the legislature in any State just now.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator seems to have interrogated me on the question of the referendum. I want to assure him that I am in favor of the referendum and will probably support the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. California is the home of the referendum. We have perfect confidence in our people and we consult them; and in this amendment before the Senate I have no question of doubt as to the response which California will make, because it is already a suffrage State. I believe in the principle of the referendum and therefore shall support the amendment.

Mr. REED. I am delighted to find the Senator of that opinion.

Mr. PHELAN. May I be permitted to finish my statement?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. I wish it were incorporated in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama that Congress should provide for the calling of the conventions. I would not like to leave it to the legislatures, because you first have to secure the legislature before you can secure the convention.

Mr. REED. Would you think, if we may just converse a moment about it, that there would be any question of your legislature in California calling a convention?

Mr. PHELAN. The people instructed our legislature—that is to say, by referendum—against prohibition, and the legislature the other day voted for prohibition. There seems to be no communication between the several parties. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. So much the more reason then for submitting this question and any other question of importance to the people.

Mr. PHELAN. The people are always right.

Mr. REED. The people are not always right. Of course, they make mistakes, but the people have the right to say. I think we should agree on that, and if the people make a mistake they can correct it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Missouri seems to be rather severe on legislatures. Did not the legislature of Missouri once elect the Senator to the United States Senate?

Mr. REED. Is that the end of the question?

Mr. MYERS. No; I have another question. Do you think any better result would have been obtained if there had been a direct vote of the people?

Mr. REED. I will answer both questions. First, the legislature elected me to the Senate after the people had a primary that instructed them to elect me—a State-wide primary, where we had a general vote.

Mr. MYERS. A primary of your party only?

Mr. REED. Yes; a primary of my party held under the law under which every man running on the ticket that I was on would vote for me in the legislature and every Republican would vote for the Republican candidate. I got a majority of the votes of the State, and I likewise got a majority of the votes in the legislature.

The Senator asks me whether a better result could have been obtained if the people had had a direct vote. I can only answer that by saying that the people ratified and confirmed the action of the legislature by afterwards electing me by a direct vote. I do not know but both of them made a mistake. [Laughter.]

I do not claim infallibility for either of them. I do not claim the legislatures always are wrong. I would not be so understood. Many splendid and very patriotic men get into legislatures; very stupid men get into legislatures; many men who act from improper motives get into legislatures. The Senator, along with me, voted to take the right away from the legislatures to elect Members of the Senate. I believe he voted with me on it; I know if he did not he stood with me on it, for legislatures have been found wanting.

Now, I am delighted to find what the Senator from California says, and if I was understood as meaning that Congress could not provide the means, I was misunderstood. I directed myself to the question of the Senator from Montana, and I answered him in part merely and answered otherwise, and thank the Senator for his correction.

Mr. President, if we could get one or two more votes of men who believe in the initiative and referendum, we would be all right here to-day.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me for an interruption?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to point out to the Senator that, even should the Senate adopt the amendment, it would be of no utility. I think I can demonstrate that to him in a moment. I am not without sympathy for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, but there is no use to waste time in trying to do that which will not be done. Suppose the Senate should to-day adopt this amendment. It would go to conference, and under the present make-up of the committees of conference the conferees would recede in five minutes from the Senate's amendment, because both the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate are opposed to this amendment or to any other amendment. The Senator from Missouri knows that as well as I know it.

Mr. REED. Well, now the Senator——

Mr. ASHURST. Let me finish.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. What I say here is as well known as any fact can be to anybody, that both the committees are opposed to any amendment of any character whatever; that the conferees would recede in three minutes; the report would come back to this body; and the conference committee's report would not be rejected, but would be accepted. We would simply have lost a week's time; we would have been fooling ourselves and other people in attempting to do a vain and useless thing.

I repeat, I am not without sympathy for the amendment, but it is of no practical utility whatever to urge it now.

Mr. REED. Has the Senator from Arizona concluded?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. REED. Now, the Senator brings me some information which he says I know as well as he knows it—well, I did not know it. I did not know that the committee of either House of Congress would deliberately betray its instructions.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator pardon me there?

Mr. REED. Let me finish the statement, and then I will yield. Whenever the conferees go out from this body with their minds made up in advance that they will not endeavor to carry out the action of this body, they go out to betray the body——

Mr. ASHURST. Now, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. And I am not prepared to say that that is the situation.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is uniformly courteous, although at times he uses, as I myself do—I am a very frequent sinner in that regard—a word now and then that has a little sting to it. The conferees on the part of the Senate who would be appointed would not betray the Senate. Conferences are nearly a thousand years old; they go back to the days of the ancient Witenagemote. It has been the rule for centuries that when a matter is committed to conferees, when one house passes a bill in one form and the other house passes it in another form, the house that recedes does not betray.

Mr. REED. No; but the man who goes out intending not even to try to carry out the instructions he receives—the Senator has objected to my term, so I will not again use it—goes very far from fulfilling the obligations of his position. I will put it in that way.

Mr. ASHURST. That might be true; but I will ask the Senator if he does not believe that what I have related would be exactly the thing that would take place? If we put this amendment on, does not the Senator believe that that would take place?

Mr. REED. No; I am not prepared to think that, because I think it would be discreditable on the part of the Senate conferees to do a thing of that kind. I would think it very discourteous on the part of the House conferees not to give due and proper and serious consideration to any action of the coordinate legislative branch. To my mind, when the House of Representatives acts it speaks, so far as one branch of the legislature can, for the great American people, for no matter what may have been said, no matter how efforts may have been made to belittle it, it is the branch closest to the people, and it is the only way the great American people have to express their voice, except as they may now and always have had that right in this body.

Therefore, when the House of Representatives meets and, after due deliberation, passes upon a measure and sends it here, I think it is worthy of the most serious consideration, and in any conference I have ever sat upon—though they have not been numerous—I have felt that the representatives of the House of Representatives had the right to be heard, their opinions to be weighed, and I never found them unwilling to hear and to weigh the opinions of the Members of the Senate. Upon the other hand, when this body speaks in the name of the American people, so far as one branch of the legislature can so speak, and when, after debate of days, it adds an amendment of this kind to a measure, I believe, first, that our conferees, as loyal Members of the Senate, will endeavor to have it accepted. I do not see why a question so well grounded in justice as this would not receive the cordial consideration and mayhap the support of the other House. So I hope my friend will at least give us his vote; for, if he does give us his vote, and this matter is treated so summarily that it is disposed of in three minutes, there will be very little time lost, and he will at least have the satisfaction of saying to some of us that he gave the people of our States an opportunity to vote and the people of his own State an opportunity to vote.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in response to the interrogatory propounded by the Senator as to whether or not I would vote for the amendment, let me say that there is not a man in the Senate Chamber who feels more than do I the necessity for an amendment to the Federal Constitution to sweep away the present archaic, reactionary manner of ratifying and passing on referred amendments. Indeed, Mr. President, as I said the other day, under the present situation 431 men compose Congress; if they were of a mind to do so—they would not do so, I apprehend—but if they were of a mind to do so, they could pass a joint resolution providing for kingly government or for a government directed by the apostles of socialism. Then, 3,500 men composing the legislatures of the States could ratify the amendment. So, I repeat, as I said the other day, that under the present archaic reactionary method of submitting amendments to be passed upon by the legislatures, and not by the people of the States, 4,000 men constitutionally and legally could sweep away every vestige of liberty which the American people possess; and likewise these 4,000 could transform this Government into a Bolshevik government, into a soviet, into a kingly government. But the American people are not going to do that, for their particular virtue is the virtue of knowing how to govern themselves and other people.

I am in the near future going to urge with what poor capacity I have the proposed constitutional amendment which has been introduced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to provide that hereafter when constitutional amendments are submitted to the States they shall be ratified by the votes of the people of each State. The reason, however, why I shall not vote for this particular amendment at this particular time to be submitted to a convention is the following: No constitutional amendment, except the prohibition amendment, has been more widely discussed, more thoroughly understood, than has this amendment. All the American people who can read, all the American people who receive mail and receive dispatches of any kind, know that Congress is submitting this amendment. They know that the legislatures will be in session, and the people will not be taken unawares. They can petition their legislatures.

Then, again, Mr. President, I hardly think it would be fair to what I would call the cause of woman suffrage to make an exception in this instance, after having amended the Constitution eighteen times since 1789, and upon each occasion the amendment having been submitted to the State legislatures. The first 12 amendments were all submitted at one time, and two, I think, the first and second amendments which were submitted, are still pending. The eleventh amendment was submitted to the legislatures; the twelfth was submitted to the legislatures; the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth were submitted to the legislatures, and the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth were submitted to the legislatures.

I hope the Senator will pardon me when I say—and I want to say here that what he says on any question, whether I agree with him or not, carries with me great weight—I somewhat question the source from which the amendment comes. No man has a higher regard for the ability and the stalwart statesmanship of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] than have I, but I rather suspect—no; I can not use that word—I dread, rather, that this may defeat, delay, and hinder the celerity with which I would like to see this amendment adopted.

I think the Senator from Alabama is correct in his philosophy as to how amendments should be ratified, yet I do not wish to see this particular one singled out and have it ratified in this way. I trust, however, that we shall pass a joint resolution submitting an amendment to the Constitution providing that hereafter no amendment shall be ratified by a State except by the vote of the people.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Sentor from Missouri [Mr. REED] will allow me, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that the fathers some 128 years ago in writing this Constitution provided a method by which the voice of the people might be heard. I listened with deliberation and care to the proponents of this measure for many months favoring the opportunity of the American electorate to pass on this grave question. Of course, we all know that the constitutional provision directly gives the opportunity if Congress avails itself of it. I did not rush into offering this amendment, because I agree with the Senator that it would come stronger from the proponents of the measure, but when no one on that side, after advocating the submission of this question to the people, proposed the method, and the only constitutional method by which the voice of the people might really be heard, I felt that it was not rushing in; that with due modesty I might myself propose it.

Mr. ASHURST. I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], but I want to say again that for the statesmanship of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Alabama I have the highest regard. Indeed, so far from finding fault with their spirit of independence, I am inclined to overpraise it at times.

Now, another thing—and I hope I am not offensive when I say it—I am very certain that, even if we should attach this method, which provides for ratification by conventions instead of by the legislatures of the proposed constitutional amendment, neither the distinguished Senator from Missouri nor the able Senator from Alabama would vote for the joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but the Senator overlooks the fact that the position the Senator from Missouri and I occupy is not the proposition of favoring the establishment of the right of suffrage by the Federal Government and taking it away from the States, but the challenge has been repeatedly hurled on the floor of the Senate by the proponents of this measure that the people of the several States had a right to grant this privilege to the women of the country, and we have merely accepted the challenge which has been thrown at our feet. We challenge you to go to the hustings; we challenge you to submit this question to the people and not to the legislatures of the States.

If the Senator from Missouri will pardon me for occupying his time a moment longer, let us analyze the situation. The Senator from Arizona thinks that because some 17 or 18 amendments have been adopted by the legislatures of the States that forecloses the other method provided in the Constitution. Let us see as to that. Ten of the amendments constituted the Bill of Rights, which it was understood would be adopted in the beginning when the original instrument was agreed to. Three of the amendments grew out of the Civil War, settling a great contest between the people of the sections of this country. Necessarily there was no issue made as to the right of the people to vote on the adoption of those amendments. In the case of the first 10 amendments all of the States were for them, the people were for them; and in the case of the 3 amendments growing out of the Civil War the South was on its back and the North was determined to ratify them and put them in the Constitution.

As to some of the later amendments—for instance, the one changing the decision of the Supreme Court in reference to an income tax—almost every man on this floor, every man in the State legislatures, and the people themselves recognized that the power of the Federal Government in the beginning carried the right to levy an income tax, and that only by a divided court had that power been taken away from them.

As to the amendment providing for the election of Senators by the people there was no real opposition. Why delay the situation in that case when everybody was for it? But when you come to an amendment of this kind, the second direct attempt to invade the sovereign rights of the States and give their power to the Federal Government, it is not such a question as was involved in the original amendments; it is a question that involves the very fundamental principles of our Government, a question that the people of the United States and the people of the sovereign States alone have the right to pass upon; and I insist that, if the gentlemen who are proponents of this measure claim that this proposal should be submitted to the people in order to give them an opportunity to be heard and to pass upon it, then they can not deny the propriety and justice of adopting the only way by which the people of the sovereign States can reflect their direct will in the acceptance or rejection of this proposal.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona makes the argument that because we have in the past adopted constitutional amendments by votes of the legislatures, therefore we ought not to change the method of ratification in this instance; yet he stands here telling us that the method of ratification by legislatures is so bad that he proposes to support an amendment to the Constitution which permanently takes away from them the right of ratification of amendments to the Constitution and confer that power upon the people. When the Senator comes forward with his amendment he will be met with the antiquity argument just as completely then as he can now summon it to his aid, for the argument will then be made, "You are trying to change something that has existed all these years." If it be true that the State legislatures and Congress together might pervert the very form of our Government, if that danger is great enough so that the Senator is willing to support a constitutional amendment to change it; and if that method is, as he described it, archaic and unfair, then why not embrace the chance which is now afforded in the submission of the proposed pending constitutional amendment? Let us submit this proposed amendment in a fair way. Why submit it in an unfair and archaic way? Why not submit it in a fair and modern way? The argument goes too far, but it is adroitly made.

I know the Senator from Arizona is distressed. He does not like to deny the people of his State a right to vote on any question that concerns them. He is that kind of a Democrat. Give them a chance to vote on this matter. Give the people of my State a chance to vote on it. I am begging for that; I am asking it in the name of over three and one-half million people. If you are going to amend the Constitution and force that amendment upon the people of my State, at least give those people a chance to express their opinion. They are a great people—not greater than the people of other States, but as great. They represent the best there is in education, intelligence, patriotism, independence, and love of country. Let them have a chance to have a vote to select delegates to do the thing that you say ought to be reserved to the people always. Let us have that chance now, not to-morrow. If it is good and righteous and fair to change the Constitution so that the people of the States will always have the right—if that is a good thing to do to-morrow or next week, why not do that good thing to-day? Why not deal with the question that is before us?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is one of the ablest lawyers I have ever seen, and he is aware that there is running all through our law the well-known principle that the rule of procedure shall not be changed nor the statute of limitations shortened while the cause is pending.

Mr. REED. Ah; but the cause is not pending until the vote is taken here.

Mr. ASHURST. It has been pending, I think, if not technically at least practically for four years. One of the reasons why I would not at this time vote for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is that I think it would be a change of the remedy while the case is pending. It would be unusual; it would be analogous to shortening the period of the limitation right in the middle of a trial.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; when the trial is on and rights have been fixed under the law then existing, of course, you can not change it; but this is a question that has not yet arrived at a point that it can be said to be "a cause." When the Congress shall submit it to the people, then it may be said to be in that shape; and if after it had been submitted we were to undertake to change the method of submission, there might be something in the Senator's argument; but it is more specious than it is persuasive.

But, Mr. President, because the question has been discussed surely does not justify the Senator's position, for there is not a question that will be brought forward involving an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in the next 50 years that will not have been discussed in some form or other at some time by somebody. No; the Senator is without a reason; he has to go back on a referendum or else support the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. I hope he will support it; I am begging him to support it; I am asking it in the name of the people of a great State who will not be given any chance to express their opinion unless the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is adopted. If they are for it, they ought to be allowed to register their will; and if they are against it, no one ought to deny them the right to protest effectively.

There is another reason that I want to offer. I have often wanted to go to the Senator's State—I have heard so much about it—and I have been so pleased with the people of that State whom I have met; but I do not know anything about the Senator's State except as I hear about it and read about it. The Senator knows more about Arizona in a moment than I could learn by reading and studying for 5 years or 10 years, for he has lived there, and he is a part of the people of that State, and has the spirit of Arizona—the spirit that is born on the broad plains, the spirit that sweeps across Arizona's glorious face upon the wings of the morning. He knows Arizona, but he does not know my State, and I do not know his. I would not deny him the right to have the people of his State vote on a question involving their fundamental rights.

You ask me my position on this question. If we had the votes to pass an amendment to the Constitution providing that women could not vote in the State of Arizona, taking that question out of the hands of the people of the State of Arizona, or Montana, or Colorado, or Wyoming, I would not vote for such a proposition, no matter who told me to, because I would say, "It is for the people of those States to regulate their own affairs." But if such a proposition were brought forward—and it may be brought forward some day, for the tides run in and the tides run out, and opinions change with time—if it ever is offered and I am sitting here I pledge the Senator now that I will vote against it; and if an amendment is offered which reserves to the people of the Senator's State the right to vote and the Senator wants my vote in favor of that he will get it, because it would only be the fair thing to do.

There is not anything about this question that need lead us into doing things that are unfair and unjust. I repeat, so that my position never will be misunderstood, that if an amendment were offered here to-morrow that would deny the people of any of these States where suffrage exists the right to permit their women to vote I would fight it as hard as I am fighting this, because it is the State's business; and I have no right, as a citizen of Missouri, to interfere with the rights of the people of Wyoming or Arizona. Surely if the Representatives of those States asked that their people might vote I would give them that poor privilege, at least.

Mr. President, I beg pardon for speaking so long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Montana in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McLean	Smith, Md.
Ball	Hale	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harding	Moses	Smoot
Beckham	Harris	Myers	Spencer
Borah	Harrison	Nelson	Stanley
Brandegee	Henderson	New	Sterling
Calder	Hitchcock	Newberry	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Thomas
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Trammell
Cummins	Kellogg	Page	Underwood
Curtis	Kendrick	Phelan	Wadsworth
Dial	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Keyes	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Kirby	Poindexter	Warren

Fall	La Follette	Reed	Williams
Fernald	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wolcott
France	Lodge	Sherman
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Simmons
Gay	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore resumed the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the objection which has been made to the amendment by the proponents of woman suffrage is that it may delay the final adoption of the suffrage amendment. I plan to hasten consideration. The reason why a delay might be caused is that the House has passed the amendment in one form, and it would facilitate matters to have concurrence by the Senate; but, of course, the Senate is an independent body, and that is no reason which should be advanced to us.

Those of us who are in favor of national suffrage, and also in favor of the determination of all questions affecting the amendment of the Constitution by a vote of the people, desire to see that an opportunity shall be given to the people to vote; and to that end I have prepared an amendment to the amendment, with a view of facilitating the early determination by the people of their will upon this subject, so that there will be no needless delay.

I will read the amendment in order to comment upon it.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following article be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States.

The Constitution, as the Senate is aware, provides for ratification by three-fourths of the several States "by the legislatures or by conventions, as one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress." Therefore the Congress can propose, as the exclusive method of ratification, ratification by conventions; and I take it that the Congress can also propose the method by which these conventions may be called.

I would oppose leaving it to the legislatures for the very reason that the legislatures might, if unduly influenced, delay the ratification by delaying the calling of the conventions. So an amendment to the Underwood amendment might read as follows, which I will presently propose:

The conventions shall consist of 100 members, being qualified electors of the several States, and shall be voted for at large—

That brings the question fairly before all of the people of the States, not by congressional districts, but at large. It is the one issue before them.

Shall be elected at large by electors having qualifications to vote for members of the most numerous branch of the legislature. Such conventions shall be called to meet by the governors of the several States on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of September, 1919.

That is an arbitrary date, but it serves the purpose of speedily determining what is the will of the electors, and allows ample opportunity for the campaign of education.

I therefore submit that as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama. As the legislatures will not all meet for several years, this plan will, I believe, bring about an earlier ratification.

While I am on my feet, I happen to have here a very eloquent testimonial of the wisdom of submitting all matters to a vote of the people. I do not know that it is entirely relevant; but it is doubtless interesting, and especially to Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

In California, the referendum has been frequently used. California was among the very first States that resorted to the referendum, and, in most instances, it has expressed very fairly the will of the people. Sometimes, where the educational campaign has not been sufficiently extensive or intense, there may be a doubt as to the fair expression of the people. Anyhow, it is the expression of the men who participate in these elections, and the women, because both the men and the women vote in California. Therefore it is fair to say that the expression of opinion by the voters, with or without an educational campaign, is exactly what the voters want; and, as the Senator from Missouri said, if the people make a mistake, it is very easy to remedy it by an appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober.

What I have in mind is that on May 17 of this year a Member of this body holding a high and distinguished position undertook to instruct the people of my State in the political subdivision—and a very important one—of Los Angeles city as to how to vote. Of course, we resented it as an intrusion, because the occasion to which I refer was a municipal election; and all our chartered cities sacredly hold to the right to determine their local affairs by and for themselves. I will read the instruction which was sent out to the city of Los Angeles. I quote from the Los Angeles Times of May 18, 1919, a stand-pat Republican paper of general circulation. It is headed:

SENATORS FOR WOODMAN—REPUBLICAN NATIONAL ORGANIZATION IN THE FIGHT TO SAVE LOS ANGELES.

Dr. A. J. Scott, of Mayor Woodman's campaign committee, yesterday received the following telegram from United States Senator REED SMOOT:

WASHINGTON, May 17.

Dr. A. J. SCOTT,
Los Angeles:

Senator LODGE joins me in the hope that every Republican will support the Republican candidate for mayor in the coming city election. Don't let this administration point to Los Angeles as a Democratic city a year hence, when the national campaign is on. The Nation is Republican. We hope Los Angeles will be.

REED SMOOT.

I received just now, from the secretary of the Democratic county committee, this telegram:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., June 4, 1919.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

M. P. Snyder elected mayor of Los Angeles. All papers concede his election by 15,000 majority. Snyder now leading by 10,000. City clerk estimates total vote cast 75,000.

F. RAY GROVES,
Secretary Democratic County Committee.

I merely introduce that now to show that California is strong for the referendum, and that her judgment is generally right.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Who was elected?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. M. P. Snyder, mentioned in the telegram, is a Democrat, and has served that city before, conspicuously and well, as its mayor. Mr. Woodman is a Republican. Los Angeles is normally Republican.

I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I merely wanted to ask what the response of the city was; and in view of that I wanted to ask the politics of the successful candidate.

Mr. PHELAN. I have already anticipated that question.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator before he takes his seat will offer a resolution extending our thanks to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] for his services in behalf of the Democratic Party in Los Angeles.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama the following:

The conventions shall consist of 100 members, being qualified electors of the several States, and shall be elected at large by electors having qualifications to vote for members of the most numerous branch of the legislature. Such conventions shall be called to meet by the governors of the several States on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of September, 1919.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment submitted by myself.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SWANSON (when Mr. MARTIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is absent from the Senate on account of illness.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bankhead	Gay	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Borah	Harrison	Overman	Swanson
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Phelan	Underwood
Dial	King	Reed	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Knox	Simmons	Williams
Fletcher	Lodge	Smith, Md.	Wolcott

NAYS—55.

Ashurst	Gronna	McCormick	Sheppard
Ball	Hale	McKellar	Sherman
Calder	Harding	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Capper	Henderson	Myers	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Spencer
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sterling
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Norris	Thomas
Edge	Kendrick	Nugent	Trammell
Elkins	Kenyon	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Fall	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Kirby	Pittman	Warren
France	La Follette	Poindexter	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Ransdell

NOT VOTING—13.

Brandegee	McCumber	Pomerene	Townsend
Colt	Martin	Robinson
Gerry	Owen	Shields
Gore	Penrose	Smith, Ga.

So Mr. UNDERWOOD's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, in February last, when the vote was taken on the woman suffrage question, I explained my position briefly at that time. My position to-day, Mr. President, is the same as it was then. There is no doubt in my mind that women should be given the right to vote. There is doubt, however, that they will ever receive the privilege they are now asking by the methods which some of their supposed friends have adopted. It is a well-known fact that they have finally secured the necessary two-thirds vote of the Senate of the United States to pass the Susan B. Anthony amendment and to submit that amendment to the legislatures of the various States of the Union. The advocates of the Susan B. Anthony amendment have won a great victory and are justly entitled to all the praise and honor which comes with the winning of a battle which has been fought for so long a time. It is not my intention to attempt to delay this legislation, but I do desire to present here and now an amendment which I believe would be ratified by the necessary 36 States at the next meeting of their legislatures. I present this as a substitute for the amendment which is now before you. The amendment which I am about to present was drafted by the former first assistant attorney general of Louisiana and by the Democratic national committeemen from that State when this matter was under discussion during the last session of Congress. It meets the objection that many have to the Susan B. Anthony amendment and is more liberal perhaps than the amendment which I have already presented for your consideration.

Section 2 reads that the several States shall have the authority to enforce this article by necessary legislation, but if any State shall enforce or enact any law in conflict therewith, then Congress shall not be excluded from enacting appropriate legislation to enforce it.

This, Mr. President, gives to the various States the right to enact and enforce laws giving women the right to vote. It does not leave all questions to Congress, but puts the matter where those who believe in State rights consider the power should be vested.

Mr. President, it only requires 13 States to prevent the adoption of the Susan B. Anthony amendment, and I predict that there are 13 States that will never ratify the amendment which the Congress of the United States is about to present to the American people. The last vote in the State of Texas shows full well how the wind is blowing.

With the passage of the amendment which I am now presenting to you as a substitute for the other amendments which have been offered, the objection would be removed and the required number of States would soon pass it and thus give the right of suffrage to those noble, patriotic, and splendid women of our country who have so long fought for this right and who so richly deserve the privilege.

I offer the amendment which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is in the nature of a substitute:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. That the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

SEC. 2. That the several States shall have the authority to enforce this article by necessary legislation, but if any State shall enforce or enact any laws in conflict therewith, then Congress shall not be excluded from enacting appropriate legislation to enforce it.

Mr. GAY. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. REED. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made upon the last vote concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is detained from the Senate by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 62, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bankhead	Harris	Ransdell	Thomas
Beckham	Harrison	Reed	Trammell
Dial	King	Simmons	Underwood
Fletcher	Myers	Stanley	Wolcott
Gay	Overman	Swanson

NAYS—62.

Ashurst	Gronna	McCormick	Sheppard
Ball	Hale	McCumber	Sherman
Brandegee	Harding	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Henderson	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	McNary	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Spencer
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sterling
Cummins	Kellogg	New	Sutherland
Curtis	Kendrick	Newberry	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Kenyon	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Keyes	Nugent	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Kirby	Page	Warren
Fall	Knox	Phelan	Watson
Fernald	La Follette	Phipps	Williams
France	Lenroot	Pittman
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Poindexter

NOT VOTING—15.

Borah	Hitchcock	Penrose	Smith, Ga.
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Smith, Md.
Gerry	Martin	Robinson	Townsend
Gore	Owen	Shields

So Mr. GAY's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment, the question is, Shall the joint resolution be read a third time?

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the joint resolution pass? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BALL (when his name was called). By a special agreement, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and I are paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. The senior Senator from Tennessee is absent on account of illness in his family. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER (when his name was called). On this question the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is paired with me in the affirmative against the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] in the negative. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote in the affirmative, but owing to the pair I withhold my vote.
